AN INSULT TO AMERICA.

ENGLAND SOLID FOR DEMOCRACY AND FREE TRADE.

The British Minister Gives the Conspiracy Away—A Letter Which Establishes the Connection Between the Democrats and the British Free Traders.

THE BRITISH MINISTER TO AN AMERICAN CITIZEN.
(Private.)

Beverly, Mass., Sept. 13, 1888.

Sir—I am in receipt of your letter of the 4th inst., and beg to say that I fully appreciate the difficulty in which you find yourself in casting your vote. You are probably aware that a political party which openly favored the mother country at the present moment would lose popularity, and that the party in power is fully aware of it. We, as a party, therefore, I believe, still desires of maintaining friendly relations with Great Britain, and is still as desirous of settling all questions with Canada, which have been unfortunately reopened since the rejection of the treaty by the Republican majority in the senate, as the president's message, to which you allude. All allowances must, therefore, be made for the political situation as regards the presidential election thus created. It is, however, impossible to predict the course which President Cleveland may pursue in the matter of retaliation, should he be elected; but there is every reason to believe that, while upholding the position he has taken, he will manifest a spirit of conciliation in dealing with the question involved in his message. I enclose an article from "The New York Times" of Aug. 22, and remain,

Yours faithfully,
L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

Gen. Grant's Reason.

A Boston gentleman has the following lines in his copy of Gen. U. S. Grant's written and signed by him in 1880. The reason therein cited for being a Republican is as pertinent today as eight years ago:

"There is not a precinct in this vast nation where a Democrat cannot cast his ballot and have it counted as cast, no matter what the predominance of the opposite party. He can proclaim his political opinions, even if he is one among thousands, without fear and without proscription on account of his opinions. There are fourteen states, and probably more in some others, where Republicans have not this privilege. This is one reason why I am a Republican.

U. S. GRANT."

One Lives North, t'Other South.

[From The New York Sun.]

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: If Mills & Co. are so anxious to help us poor people, why do they not free sugar and rice from duty as well as salt? I pulled a sugar axe used to ounces of salt. Sugar, $30 per barrel; salt, $6. Sugar, 70 per cent. tax; salt free!

THE BOY FIRE-BUG.

Willie Van Nest's Trial Again Postponed.

Court opened at Elizabeth yesterday morning with Judges McCormick and Hyer on the bench.

The case of the State against thirteen-year-old Wm. Van Nest, of Plainfield, charged with the setting fire to the barn of Henry C. Drake's laundry, was called. Prosecutor Wilbert informed the court that as far as he was concerned, he was not ready to go on as his witnesses were present, but the counsel of Van Nest was unavoidably absent and he would therefore move that the trial be laid over until later in the term. The court set the trial down for Monday, November 12th, at which time the witnesses were ordered to be present.

There are several other cases called, but as the counsel on both sides were not prepared they were laid over, and the jurors were passed from further attendance until Monday, November 12th, at 10 a. m.

THE FINAL FLICKER.

THE DEMOCRATIC TORCHLIGHT PARADE.

Visitors From Trenton, Bound Brook, Elizabeth, and Elsewhere, and Everybody Happy at the Wind Up.—Gates Disappear.

The agony is over, the last gasp has been gulped, our friend the enemy has been among us, and still we survive. The Free Traders did the procession act last evening, getting started after two hours' weary effort, about ten o'clock, and all agree that it was the finest procession ever seen in Plainfield—of its kind. Of course some people don't think much of the kind, but then you can't suit everybody.

The Republicans, for instance, don't take any stock in that kind—Free Trade—but feel that this country's institutions are good enough for us. Hence it is quite natural, since these patriots who won't get down on their marrow bones to John Bull and give up our Protective system, would be a little prejudiced, and not think much of the kind who could shake their hats to the tune of England's.

There was considerable interest to know how many Free Traders could be scared up in New Jersey for the final spasm of the campaign, so several worthy citizens got on the corner of Front street and Park avenue to count them. The result showed that outside of the bands, and the small boys in pantalettes, there were just 931, against 1,269 in the Republican parade a few nights before, from which it may be concluded that New Jersey is safe for the tribes of Benjamin and Levi, when the Bible tells us will go up and possess the land.

At the head of the procession was the gallant Flower, whose only failing is that he will persist in being on the wrong side of the fence, looking forlorn in his loneliness when almost all his comrades, none more gallant, are where all loyal soldiers should be, marching to the glorious Gen. Harrison—he who was bravely fighting for the Union when old Grover was playing seven up and drinking rum at Buffalo, having a substitute to do his fighting for him, and even cheating the substitute out of half the sum he agreed to pay him for the service, and leaving the poor fellow to linger in a poorhouse where he is still. We can only expose our comrade on the theory that his early education was neglected or that he has become color-blind from too diligent use of the colors in which he is so deservedly distinguished.

Next after Le Marechal Flower came a fellow wearing a red coat and cap among other things, the uniform of an English soldier, which seemed very appropriate for a party so devoted to England that they even had the British minister at Washington electioneer for Cleveland by that famous letter. The indignation of the American people has at last compelled old Grover reluctantly to give the impudent Sackville a vacation.

Then came a locomotive headlight on a drygoods box, suggesting, though as one looked on those following with torches how many of them would be allowing themselves duped as they are by political demagogues, or be so blinded by foolish partisan prejudice had they headlight enough to calmly reason for themselves, that a change in some of the plans, made prosperous and happy by the Republican system of Protection to home industries.

Following the headlight were seventy-five men and boys, the latter predominating, on horse, led by the rankest of Democrats, because he didn't know of a worse one else, though the most robust and best looking of men, riding the most beautiful of the horses, a cream, with white mane and tail.

The remainder of the procession was made of all manner of sucha as they were, except the Pendleton Club and a few others who were clean-looking enough to be easily mistaken in other surroundings for Republicans, and it is a pity for them they aint.

There was just one colored man in the crowd.

There was also a stage load of twenty or so Jacksonian Democrats, all old men. Andrew Jackson thoroughly believed in Protection, and was strongly inclined to hang John C. Calhoun, the Democratic Free Trade leader. Yet these old gentlemen expect to vote for Jackson's principles to insult the memory of their patron saint, Old Hickory.

An incident occurred on North avenue, as the stage was being filled up with the old gentlemen which rather marred the happiness of the occasion. Old Aaron Allen, of North Plainfield, who had been invited was crowded out. In his indignation he took off his Cleveland badge, threw it into the street, and stamped on it, and expressed himself in old Andy Jackson style, something like this:

"Take your —— old badge. What in —— do you take me for, to invite me out for a stage ride and then crowd me out, you ——— coffish aristocrats. I am just as good as you are, if I am poor. To —— with you and your —— old party. Harrison's good enough for me.

Efforts were made to mollify the old gentleman, but his dander was up, and he could not be persuaded to get into the stage, though she kindly old gentlemin, Jasper Cadmus, got out to make room for him. There were plenty of Harrison men on the street who witnessed the affair and quickly caught on. They shouted, "What's the matter with Uncle Aaron?" and answered, "He's all right."

The saloons were all decorated, and filu minated by red lights outside and red noses inside, and there were a few other decorations about town during the line of march as published yesterday.

The visitors were supplied by the Plainfield Democrats with sandwiches and coffee and some of the "rale old stuff," but they were all happy, and about two o'clock this morning they cheered each other lustily at the depot, as they parted, one part going off on the trains, and the other part going home to sleep off the effects of the nights' delusion, and wake to the stern reality that dear old Bell, and Protection are quietly getting there all the same, and everywhere with both feet, and that every vote Democrats has long ago arranged to get in out of the storm by voting for him. The Democrats, however, need not be ashamed of their parade, even if it was their dying spasm.

But the verdict is—the country's safe, and we soon will,

(Sing to the tune of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again".)

When Grover comes skulking home again,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
When Grover comes skulking home again,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
The girls will laugh, the men will shout,
As we turn the Free Trade rascals out,
For Harrison and Protection
As Grover comes skulking home

We've loyal hearts to our kindred true
Hurrah! Hurrah!
We'll protect our home-industries too
Hurrah! Hurrah!
From Europe's pauper labor hosts
In spite of England's Free Trade toasts,
And its hireling, the Democracy,
And Cleveland skulking home

We've made a gallant fight, good friends,
We've knocked you left and right, good friends,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
And now we've got our arm on the run,
We are bound to have a little fun,
And all say the Lord is praised
That Grover's skulking home.

We of course don't believe that the Democrats stole all the gates in town last night; but this morning there are a great many missing, just the same.

Figuring on the Parade.

The responses on the street this morning to the question "How many were there in last night's Democratic parade?" were widely different from each other.

Mr. J. Barton Kline, assistant ticket agent at the North avenue railroad station, said that the number who came by special train was 1,032, and he held that 1,600 paraded. He added, however, that perhaps some of the visitors didn't join in the march.

Mr. Wm. A. Coddington estimated that there were over 2,000 in line. Of these 908 were Plainfielders.

Gen. Sterling gave as an unexaggerated count 1,200, of which 500 were local men.

"As far as I counted"—said Andrew J. Kenney—"there were 1 500; but as I cannot lie I must confess that I didn't count 'em."

Andrew's brother John, the shoe man, wasn't in; but his clerk, Mr. Michael Whelan, kept up the reputation of his party by asserting that 1,800 paraded, a statement which Mr. Andrew Nolan stoutly endorsed.

Fire Chief T. O. Doane said that 1,700 was the proper figure, even if First Assistant Eugene Lane called it nearer over 1,400.

Mr. J. Fred MacDonald was authority for *1,137—the result of a conscientious computa*tion.

"Put it in your paper that I say there were between 400 and 500"—shouted policeman Patrick Lynch across the street. "Chief Cox's wrong in saying there were 927."

"There were 1,000"—affirmed policeman Patrick Flanagan.

"Are you a Democrat or Republican?" was queried.

"I'm a Prohibitionist"—was the response.

Two Democrats and one Republican in a group counted on Park avenue. The Republican counted 989; the Democrats over 90 less.

Romancing.

To show what reliance can be placed on The New York World as a newspaper it is only necessary to note the following account of the Democratic parade. Remember there were but 931 by actual count, as stated in our report. The World says:

"The political parade ever seen in Plainfield was held by the Democrats last night. Over twenty-five thousand men were in line, and prominent features of the procession was a stage load of Jackson Democrats who cast their first ballot in 1828."

If The World's other stories are of the same degree of truth, it is evident the Free Traders are not quite so numerous as they would have us believe.

Mr. Robert Manning insists that The World is mistaken and that 35,000 is the proper numeral.

—Last night was Hallowe'en, and many young people and some older ones celebrated the occasion appropriately with frolic and fun. One of the plea-antries indulged in are described and illustrated on the fourth page of to-day's News.

IRISH VOTERS' DUTY.

AN AMERICAN PRIEST'S OPINION OF THE DEMOCRACY.

Forcible Utterances to His Fellow-Countrymen. Whom He Urges to Vote for Harrison and Protection.

Easton, Saturday, Oct. 23d, 1888.

To the Editor of The Free Press:—I have to apologize to my readers, and to my fellow-countrymen, for entering the political arena. But I cannot disguise the truth. I owe a duty to my fellow man which I feel compelled to discharge. In a word, circumstances oblige me to write. Although, I must confess, I am going to enter the slippery region of politics, I am warranted in believing that my fellow priests and my fellow countrymen will give me a hearing.

In the natural order of things I should be a Democrat. To deny it would be to deny my nationality. There is no use trying to conceal the fact that the Irish worship at the Democratic shrine. The Irish are Democrats because their fathers before them were. If there is anything to remain in the Democratic ranks for no stronger reason than that they were once there, I fail to see what it is, they certainly lack intelligence. And if they remain Democrats, although they are persuaded that the Republican party would benefit them more, I would charge them with moral cowardice.

Of course, it must be admitted by everyone conver-ant with the history of the two great parties that the Irish received many favors from the Democratic faction for which I, as an Irishman, feel deeply grateful. If the Irish in Jersey vote the Democratic ticket this year doubtless a few of the hard knocks will be honored with a smile and a "shake hand" by some official from the Democratic camp. Irishmen of America, and especially Irishmen of Jersey, what think you of such an honor? Can you forget the history of your glorious race and your grand nation? Will you whine and whimper before these deceptive magic-lantern articles, who will not recognize you after election day? Will you allow yourselves to be made the tools of those who, for glory and for greed, place you on a level with the pauper labor of Europe? Cleveland who, as the learned Dana has proved, is but a school boy plagiarist, has sounded the death-knell of American industries. Irishman, will you have a hand in this sellout, unpatriotic act? Will you assist by its silence while you see Cleveland sell his country to English manufacturers? Such once more have the thrice-accursed English flag wave in triumph over you as slaves, outcasts, paupers! Will you vote for him who is trying to destroy that Prot ctive system that has made America what she is to-day, the grandest and most glorious country in the world? Will you vote against the Protective policy—a policy approved by the immortal Washington, the father of his country, and adopted by the noble Jefferson, the father of the Constitution? I say you will not, if you are a citizen who has the w Hare of your adopted country at heart, and if you wish to maintain your dignity and self-respect.

Here the eloquent priest gives at length the reason for the faith that is in him, and shows in detail the fallacy of the Mills bill. We regret that our space will not permit us to give his remarks in full Continuing, the reverend gentleman says:

Irishmen, read the history of your adopted country. In years gone by the Irish came to this land and cast their fortunes with the Democratic party—the party that upheld slavery. You remember when the Republican party came into power, in 1860, that the Democratic party, finding it had a demand wanted Free Trade, and consequently the separation of North and South. The result is well known. The South, being overpowered by Englishmen, set about to destroy our commerce, that Free Trade might result:

THE KNOW NOTHING PARTY.

"This is all very well," I may say, "but the Republican party is the Know Nothing party." Let us examine this infamous lie. In the memorable year of 1856 the party was defeated in New York, although the State went Democratic at that very time. Mayor Wood got 18,000 votes more than the regular Democratic vote in the city of New York. Both were Irish, and both lost the Know Nothing vote. Can you deny a historic fact? In the very strongholds of Democracy, in the South, the Irish were never worried and fa vors or honor. It was in the South that the Irish saw their priests mobbed and their churches burned. New Orleans, Louisville and Baltimore are Democratic cities, and these are the cities that insulted Irish Catholics when the spirit of Know Nothingism was rampant. In 1856 the total vote of the Southern States was 1,053,921: the Know Nothing vote was 479,596, and the Republican was 1,341,264. In 1860 the Know Nothing vote was 515,415, and the Republican vote was 26,430; and the only State to cast its electoral vote for Fillmore, the Know Nothing candidate for the Presidency, was the Democratic State of Maryland. These are hard facts. In the same year, 1856, in the North the total vote was 2,500,331, the Know Nothing vote was 1,340,070, and there were only 394,642 Know Nothing votes. In 1860 the North could only muster 75,000 Know Nothing votes, and in the same year the Democratic party increased their vote by 250,000 from the Know Nothings of 1856. A very short time ago the Know Nothing spirit of the Democrats was made manifest in the State of New Jersey. A gentlemen named O'Hara ran for Sheriff of Warren county; but was not elected, because he was guilty of the unpardonable crime of having Irish blood course through his veins. Note well that the Democratic majority in Warren county is 2,000. Gentlemen, knowing this, if you remain Democrats I pity you, but I can hardly pardon you. Now, in which camp are the Irish Nothings? A few weeks ago a bill was passed giving a pension to Chamberlain, who, though opposed to, a rampant Democrat, Kilgore, of Texas, who can easily see that the Democrats are not all angels of light, but rather angels of—well, of a different color.

Now, Irishmen and sons of Irishmen, consider the ticket. Vote for it on November 6th, 1888. Prove to the enlightened and high-minded American that you are not the property of the Democratic party, and then you will command the respect and homage of every citizen of this glorious and prosperous republic. You have proved your love for your adopted country on many a bloody battle field, age at Lexington and Concord, at Bull Run and the Wilderness, at Donne's Hill and Malvern Hill, at Antietam and Fredericksburg. Your praises are yet sung by the banks of the Mississippi and the Golden Gate. Where the valleys of this land have drank your rich Irish blood. Every hill and dale of this vast country is hallowed with your war cry. You carried the star spangled banner gloriously and triumphantly over the bloodsoaked plains of North and South. The battles you fought and won attest your glory and renown!

CONCLUSION.

These thoughts fill my heart with joy. But with tears in my eyes and sorrow in my heart I behold you at the ballot box. There we are to-day, and there we will be to-morrow, in the dishonored pens of honored slaves. There we gain nothing and lose much. There we are your friends, and there we are the tools of a well paid politician. Can we not divest ourselves of prejudice and ting aside false opinions?

If there were not men in the world who clung to their opinions the cause of peace would be lost. Blow them to the world that you are Americans, that you are opposed to slavery, and your American brother will receive you, will respect you, will revere you. There no longer will you be numbered among the slaves of Democratic hirelings, and the eyeglasses of the office seekers. Then you will show yourselves the worthy sons of illustrious ancestors whose blessings you will obtain. Irishmen, fear not to vote the ticket that will insure you homes of happiness and contentment—vote the ticket—the Republican ticket—that will insure protection to American industries, Protection to your property, Protection to your homes, and the prevent and future generations will bless you.

An American Priest.

Thurman and Catholic Priests.

[From The New York Tribune.]

Washington, Nov. 1. (Special).—The following is a copy of an editorial paragraph in "The Morning Republican," of Findlay, Ohio, dated October 25th, 1888:

The following is commended to Findlay Catholics:

"Two Irish priests have overdone the thing by sticking their noses into our politics and deserve to be beaten, to teach them their places. Their arrogance is sufferable, and as we shall be defeated anyway, I hope it will forcefully teach these meddlesome priests a lesson that they will understand.

ALLEN G. THURMAN.

To Theodore Cook, at Put-in-Bay Island, Aug. 16th, 1875".

Now We're Warming Up.

Only a few days more of the great battle, so we will now give the Free Traders hot shot until the wind-up. And then, when we have won the victory, as we certainly will, we will say, "Let us have peace."

Her Quarrel Cost $158.

Miss Mary Ann Stone, recently convicted of assault and battery on Mrs. Rachel E. Toed, of Dunellen, was sentenced at New Brunswick this morning to pay $50 fine and $108 12 costs.

PERSONALS.

Miss Mattie J. Powlisson, of Dakota, is visiting her cousin, Miss Mattie A. Powlison, of Grand avenue.

A feature of the fifty-ninth annual convention of the New Jersey State Baptist Association now being held at Middletown is an address by the Rev. Dr. David J. Yerkes, of Plainfield's First Baptist church.

A Hallowe'en party was held at the residence of Miss Mamie Murphy, near the Pond Tree Works, last evening. About twenty-five young people were present, including guests from New York and Brooklyn. The evening was spent very enjoyable.

We have received a second extended communication from Mr. E. P. Williams, of Seventh street, advocating the establishing of horse cars, and charging Common Council with opposing the will of the people in obstructing efforts to have street railways established. This is the substance of it.

Mrs. Anson E. Mulholland, of New York State, has recently purchased a tract of land on Rockview avenue, and has contracted with Mr. James Hanly for the erection of three fine residences, to be ready for occupancy early next Spring. She, after visiting various places near New York city before deciding, found Plainfield far superior as a place for investment in real estate, and at once decided on our beautiful city in preference to all others.

H. K. Carroll, LL. D., of North Plainfield, editor of The Independent, took part in a debate in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Tuesday evening, with Rev. Dr. Talmage, who response to a challenge from Prof. Samuel Dickie, Chairman of the National Committee on the question. "Ought Temperance men vote the Republican or Prohibition ticket?" It is reported in full in The Independent and is well worth reading, as everything from the distinguished writer's pen.

*Hr. F. X. Schoonmaker, of Putnam ave*nue, will speak at Candor, N. Y., to-night and Wellsburg, N. Y., to-morrow night and will then close his eleventh week of stumping, having addressed sixty-eight meetings. In Waverly, N. Y., people came from distances of thirty miles to hear him. When he spoke at Delhi, the capital of Delaware county, N. Y., there were farmers present who had driven over from Walton, a long way off, and others who had driven from Margaretville, twenty eight miles distant. Mr. Schoonmaker addressed a meeting at Margaretville, Delaware county, three weeks ago, and so many of his auditors were from far-away points that he thought it best to hold his next where he stopped had that night to board seventy-odd horses belonging to farmers who had driven so far to hear him speak that the couldn't get home until next day. In the former and the extraordinary number of one hundred and twenty-two in the latter. This year the National Committee allotted Indiana two weeks, and Mr. Schoonmaker's time; New Jersey two, Connecticut three and New York four; but the New York Committee treated him so shabbily that in the case there to one and in this way obtained all his time with the exception of one week, which Connecticut will not give us. Why can't we have have him.

Scotch Plains Paragraphs.

The Rev. Mr. Fullaway, of Philadelphia, occupied the pulpit of the Baptist church last Sunday evening.

Mr. Norman Dunn, the Town Clerk, is about to begin his winter residence in Netherwood.

Mr. Louis Brown has taken up his residence in Plainfield, where he holds a position with the Scott Printing Press Company. He has the good wishes of all.

—The makers declare that an old bachelor says: "I have watched my sweetheart fade away with my salary and other men's affection, but I found solace in today soap."

—Six counties will elect Senators at the coming election, viz: Burlington, Hunterdon, Cape May, Middlesex, Passaic and Sussex. Four of these counties are now represented by Republicans and two by Democrats. To maintain the balance of power in the Senate the Republicans will have to elect three of these Senators, and the Democrats to get a majority in that body, will have to elect four.

VIEWS OF POLITICIANS.

Probable Effect of West's Letter and His Dismissal.

BOTH SIDES EXPECT TO BENEFIT.

Futile Attempts of Reporters to Get Secretary Bayard's Letter to Lord Sackville. Curiosity as to His Future Movements. What the Politicians Have to Say.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—Secretary Bayard was busily engaged at the state department and declined to be interviewed any further relative to the Sackville affair.

He positively refuses to give out the letter sent to the British minister.

At the state department matters seem to be running along smoothly and without any excitement, and the incident has apparently ended, for the present at least. Nothing has yet been heard relative to Minister Phelps regarding the attitude or view that the British government may take of the affair, and Lord Sackville again positively but courteously refused to be interviewed or to make public a copy of the letter received from Secretary Bayard.

There was naturally much speculation as to the probable course of Lord Sackville, the British minister, in the present embarrassing state of affairs. It was thought the move most agreeable to him would be immediate departure from Washington, but a gentleman in a position to know said yesterday afternoon that he thought Lord Sackville would be in any hurry to leave here. He said: "I have not seen the minister myself, but a friend of mine who talked with him says he told that he did not contemplate an immediate departure. I don't think it at all probable Lord Sackville will leave here before election."

The etiquette of diplomacy prevents Lord Sackville from furnishing a copy of Secretary Bayard's letter for publication. If permission is granted by the British foreign office it is understood Lord Sackville is in quite waiting, personally, to hand the press the text of the communication.

A reporter of the United Press saw Lord Sackville at the legation. He said that at the present time nothing could be said. He would not say even that anything would be said.

It is safe to predict, however, that just as soon as the elaborate cablegrams which have been sent to Salisbury are responded to Lord Sackville will make a statement for publication, so that he may clear himself from what he thinks are aspersions cast upon him by Secretary Bayard in his communication to the premier.

The atmosphere of the legation suggests retirement and a strong desire to say something to disperse the gloomy fog under which it rests.

Mr. Belmont, chairman of the house committee on foreign affairs, who was in Washington, was asked his views on the Sackville incident. He thought Secretary Bayard's statement to the president left little more to be said. He added: "I presume the only trust this will be the last time that our relations with other governments will be made issues in a political canvass. No political party ought to be blind to the injury which may thus result to the position of the United States abroad. The interests of the United States are larger and more important than those of any party."

Representative Woodburn, of Nevada, whose attack on the administration as being in sympathy with England was quite the most savage made in the long tariff debate, said, in referring to the Sackville trouble: "Lord Salisbury merely viewed the sentiments of the British government and the people. He had no insult to do so, and has been punished for it, but that does not affect the fact that he did insult Mr. Cleveland's reelection. I do not see why Minister Wes's letter should have caused any surprise except at his having so indiscreet as to write it."

The Star says: "The action of the president in summarily ridding Lord Sackville (but he would no longer be recognized as the English minister) here is a source of hearty satisfaction among democrats. The president's party friends maintain that he has turned his dilatory but general political account, and that his notice of the British minister makes sure the support of the Irish-Americans."

Pro and Con in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—A large Republican mass meeting was held at Wall and Broad streets, and was addressed from the steps of the sub-treasury by Hon. William M. Evarts, who presided. Among the speakers were Dr. MacArthur, Elliot F. Shepard and others. Gen. W. H. Seward sent a telegram of regret. It was read by Mr. Evarts and said that the president's action in the Sackville matter could not affect the effect of the minister's expression of belief made in the letter to Secretary Bayard, referred to by Hon. Thomas F. Bayard on the extradition treaty, and that Minister Sackville had said nothing contrary to it with evading the senate to insert the exact wording of the extradition clause of political offenders.

The business men's conference committee of 1,000 had also called a Republican club meeting, and addressed remarks at that the clubs, "voicing the sentiments of 50,000 merchants and business men in this city, enthusiastically commend the patriotic and courageous action of the president."

Comments of the London Press.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The Daily News says: "Lord Sackville may congratulate himself upon having involved his country in the most serious misunderstanding with the United States since the settlement of the Alabama claims question." The paper just cited Prime Minister Gladstone's action in the Phelps matter and says, but regrets Secretary Bayard's lack of courtesy toward Lord Sackville. The Standard says: "America has done its very utmost within British sanction would hesitate, but for grave cause, to do to the smallest state in the world." The Post says: "Hundreds of letters addressed to the one written by him might have been written by an American minister in England and no one would have taken the slightest notice." The Chronicle says: "Political considerations compelled the American authorities to take notice of Lord Sackville's letter."

Sackville Has Leave of Absence.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The Press association announces that Lord Sackville comes to England under leave of absence, and declares that he has important business to attend to in connection with the Sackville estates, and that he will not return to Washington.

Professor Barnard Finds Another Comet.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 1.—Professor Lewis Swift, of the Warner observatory, has received a telegram announcing the discovery there by Professor Barnard of a comet in right ascension 0 hours, 6 mins., 32 sec.; declination south 15 degs., 17 mins. It has a faint, short tail, and is visible through a five inch telescope. It has a slow northerly motion. This is the second comet discovered by Professor Barnard within two months, and will entitle him to still another gold medal under the act of 1883.

DEFYING THE GOVERNMENT.

The Canadian Pacific Still Resists the Northern Crossing.

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 1.—There are practically no new developments in the railway situation. The Canadian Pacific people do not rely upon their injunction, but keep a large force of men on guard at all points where the Northern Pacific tracks approach theirs. The Northern Pacific and the local government are making no effort to cross the Canadian Pacific at Lake des Bosque, from which the injunction debars them, but they have a scow track a short distance south, to a point at which a railway of their own, the Canadian Pacific, and they have run rails and ties out over this spur, and carried them across the Canadian Pacific track by the means mentioned here, and can thus be laying track on the other side toward Portage La Prairie. It is probable that they will attempt to take a locomotive across in the same way, in which case trouble will occur, as the Canadian Pacific authorities will resist. The legislature is summoned for Nov. 8, when the government proposes to secure the passage of a measure removing the Canadian Pacific's exemption from taxation, and will probably try to impose an exceptional taxation on the company, so the company will doubtless retaliate by advancing freight and passenger rates.

THE CZAR'S PERIL.

While at Breakfast the Imperial Party Are Caught in a Railroad Wreck—Their Miraculous Escape from Death.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 1.—An official statement of the accident through which the czar's train is as follows: The train containing the czar and czarina and suite left Taranowka at noon on Monday. While passing through a deep gorge near Borki the train left the rails. At the time of the accident the czar and czarina were in the saloon carriage at breakfast. When the first carriages left the line the rest of the train was derailed, and the succeeding carriage looked over. The saloon carriage, although remaining on the line, was badly shattered, the roof falling in, but resting on a part of the side and forming a shed for the occupants. It seems incredible that with such peace the occupants should have escaped unhurt, but God protected the czar and his family, who were taken from the debris uninjured. Some of the others received slight contusions. The only person severely injured was Gen. Schermetieff, an aid-de-camp.

The Graisbianin says that the train was drawn by two locomotives and consisted of several carriages besides the saloon carriage. The latter was of massive construction. The train was running at the rate of sixty verst an hour. When the first locomotive left the track it plowed up the road bed and engulfed itself in the earth. The second locomotive mounted the first and was wrecked.

The first and second carriages, which are also wrecked, were occupied by court and military officials. Among those who was in Warsaw, St. Jervial, chief inspector of railways, who was badly injured. Gens. Vannovski and Tchernin, who were in the saloon carriage with the czar, received contusions. The czar and czarina remained at the scene for some time, giving attention to the injured. Toward evening they returned to Z-sowsjle, the last station passed.

Religious services have been held throughout the empire, giving thanks for the escape of the imperial family.

The Graisbianin contradicts the official report of the accident in regard to the casualties. It affirms that twenty persons were killed, including Gen. Annenkoff, and that three couriers and eight soldiers of the railway battalion. It also says that eighteen others were injured. The imperial family passed over the Charkoff and Nicolaieff railway on their way to Gatshina. All were well.

BERLIN, Nov. 1.—It is believed here and in most of the other European capitals that the accident to the czar's train was the result of a Nihilist plot.

Federation Decided Upon.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 1.—The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers spent the whole of the day in discussing the reports of the committee in regard to the federation of the Locomotive Engineers with the Firemen's, Brakemen's and Conductor's Brotherhoods. A compromise measure was introduced, and after a long debate was adopted by a majority of one vote. The plan as agreed upon is that while each brotherhood will maintain its individuality, no member of one brotherhood shall take the place of a member of another brotherhood in case of a strike. This is virtually a federation, and means that notwithstanding the hard fight made against it, the opponents of the measure now acknowledge that it has come to stay, and will be taken under the present state of affairs. The convention will probably adjourn to-morrow.

Three Boys Dashed to Death.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 1.—H. C. Wilson, of Zanesville, O., has for several days been testing a new fire escape attached to the Grand rod factory, Allegheny. All day people were descending on the escape from Wilson's room on the fifth floor in perfect safety. In the afternoon three boys, James McClune, aged 13, Daniel Duffy, aged 15, and Daniel Nagle, aged 14, were induced to tie the rope under their arms and swing out from the window. They had descended but a few feet when the rope parted near the pully, and the boys were dashed to the stone sidewalk seventy feet below. The crowd watching the accident were appalled. McClune and Duddy were almost instantly killed, and Nagle fatally injured. Wilson was arrested and locked up. He was almost crazed by the occurrence.

Petitions for a Murderess.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—The governor and council gave a hearing on a number of petitions for a commutation of the death sentence of Mrs. Sarah Robinson, the wholesale murderess. Among the petitioners are nearly a hundred clergymen, and many prominent citizens. The grounds of the petitions are briefly: Capital punishment is unnecessary, barbarous and corrupting. The evidence was not conclusive of guilt. There are grounds for believing the sentence may be improved. No woman should be hanged, even if guilty. Among those heard on the petition were Revs. Drs. Miner, Gould and Osgood, Mrs. E. Trask Hill, Mrs. Lois Waisbrooker and others, including Mr. Goodrich, of Mrs. Robinson's counsel.

Secretary Fairchild's Warning.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 1.—Consul General Waller made a speech here last night to a large Democratic gathering on England's position on the tariff. Secretary Fairchild followed in a long speech, giving a careful review of the tariff and the position of the administration on the question. He favored the deposit of money in the national banks and the reation and effect of the tariff and surplus upon the business interests of the country. The secretary also spoke on the Mills bill, and warned the Republicans that it would be to their advantage to compromise on the reduction made in it before political cyclone was started in the northwest which would shake the present system to its very foundation.

DOINGS AT THE CAPITAL.

An American Mistress of the British Legation.

LIVELY BETTING AMONG LADIES.

An Interesting Outcome of the Sackville Affair—Officers for the Kearsarge Ordered to Hayti—More Boys Wanted in the Navy—Success of American Exhibitors.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The Star has the following: Within about two weeks an American lady will be the mistress of the British legation at Washington. This is an interesting and curious outcome of the Lord Sackville controversy. There is now no British minister at Washington. That office became vacant on the notification of Lord Sackville that the president would have no further official communication with him. This does not leave the British government unrepresented here. The attaches of the legation are not the minister's personal staff, and his dismissal or recall does not effect their positions.

The secretary next in rank to the minister at once becomes acting minister, and all official communications are through him. Mr. Edwardes, the first secretary of the British legation, is now absent and is not expected to return for some time. Mr. Michael Herbert, recently made second secretary, will become acting minister until Lord Sackville's successor is appointed, or until Mr. Edwardes' return. Mr. Herbert recently arrived here from Europe, and is to be married to Miss Bessie Wilson, of New York. The bride will thus become the head of the legation household in this city as long as Mr. Herbert is acting minister.

WASHINGTON LADIES AT THE RACES.

Yesterday was an ideal day for racing, and the attendance gave ample evidence that with good weather the track is one of the most popular in the vicinity of Washington. Attendance of ladies was larger than at any previous meeting, and of course the opposite sex turned out correspondingly. When the bell rung for the first race there were probably 5,000 people scattered over the pool lawn, grand stand and quarter stretch. The programme was an attractive one, and resulted so by the splendid condition of the track. The fields were larger and the sport more exciting and uncertain. The betting ring was crowded, and the bookmakers did excellent better than heretofore. The unformal messengers, who were provided for the convenience of ladies wishing to bet, for the first time this season were kept busy constantly.

OFFICERS FOR THE KEARSARGE.

The acting secretary of the navy has detailed Commander Allen D. Brown from duty at the naval academy, and ordered him to the command of the U. S. S. Kearsarge, now being repaired a Norfolk. She will be in commission as soon as possible and sent to protect American interests in Hayti, which are said to have been endangered by the action of that government in seizing the American vessel, the Haytien Republic.

The following officers, in addition, have been detailed to the Kearsarge: Executive, Lieut. Charles M. Knap; navigator, F. K. Osgoodl; Lieut. Richard Wainwright; Master, C. F. Russ and W. K. Constant; ensign, H. Mcl. P. Rose; surgeon, A. M. M. Moore; passed assistant paymaster, E. B. Rogers; passed assistant engineer, James H. Chasam; assistant engineer, M. Bevington.

COMMODORE SCHLEY'S SUGGESTIONS.

Commodore W. S. Schley will, in his forthcoming annual report, make another strong appeal to congress for modern vessels for the training schools. The present vessels are hardly worth repair, though they are now being put in condition for another cruise. Commodore Schley is in favor of a further increase in the scope of the school. It is his desire that the boys should not only be carefully grounded in all the rudiments of seamanship, but that with the aid of modern crafts they be carried higher in the art, and his ideal would be a repetition of the cruise of the day. The commodore is also inclined to favor an increase of the number of boys. He will not be averse to having 2,000 boys attached to the school in the various stages of instruction.

SUCCESSFUL AMERICAN EXHIBITORS.

The secretary of state has received a letter from Lieutenant Commander Colby M. Bridgeman, dated Brussels, Oct. 15, enclosing a list of awards made to exhibitors in the American section of the international exhibition. Minister Tree writes: "It is gratifying to observe from this list that out of seventy-three exhibitors, fifty-four have received distinction, and that the Corliss steam engine and brake, the highest prize awarded to any exhibitor at the 'concourse.' Though few in number, the exhibitors in the American section seem to have attracted their fair share and captured the principal trophies."

REDUCTION THE NATIONAL DEBT.

It is estimated at the treasury department that the reduction in the public debt during the month of October will amount to about $4,000,000.

October Movements of Grain.

BUFFALO, Nov. 1.—The outward movement of flour and grain from the west through Buffalo for October, 1886, shows an increase of 306,004 barrels in the receipts of flour, an decrease of 425,543 bushels in the receipts of grain, estimating flour as wheat, as compared with the same month last year. The following shows the comparative imports for October, 1887: Flour, 809,446 barrels; grain, 9,967,553 bushels; grain, including flour, 13,514,783. For October, 1887: Flour 501,442 barrels; grain, 11,433,146; grain, including flour, 13,940,004. The imports from opening of navigation to Oct. 31, 1887: Flour, 4,111,694 barrels; grain, 68,068,577; grain, including flour, 83,247,057. Same period, 1886: Flour, 3,330,795 barrels; grain, 72,181,886; grain, including flour, 88,336,561 bushels. The shipments by canal from opening of navigation to Oct. 21, 1887: Flour, 3,840,486 barrels, as compared with 43,888,075 bushels in the same period of 1886.

Sir John Opposed to Annexation.

SHERBROOKE, Que., Nov. 1.—Sir John Macdonald, in a speech made at a banquet given here to Hon. John Henry Pope, earnestly protested the advisability of Canada's accepting annexation to the United States. He said the Dominion was happy and prosperous, having a splendid climate, rich soil, an energetic people, and and well administered law. Nothing could be gained by the proposed change. He concludes as follows: "We are opposed to annexation in every form, whether it is a form of plain terms or disguised under the form of commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity. These are the principles, and I believe they will receive the approbation of the country."

Butler's Followers Desirous for Harrison.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—The Independent Butler general committee—Messrs. Sprague, Chamberlain and Fenton—met last night. The meeting voted to hold a grand rally in the rink at Worcester on the reelection meeting next. It was unanimously resolved that the name of Governor Benjamin Morton should head the ticket which is to be voted in the field by the coalition.

GREEK MET GREEK.

White and Colored Partisans Fight in the Streets of New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Two parades, one of colored Republicans and the other of white Democrats, came into collision on Sixth avenue, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-eighth streets last evening, and an almighty scrimmage resulted, pistol shots being fired, and all sorts of weapons being used as clubs and missiles.

The trouble began when the colored men attempted to break through the Democrats' ranks and turn into Twenty-fifth street, to go toward Broadway, in a body of fifty policemen, under Capt. Reilly, arrived on the scene in a few moments, but before they came Joseph Barns had been shot in the back of the head, a man named Jarvis was badly cut on the head with a lantern, an old man named Kelday was badly cut by being thrown through a window, Peter McDonnell in his face badly smashed by being trampled on, and many others whose names could not be learned were more or less injured. Only one man was arrested—George Peterson, a waiter of the colored men. He fought the officers, and it took two of them to drag him to the station house.

CLEVER TRAIN ROBBERY.

The Engineer Overawed and Compelled to Separate the Train—The Express Messenger Escaped in His Safe Key.

EL PASO, Tex., Nov. 1.—A shrewdly planned and neatly executed train robbery was committed on the Mexican Central railroad yesterday. The northbound passenger train, consisting of an engine, five freight cars, baggage and express car, and two passenger coaches, had reached a point twelve miles this side of San Jose when three masked men sprung over the tender of the engine, and with drawn revolvers compelled the engineer to stop the train. The robbers then uncoupled the two passenger cars and drove the engine with the first train six miles further, where another stop was made.

Here the thieves broke in the end door of the express car, one while they were doing so the messenger jumped out of the side door and escaped in the darkness, carrying away with him the key to his safe. The robbers were unable to open the safe for the reason the messenger had only two packages of silver coin, amounting to $2,000, which were lying on the car floor.

They next uncoupled the engine and came on with that alone, running to within three miles of Paso del Norte, where they abandoned it, leaving the locomotive they started it back down the road with a wide open throttle, and it ran about four miles, stopping for want of steam. The robbers are supposed to have crossed the river, where there is no clew to their identity, except that they are Americans. They cut the telegraph wires in several places, and the first news of the robbery was not received until four hours after it occurred.

Maimed by a Pig.

DES MOINES, Ia., Nov. 1.—A German named Fred Lehman, living five miles in the country, attended a political rally at Humboldt, leaving his wife with him. They left a 6-months-old baby in charge of other children. The infant was left on the kitchen floor alone, and while its attendants were witnessing the speaking a large sheet came in and attacked the child. Before its cries attracted the older children the hog had eaten off the fingers and the child's right hand, a toe of each foot and one ear and part of another and had otherwise horribly mutilated the helpless child. It is not likely to recover.

Secretary Bayard Speaks at Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 1.—Secretary of State Thomas F. Bayard delivered a speech last evening before a meeting that packed Oratoria hall from stage to street—a speech the best, his friends say, that Mr. Bayard ever made. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Jeffersonian Democratic association, and was presided over by Gen. Stewart Brown. Secretary Bayard was the first speaker. When he took the floor he was received with tumultuous applause.

Prohibition Parade.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The Prohibitionists paraded about 5,000 strong last night with torchlights and fireworks and were reviewed by Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, candidate for president. They were followed by 3,000 at the meeting afterward held in the Cooper Union, where Gen. Fisk, Chairman Dickie, Rev. A. B. Leonard, Hon. M. J. Fanning, of Mich., Rev. Sam Small and others spoke.

Arrested for Robbery.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—Detectives Dr ham and James Lowry are under arrest here, charged with the daring daylight robbery on Oct. 16, of watches, etc., worth $6,000, from Marcott's jewelry store in Battle square. They have had criminal records. Robert Tate also is held for receiving the stolen property.

SHORT ITEMS.

Fire in a Yarn Mill.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 1.—Ray, Rodbuss & Co.'s yarn mill at Woonsocket was damaged $40,000 by fire this morning. The hundred operatives escaped in a very lively style, and it is considered remarkable that no one was seriously injured.

O'SHEA TELLS HIS STORY

Parnell's False Friend on the Witness Stand.

INTEREST IN HIS TESTIMONY.

He Gives His Version of the History of Mr. Parnell's Connection with Crimes, and Gives His Opinion that the Letters in Question are Genuine.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The examination of witness in the Parnell inquiry proved to be much more attractive to the outside public than the addressed Sir Richard Webster last night. The court room in which the commission sits was crowded.

Capt. O'Shea was called to the witness stand in behalf of The Times. He stated that as Mr. Parnell's request he conferred with Mr. Gladstone in June, 1881. The interview was accomplished without the knowledge of Mr. Parnell's colleagues.

Negotiations were discontinued until 1882, when Messrs. Parnell and Dillon were in Kilmainham jail. The proposals which the witness made to the government in 1882 were made without the authority of Mr. Parnell. After the latter's return from Paris he conferred with the witness at the latter's house, and at these conferences they were always alone.

The Irish leader authorized the witness to confer with the government, and said that if the question regarding the arrears in rent was settled satisfactorily he would advise the tenants to pay their rents, and would himself denounce as outrageous all resistance to law.

Mr. Parnell had said to the witness that Sheridan would be most useful in putting down boycotting, and that Boyton and Egan would also be good men. Parnell stated that he could be convinced of the wisdom of the new policy.

On the day after the Phœnix park tragedy Mr. Parnell showed the witness the anti-murder manifesto. Mr. Parnell expressed himself as favoring the manifesto, but dislike of the tendency in the document, which he said was necessary to appease the vanity of Mr. Davitt.

Seven letters were here shown to the witness, who declared that the signatures were Mr. Parnell's.

Sir Charles Russell asked permission of the court to postpone cross-examination of Capt. O'Shea, as the latter part of the witness' testimony had taken him by surprise. Justice Hannan said he saw no good reason for postponing cross-examination, and Sir Charles Russell then cross-examined the witness.

Capt. O'Shea said that Mr. Buckle, editor of The Times, had asked him, through Mr. Chamberlain, to be a witness. Molyneux, an advanced Nationalist, had been threatened with death by Gen. Carroll Davis and Hayes, the supposed originator of the Lou Cavendish murders, and he had signed the protest against the exclusion of the witness from parliament by Mr. Parnell. Witness denied that he had ever threatened Mr. Parnell, but that he occasionally turned him out of his rooms in Dublin in a fit of anger. He had been anxious to give evidence in order to prove himself and refute the slanders uttered against him by Mr. Parnell and his colleagues.

Molyneux had told the witness that Mr. Egan's wife had left Mr. Egan and gone to Byrne. He could not recollect paying Molyneux's expenses to Paris to procure signatures to the protest against his exclusion from the Parnellite party. The memorandum he had collected was destroyed in 1883, when there was danger that a select committee would be appointed to inquire into the Kilmainham treaty, and he had burned them in that the utmost reticence in the matter was necessary.

Questioned by whom asked Sir Charles Russell:

"By Sir William Harcourt, who said it was the opinion of another person—Mr. Gladstone."

The fac simile letter of The Times was shown to the witness, who was decide dly of the public that the writ ng was that of Mr. Parnell. Mr. Parnell's manuscript of letters from Mr. Parnell about the same date and could not mistake his signature.

The commission then adjourned.

The examination showed that the Tories believed would be made by the revelations of Capt. O'Shea on the witness stand has fallen very far short of their expectations. The captain's testimony was given with apparent frankness and is really favorable to Mr. Parnell, in regard to the charges that the Irish leader possessed foreknowledge of the murders and outrages committed in Ireland, or even contemplated. The most interesting item of the witness' testimony to those behind the scenes was his explanation of the fact that he severed his confidence in and for Mr. Parnell in June, 1886, a statement which can and will be totally refuted.

The fact is unenviable that a reporter, who will be called to the witness box in due time, interviewed Mr. Parnell in Capt. O'Shea's house in Eltham, and the data of that interview will be for-hcoming. At other times the captain's recollection of facts and dates became somewhat confused, but on the whole, he made a very creditable showing as a truthful witness, considering the trying circumstance of his being confronted with confronting memoranda in the presence of the man he was giving testimony against.

A TREASURE.

Mischievous Antics of an Enterprising Office Boy.

I met my friend, the uptown insurance agent, a few days ago, and his countenance was sad. "Those office boys will be the death of me yet," he said. "I tried a new one last week. He was a nice American boy, rapid in his movements, and seemingly zealous. When he had been in my employ two days he came to the office after a trip to the bank and said that two men had attacked him and tried to get his money away. He had tripped up one and run away from the other and made good his escape. The next day he came running into the office and told me that the two young men who were laying for a chance to rob him were outside. He pointed them out. I rang for a policeman and the men were arrested. I gave the boy $5 for his sharpness and faithfulness. The boy flew about his work in a more alert manner than ever, and I was still further convinced that I had found a treasure.

"That afternoon I went out at 1 o'clock to get my lunch. I met a man who said my candidate was not going to be elected, and of course stopped to reason him out of this view. At 4 o'clock I sent a note over to my chief clerk telling him to close up the place and send the keys to my home by the boy. These directions I afterward learned were strictly carried out the boy had his own idea of how to perform his share of the work. 'Nobody knows where the boss is,' he said cheerfully to my wife, as he gave up the keys. 'He may be dead. No one has seen or heard anything from him since lunch time. I rather think he has met with an accident, but whatever has happened you may depend on me, ma'am. I'll stand by you and see you through.' Well, then there was a time. My wife jumped to the conclusion that something had happened and telegraphed for her brother. She signed her initials, which, of course, are mine. Her sister-in-law, who got the telegram, read it, and imagined that it came from me and was designed to get my brother-in-law out for a racket.

"She didn't give it to him till after 8 o'clock. About 7:30 o'clock I turned up at my house and my wife nearly fainted at the sight of me. While we were talking the bell rang and the boy appeared, more cheerful and busy than ever. His countenance fell considerably when he saw me, and he got off to the edge of the stoop. A dark, grave looking man, whose dress suggested clerical duties, was with him. 'What do you want?' I asked the man. 'I am an undertaker, sir,' he replied, 'and I believe there is a job for me here.' I was dumfounded for a moment, and then I kicked that boy clear to the sidewalk and I have not seen him since."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Generous.

Small Brother—Where did you get that cake, Annie?

Small Sister—Mother gave it to me.

Small Brother—Ah, she always gives you more than me.

Small Sister—Never mind; she's going to put mustard plasters on us when we go to bed to-night, and I'll ask her to let you have the biggest.—San Francisco Post.

The Last Resort.

Salesman—Those confounded dress goods don't go off worth a cent. They've been in stock now for over a year, and we haven't sold more'n fifty yards all told.

Proprietor—What did they cost us?

"Thirty-five cents; and I've been offering them for a quarter."

"Why not try them on the bargain counter?"

"I suppose we might try it."

"All right. And, Mr. Tating, mark them at 50 cents. We must get rid of them some way."—Boston Transcript.

Useful.

Wife—Why, John, what made you get such a fashionable cane with so much handle?

Husband—That handle's solid silver.

Wife—No, but you can't put the handle up to use.

Husband—Well, I'd like to know if I didn't put it up for a during the last wet spell.—Washington Critic.

Best Paid Labor.

"What sort of labor is best paid in this country?" asked a visiting Englishman of an American.

"Hard labor," was the prompt reply.

"You must rise now."

"It's a fact. You ought to see the salaries paid to our baseball players."—Exchange.

A Puzzling Question.

A Paris firm has produced porous glass for window panes to assist ventilation. Porous plaster is said to be good for bodily pains, but whether porous glass is good for window panes remains to be determined.—Norristown Herald.

The Long Stop.

Mr. Batter (something of a braggart, soliloquizing of a brave)—Oh, yes, I am a great ball player; I have yet to see the pitcher I cannot strike. It would do you good to see me on the nine of my home runs!

Nine—Indeed it would!—Harper's Magazine.

ABOUT HALLOWEEN.

THE FATEFUL EVENING THAT PRECEDES ALL SOULS DAY.

Some of the Charms and Spells Which Belong to It—Old Superstition and Modern Mischief—Maidens Who Try to Read Their Future.

THE festival of All Saints comes on the 1st of November. Sometimes it is called All Hallows, or All Holy, for "hallow" comes from "holy," and has the same signification. The evening preceding this, which is the last evening in October, is called Hallow even, or Halloween.

About it originally clung many poetical superstitions, which have mostly degenerated into lackeyings. These had their origin in Scotland, land of the weird and uncanny. At midnight certain incantations and charms would disclose to her who performed them her future matrimonial partner. And it was also believed by the rustics that any one who would watch in a church porch on All Souls night, the night following Halloween, would see the ghosts of those who were destined to die in that parish within a year. One by one the gruesome procession would troop by towards the graves, foreshadowing their last trip to the churchyard. Many an over curious maiden tried this dismal means of learning something about the future, only to be rewarded by the cruel pranks of the young who masqueraded as ghosts in order to bring their sweethearts to terms.

Halloween has long taken on a merry coloring. In England arose the fashion of ducking for apples in a tub of water. Nuts were named for the lasses and laddies and placed in the front of the fire to see whom each should marry.

Cabbages have always figured effectively in Halloween practices. Why, it would be difficult to tell, just what occult power a cabbage possesses has never been defined, but certain it is that these innocuous plants usually have a rough time of it on Halloween. In Scotland the girls went forth at midnight and each pulled a cabbage from the earth. If it came up without breaking and brought with it a goodly portion of earth she would be married within the year to a husband of enviable wealth.

Superstitions change with the years. They either grow in intensity or lapse into burlesque. The one pertaining to cabbage was finally translated to mean that no thrifty person permitted their cabbages to stand in the ground as late as the last day of October. When any were found ungathered on this particular night it was considered quite proper to remove the carelessness and shiftlessness of their owners by pulling them up and throwing them at the doors of said owners.

This practice still obtains in villages and towns which are blessed with lads who class cabbage pulling and throwing as humor. Certain other attempts at being funny are indulged in by cabbage throwing brigades. They think it enough to set the whole town roaring when they transfer the undertaker's sign board to the doctor's office. Hiding gates and painting dragons on the minister's house is also a high order of mirth to them. To put a stuffed donkey at a professor's desk or in the most iron clad preacher's pulpit is a feat for which they will labor heroically and consider themselves rewarded by the anger and scandal it arouses.

Indeed, instead of being a hallowed or holy even the last evening of October has been almost universally given over to pranks quite the reverse of holy. Formerly, when a belief in witches and witches' craft, this was the night on which they chose to go abroad on baneful midnight errands. It was supposed that the fairies then held a grand anniversary, and fairies were always supposed to be in sympathy with the young, particularly with those who were in love.

Since witches and fairies have vanished their Halloween tricks have been kept up by able bodied fairies of full growth in strong sympathy with the spirit of mischief supposed to belong to the little brown people.

Halloween has been the source of much exciting fiction, which proves highly fascinating to people who like tales with spells, charms, prophecies and their fulfillment in them. Lots of maidens who recklessly peered into the future on that fateful night and saw what they would not to see come forth every year and make the rounds. They are real, of course, or they would not be written. It is hinted that they are even read by those who pretend to be greatly superior to the superstitions in the tales promulgated.

On Halloween girls like to gather about a fire and tell the queer tales they have heard about the prophecies which came true. Their elders smile pityingly. They remember when they, too, tried spells and charms, with a certain foolish faith in them. And sometimes they sigh as they look back over their own lives.

October is a grave, almost mournful, month, full of an unspoken sadness and the melancholy brightness of dying leaves. It is fitting that its last hours should be dedicated to weird and strange fancies. It has in it some of the warm splendors of the summer and the dank despair of the winter.

Dickens thus describes a late October evening:

A moment, and its glory was no more. The sun went down beneath the long dark lines of hills and clouds, which piled up in the west as airy city wall heaped on wall, and battlement on battlement; the light was all shadrawn; the shining church turned cold and dark; the stream forgot to smile; the smoke were silent, and the ghosts of winter dwelt on everything.

Everybody knows Burns' poem, "Hallowe'en," which pictures the eve as it was and probably still is on Scotch soil. There are books devoted to old customs and superstitions which set forth the proper thing to do on Halloween. The old fashioned almanac paid some attention to this day and he ped out the young people by giving various methods of their reading the future. The modern almanac is too frequently a stunted thing, shorn of all information that would be pleasing to romantic young souls.

Yet tradition will continue to dispense the lore of Halloween, the young will crack nuts, pull up cabbages and try spells until the unromantic realities come so thick and fast upon them that they have no more hours for happy foolishness.

LA CROSSE'S PUBLIC BUILDING.

Uncle Sam Pays $150,000 for His Offices in That City.

Among the numerous public building appropriations passed by the Forty-ninth congress, was one of $150,000 for La Crosse, Wis., and the building is now well along toward completion. When it is finished it will compare favorably with the public buildings in many larger cities. It will be a decidedly handsome structure, and is being very substantially and thoroughly built from the concrete foundation to the top of the handsome tower which adorns one corner, looming 150 feet in the air.

According to the architect's plans, the building will consist of three stories, a basement, and the tower, from which will be visible a magnificent view of La Crosse and the surrounding country. The walls of the first two stories are of massive granite set off by polished columns at the entrances and windows. The upper stories are of pressed brick, relieved by freestone trimmings. The interior is quite as attractive as the exterior, being finished in hard wood and tile. The building is absolutely fireproof, and conveniently located near the center of the city.

The structure will be occupied, when completed, by the postoffice, the internal revenue and land departments, United States courts, and the offices of the surveyor of customs. Exclusive of the heating apparatus the building contracts amount to $475,000.

La Crosse is a city of 28,000 inhabitants, has eight railroads and two lines of steamers to St. Paul and St. Louis while navigation is open.

President Cleveland Wanted Water.

"Daniel?" remarked the president dryly at lunch yesterday.

"Yes, sire," responded Daniel, taking a bite of cheese.

"Can you aware that the executive mansion is very short in its water supply?"

"I hadn't noticed that so much, sire, as I had noticed a shortage in other liquids."

"Don't mention it, Daniel," said the president, sadly. "But, Daniel, I did not refer to the water so much for drinking purposes as for washing. I am an advocate of ablution myself, Daniel, at this very moment."

"But, sire, do we not belong to the party of the great unwashed?"

"I'm afraid, Daniel, but not in practice. Why, Daniel," and the president's lips quivered, "you ought to see me in my bath. I can't get enough water to cover me, and I've had to limit me self to about two god high water and low water marks on me worse than the hull of a canal boat."

"Oh, sire," exclaimed the sympathetic Daniel, throwing up his hands.

"Yes, Daniel, and I've rolled over and over in my vain attempts at complete submersion, until I have corns all over me, and the lining of the bathtub looks like a back number boiler in one of Whitney's war ships."

"I have no such difficulty, sire."

The president looked Daniel over in a pitying way.

"No, Daniel, you have not," he said, "but I have. Measure my circumference with your eye, Daniel, and think of me in a spoonful of water. Why, I stick up out of it like a campaign lie in a stump speech."

"Did you over try to turn a hose on yourself, sire?" ventured Daniel.

"No, Daniel, but I tried the river one night and liked to have got swamped in the Flats. It is the bathtub, Daniel, or nothing."

"Haven't they made an appropriation, sire?"

"I think so, Daniel."

"Well, sire, don't make a mistake and veto it."

That was too much for the president, and without a word he got up and left Daniel close at the lunch counter, and that worthy nearly rained with the cheese. "Gosh, I didn't intend to throw cold water on the old gent in that kind of style."—W. J. Lamuton in Washington Post.

The Tobacco Chewing Habit.

There is one old time habit that used to be widely prevalent in the United States, especially in the west and south—the tobacco chewing habit—that has certainly declined in the present generation. The manufacturers of chewing tobacco say that the trade in it has not grown with the growth of our population, but that it made stakes it is the same half as large as it used to be before the war. In the New England states it has become a very slight account. We think all old time New Yorkers will agree in saying that the chewing habit has fallen off greatly in this city and state, and that far fewer workingmen are addicted to it in these days than formerly. The stores in which it is now for the greatest bulk are Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee and Virginia. It is an unwholesome habit, offensive to bullies and to neighbors, opposed.—New York Sun.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

NEW AND PLEASING STYLES FOR THE WINTER SEASON.

Fashions in Bonnets Designed for Evening Wear, Also for the Street—Two Leading Shapes, Known as "Paris Capote" and "Directoire Bonnet," Described.

Many handsome styles in bonnets for evening wear, as well as those designed for the street, are seen in the shops and on the heads of fashionable ladies. Two shapes much favored are the Paris capote and the directoire bonnet.

FIG. 1—PARIS CAPOTE.

A Paris capote, as shown in Fig. 1, gives a bonnet with soft crown in pale primrose, relieved with a band of jetted net, which is edged with a gold lace frilling. The butterfly bows are in vieux rose ottoman silk, short, with pale yellow and striped with gold tinsel. The strings correspond in color and texture.

FIG. 2—DIRECTOIRE BONNET.

Fig. 2 illustrates a very becoming bonnet in the directoire style. The shape is in felt, with velvet facing. Loops of ribbon, interlaced with feathers, form a large bow at the side, with a border of soft feather trimming extending almost across the entire front of the brim and ribbon strings to match the bow.

According to Harper's Bazar the small blackbirds are thought suitable trimming for any hat, and are only rivaled by the more tiny humming birds. They are in groups posed amid the ribbons as if in the heart of a flower. Black cord passementerie is also used on bonnets, covering the sides over a color—especially over red or green velvet—and forming loops on top. Felt and velvet bonnets will be chosen to correspond in color with the long cloak which is to be the favorite wrap for the winter, and which must be long enough to conceal the dress beneath it—an economical fashion, as one bonnet will then serve with various gowns.

Novelties in Watches.

A new and peculiar class of timepieces has lately been brought before the public in the form of what are called rock crystal watches. These watches are of ordinary size, with cases and plates of Brazilian pebble or rock crystal, thus allowing the watch transparent and exposing to view the wheels and other portions of the interior mechanism. In place of the usual dial is made in the form of a skeleton of gold. Above each hour mark is a diamond, and between the diamonds there is a ruby for each minute.

There is fancy now with many of having portraits reproduced in miniature on the inner sides of gold and silver watch cases. A novelty of European origin is the fan shaped watch. Small shaped watches occur among the decorated silver ones when on chatelaines.

Artistic Designs in Dress.

Dress this autumn and winter promises to be as much an artistic study as it has been in the past. Evening dresses are exceptionally pretty, young girls wearing them in bright colored stripes in surah and soft Radzimir. A handsome dinner gown for a married lady is of light blue figured and brocade, the front covered with tulle, having tiny gold frosted spangles all over, a broad and handsome design in gold at the edges. The jackets, which can be worn with any skirt, open with revers over lace fronts, having square Louis XV pockets, are very stylish and pretty.

The Styles Most Affected.

The present craze for the empire and directoire styles is being somewhat overdone, but, judging from the number of charming costumes seen, we could hardly resuscitate any modes better suited to the materials of the season. A very distinctive dress following the style is rich colored dark brown silk, trimmed with quite a new and very soft woolen stuff, resembling the old fashioned gray and white shawls. It is bordered with a design in a darker tone, of beige in soft cream, forming plaited panels secured by large buttons.

New Patterns in Silk.

Black sparse floral patterns and conventional designs with large canopies burst on greens, grays and new pinks, and are used, to make up very handsomely. Some of the newest appear on a burgundy red ground, with all the warm brilliancy of its dye. Coral patterns are introduced in the brocades with pean de soie grounds, and broad black satin stripes, with tiny dots, for evening gowns, are most fashionable. Checks of the satin brocades, in tasteful spots of conventional flowers are likely to be much worn.

AN APT PARROT AND A SHREWD TEACHER.

It is certain that the arguments which President Cleveland urges are those which Cobden used to employ forty-five years ago, and which any English free trader would now employ.—London Times, July 5, 1888.

Is England a Fool?

Put it in interrogative form, thus: Has England ever been our friend in business?

No.

Has she always been our rival in business?

Yes.

Does she desire us to adopt free trade?

Yes.

Would it be to our benefit?

No.

Does she consider the Mills bill and eventual free trade synonymous terms?

Yes.

Is England a fool?

Not much.—San Antonio Express.

Treasurer Axworthy, of Cleveland, regarded public office as a public trust and struck it for $429,000. Yet we do not fancy the Cleveland democrats will use the episode to any great extent as a campaign card.—Philadelphia Press.

They Could Only Detect Themselves.

The national Democratic committee isn't offering any $25,000 in rewards for the detection of fraudulent voting in New York. The national Democratic conscience isn't built that way.—Philadelphia Press.

RINGING WORDS.

Terence V. Powderly and Peter Cooper on Protection.

One of the strongest advocates of the protective system is Terence V. Powderly, whom the Knights of Labor have so often honored by making him the presiding officer of their order. At a meeting held in New York Feb. 16, 1888, Mr. Powderly made use of this language:

"I am a protectionist from the top of my head to the bottom of my boots, for two reasons: First, because I am a Pennsylvanian, and second because I am an American. So help me God, I will never vote for anything that will tend to degrade American labor. I am opposed to any meddling with the tariff until the question has been submitted to the people."

These are Mr. Powderly's own words. He then went on to denounce the free trade system, and said it was the result of British machinations. Mr. Powderly made this declaration in a workingmen's mass meeting which was held at Cooper Institute.

Another honored and able exponent of the protective tariff was Peter Cooper. His last words on that subject are worth recalling. When Mr. Cooper was within a few days of his 93d birthday he was called on to preside at a meeting held in Cooper Union by the New York association for the protection of American industries. On taking the chair Mr. Cooper said:

"The advocates of free trade with foreign nations are trying to persuade our government and people that it is for their interests to buy from other countries all the luxuries they have to offer. These advocates of free trade propose that our own manufactures shall either work at the starvation prices of the foreign laborers or be forced to abandon their trades and become competitors with the agriculturists of the country. If we desire to bring upon our whole nation a fate similar to that which has fallen to the lot of Ireland, Turkey, Mexico and Hindostan, it is only necessary to arrange our tariff in a way that will induce the people to have all their manufacturing done in foreign countries, and pay for it with the raw material of our own. Such a policy will, if I am not mistaken, secure for our United States as rapid a decline and fall as that which fell to the lot of Spain when the Moors, the principal manufacturers, were driven out of the country. Such a policy might gratify our thirst for all the dearly bought follies and fashions of European lands, but it would bring ruin and wretchedness upon hundreds of thousands of the mechanics of our country, who have been taught by past times to look to it for employment. To brush up this diversified employment of the land a number by a change of tariff, and then expect them to find for themselves other means of living, is about as reasonable as it was for Pharaoh to expect the Israelites to make bricks without straw. All must see how utterly impossible it would be for the American people to purchase anything of any from foreign countries that must be bought at the expense of leaving our own good raw materials unused and our labor unemployed.

FOR CONGRESS, NATHANIEL W. VOORHEES, OF HUNTERDON COUNTY.

FOR ASSEMBLY, OSCAR CONKLING, OF BASKING RIDGE.

Gen. Grant's Reason.

A Boston gentleman has the following lines in the handwriting of Gen. U. S. Grant, written and signed by him in 1880. The reason therein cited for being a Republican is as pertinent today as eight years ago:

"There is not a precinct in this vast nation where a Democrat cannot cast his ballot and have it counted as cast, no matter what may be predominating influence in a State party. He can proclaim his political opinions, even if he is one among thousands, without fear and without proscription as an accursed thing. In eight of the fourteen states, and localities in some others, where Republicans have not this privilege. This is one reason why I am a Republican.

U. S. GRANT."

JOTTINGS.

—President Murray, of the Y. M. C. A., will lead the young men's meeting Monday evening.

—Nine tails are as useless to a cat as a wash tub and rubbing board to a woman who does not use tulip soap—say the makers.

—The Ministering Children's League of the Grace church are giving "a pink and white tea" in the parish rooms, 20 West Second street, this afternoon and evening. The entertainment will be continued this evening.

—Treasurer Axworthy, of Cleveland, regarded public office as a public trust and struck it for $429,000. Yet we do not fancy the Ohio Democrats will use the episode to any great extent as a campaign card.—Philadelphia Press.

—Those who saw Miss Julia Marlowe in "The Lady of Lyons" at Skillman Music Hall last night all agree that she fully deserves the high praise given her by Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll, Mark Halstead and the late Lester Wallack. Miss Marlowe is an actress of rare talent, native grace and beauty and remarkable elocutionary powers.

—Eighteen Democrats, members of the Penniman Guards, left Plainfield to take part in a parade at Trenton last night. They refport first-class treatment at the hands of their entertainers, and didn't get back home till our o'clock this morning. The Plainfield contingent numbered 24 at the depot, and were so ashamed of themselves that they took a vote whether they would go back. Fifteen voted yes, but the other six went home disgusted.

PERSONAL.

Col. Julian Scott, the artist, returned to Plainfield from Ohio European trip yesterday afternoon.

Mr. John H. French, President of the Plainfield Reform Club, is in town from Malone, N. Y. He will vote here for Harrison and Morton.

The Forest and Stream of Oct. 25th contains excellent full length pictures of Mr. Charles Smith, of West Front street, and ex-Governor Thomas H. Keller, of Engine Company No. 2.

Mr. Dudley S. Miller, of Field & Randolph's City Pharmacy, is to attend the first annual banquet of the Newark Drug Clerks' Association to-night. He is a charter member and a Director of the Association's Board.

Gymnastics To-Night.

The classes in light gymnastics for gentlemen will be begun to-night at eight o'clock at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. The classes are open to all members of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Martin is anxious to see all those interested in the subject at the rooms to-night, when he will state his terms for tuition. The Board of Directors will be glad to have as many as can conveniently come be present, as it will show the people of Plainfield just how anxious the Y. M. C. A. are to have a building with a first-class gymnasium of their own. The instructor, Mr. Martin, is a graduate of the Brooklyn School of Physical Culture, and comes highly recommended Dr. W. G. Anderson, President of that institution. Miss Martin will again meet the classes for ladies and children Saturday afternoons at three o'clock.

'RAH FOR THE POTTS CLUB!

They Entertain 500 Plainfielders in Royal Style.

Nearly five hundred Plainfielders joined a throng of uniformed Republicans at Elizabeth last night in a parade through the city and the Port. The procession was greeted with enthusiasm everywhere, and wherever Democrats banded together to hiss and hoot they cheered for Harrison and drowned with ringing notes the noises of the crowd.

The F. A. Potts Club of Elizabeth had the right of line, and were followed by their guests, the Lincoln Guards, the Cavalry, dismounted, the U. S. Grant Guards, the Harrison and Morton Guards and the Tippecanoe Guards, all of whom went by special train from Plainfield; with clubs from Westfield, Railway and Linden, other Elizabeth Clubs, and the Plainfield Langston Guards, who were the guests of the Elizabeth colored voters' club.

The line of march was a long one, and the Potts men "got square" with a vengeance with their Plainfield visitors, who led them in a recent parade all over Plainfield and the Borough; but at midnight, after having most effectually "iced" the Central Jerseymen in the outskirts of Elizabethport, they gave a pleasing surprise by suddenly bringing horsecars in their midst and inviting them to ride back to Liberty Hall, where the most cordial hospitality was extended. The Plainfielders never received handsomer treatment. Sandwiches, coffee and apples were provided in the utmost abundance, and an hour was spent in feasting and cheering. The Potts Club were voted the most royal of good fellows, and hearty thanks were given them. Various candidates, including Gen. Harrison, the Hon. John Kean and Judge Ulrich, were loudly hurrahed. It was two o'clock when the Plainfielders reached home.

FIRE-BUGS IN THE BOROUGH.

Israel Coop's Barn Set Afire This Morning.

A milkman going his rounds at half-past five o'clock this morning discovered a blaze outside the barn at the rear of Mr. Israel C. Coop's residence, on Grove street. Approaching the place he found the building burning outside near the fence, and at once alarmed Mr. Coon, his family and neighbors, who set stoutly to work to fight the fire with damp earth and water. After an hour's work they had extinguished the blaze without having sent out an alarm to the Fire Department, and they set about investigating the cause of the combustion. They could come to no conclusion but that incendiaries started the fire.

A SMASH-UP AT SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

Supt. Donnelly, of the Lehigh, Narrowly Escapes Death.

Locomotive 370, containing an engineer and fireman and Supt. James Donnelly, of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, backed into a coal train at South Plainfield last night as the "cooler" was switching off to a siding. The engine was thrown over on its side, and it was feared that Supt. Donnelly's skull was fractured, but later reports are more sanguine. No one else was hurt. Four coal cars were wrecked, and travel on the main track was delayed some time.

Prof. Tripp's Lectures.

Prof. Tripp was greeted by a highly intellectual and appreciative audience at his opening lecture at Cutter's Hall last night. The Professor gave a brief but graphic resume of the great Paris Revolutions of February and June, 1848. This was followed by a delineation of the wonderful career of Napoleon III., from his birth to his accession to power, including by two abortive attempts at the throne of France, his imprisonment at Ham, and his escape and great Coup d' Etat, when he seized Imperial rule. Sketches were interwoven of Napoleon I and others of the Bonaparte family. A touching description was given of the death of the Prince Imperial in Zululand. The historical difficulties of the present French Government were advertted to, in its work of establishing Republican institutions, beset on the one side by the Anarchists, and on the other by the powerful factions, and surrounded by hostile dynasties.

The second lecture, Saturday evening, will embrace a thorough elucidation of the much-vexed Eastern question, and the latest developments threatening the peace of Europe, followed by a vivid description of the great battles of the Crimean War of 1854-5, the whole illustrated by large colored maps painted expressly for this series. This lecture, which, it is promised, will be of surpassing interest and value, will doubtless attract a large attendance of intelligent citizens.

The New York Times Building.

Last week's Harper's Weekly has a drawing of the new Times building by Charles Graham. It is attracting much attention at present. George H. Reynolds, practical Architect and Civil Engineer, said of it the other day in answer to a friend who asked his opinion of it:

"The New York Times Building will be when completed the most notable building in the United States—the boldest in design and the most pleasing to the eye—standing out distinctly in its type from all other designs. That will be the general verdict. I have remarked that several times in going near it I have been out of my way often to survey it in order to determine whether I should change my opinion. But every visit has confirmed my previous views and judgment. It is unique."

Postal changes in New Jersey have been announced as follows: Railroad postal route No. 1, from Jersey City to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania railroad, 90.80 miles. Establish two additional lines of railway post-office cars, sixty feet in length, inside measurement, on this route, between New York and Philadelphia, one to run southward, one to run northward, leaving New York and Philadelphia at 4:30 P. M. daily. Railway post-office cars, forty feet in length. Leave date of commencement to be stated in a subsequent order. The star route between Lyons Farms, Irvington and Farmingdale has been increased six trips per week, to take effect to-morrow.

OUR COUNTRY: ITS INSTITUTIONS.

HOW PROSPERITY FOLLOWED REPUBLICAN RULE, AND DEPRESSION DEMOCRATIC DOMINATION.

The Political Division According to the Vote of 1884, with Map. The Tariff, Shown by Chart; and Its Effect, Shown by Figures.

This map, copied from "Our Statesmen," (Brentano, of Union Square, New York) presents the political shading of the United States—Democratic in white, Republican in black. On so small a scale it is not possible to give minutely the outlines of all the districts, especially where the population is dense and the districts consequently small, with marked variations between adjacent districts. All that is done is to give the general changes. These are accurately presented as they were at the last presidential election, and the showing is remarkable.

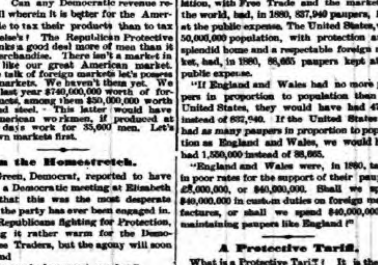
It will be seen at a glance that, with few exceptions, the proportions as between the two parties are remarkably uniform throughout the north; there is just about as much white now in Minnesota and Iowa as in Ohio and Pennsylvania, and so to area more than in New York; but the city of New York changes the general politics of the state. Another curious fact is arrived at by comparing the political charts of different years, viz.: No matter how sudden or how great the changes may be from one election to another, there is always a tendency for any district to resume its old political complexion.

This tendency is still more marked in the counties, especially in the central west. Thus the counties in Ohio and Indiana which were "Clay" in 1834-38 generally remained Whig and became Republican, and vice versa, of the counties which were "Jackson." This shows that there exists in the minds of the people a tolerably clear idea of political succession. Individuals have changed and continue to change, but, as a rule, a Whig predominance, once firmly established, continued and changed to a Republican predominance; and the same is true of the Democratic. For a short time the slavery question seemed to cut square across this old line, but it was only for a short time and chiefly in the seceding. For the nation part the men who stood together in 1840 and 1844 on "tariff, bank and distribution" stood together on the Kansas question in 1854 and 1856, on war questions a little later, and still later on reconstruction, on financial issues, and are still together on the old questions which have again come to the front.

There is a deep philosophy in this if the young politician would "observingly distill it out." It is no easy matter to break party lines. As is the animal world everything that is "queer" runs against death.

It will be observed how Republican sentiment prevails throughout all the most intelligent, most prosperous and best agricultural as well as manufacturing sections of the country. Washington territory in the upper left hand corner, and Montana territory, the second to the right, being all that stand on the Democratic side of any extent of territory.

Now look at the following chart showing the Tariff since the beginning:



Tax Foreign Products.

Why shouldn't this country tax the foreign product? Can any Democratic revenue reformer tell wherein it is better for the American people to tax their products than their foreign rivals? The Republican Protective Tariff thinks a good deal more of men than it does of merchandise. There isn't a market in the world like our great American market. Before we talk of foreign markets let's possess our own markets. We haven't them yet. We imported last year $740,000,000 worth of foreign products, among them $50,000,000 worth of iron and steel. The latter would have given American workmen, if produced at home, 300 days work for 35,000 men. Let's get our own markets first.

On the Homestretch.

Judge Green, Democrat, reported to have stated at a Democratic meeting at Elizabeth recently that this was the most desperate campaign the party has ever been engaged in. Well, the Republicans fighting for Protection, are making it rather warm for the Democratic Free Traders, but the agony will soon be over, and

"We may be happy yet, you bet."

Pay Your Money and Select.

"If I believed that the Democratic party was committed to a Free Trade crusade I should not be here to support it," says Gov. Hill. The Democratic party is not. The person of imbeciles hardly worth mentioning, is not on the fence. It is a Free Trade party or it is nothing, "say I and Hill." The voter who is looking for a leader to follow can take his choice.—Louisville Commercial (Ind.)

The "Ifs".

By order of the president a special business meeting of the "Ifs" will be held in their rooms, 23 East Front street, Monday afternoon, Nov. 30th, at four o'clock. The regular monthly devotional meeting will not be held Tuesday, Nov. 6th, as that is election day.

E. M. TAYLOR, Sec. Pres.

Before the War.

Before the war the Tariff reached high water mark in 1828-32. Just notice it in the chart, and then this sentence from Andrew Jackson. He was a Protectionist, as appears in his message to Congress, December, 1832. Therein he refers to the four years of Protection, under the Tariff of 1828, as "unequaled" "in any portion of the world" for the "happiness and prosperity" it brought this nation.

Notice that during the years of greatest Tariff, for Protection of home industries, wages were highest, and that the country was most prosperous and equally that during the decade from 1870 to 1888, while the Tariff has been highest, the country has been the most prosperous and equally, and it was under Republican rule; while during the time that the Tariff was lowest—that is, from 1857 to 1860, under Democratic rule—wages were lowest, and there was general depression. Not only this, the country was plunging into debt at the following rate, as taken from the amplified address of Mr. T. W. Morrison, Aug. 15th, 1888, before the Convention of Republican clubs at Asbury Park. Mr. Morrison said:

"Along in 1846 the Democratic party started the Free Trade idea, which we had a step to the more vicious Free Trade laws of 1857. By these the Democrats brought ruin on the private interests of the country. There are many men living to-day who remember that time of misery. In the following table will be found the receipts and expenditures of the government during five years of Democratic Free Trade, and below it a statement of the increase of the public debt in the period:

Years.	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Expenditures over receipts.
1857	$68,675,385	$68,941,149	$2,265,764
1858	41,789,620	72,330,457	30,540,837
1859	49,565,824	69,354,955	19,789,131
1860	53,187,511	63,060,784	8,873,273
1871	38,982,125	62,614,055	23,631,930
Total	240,000,365	327,400,399	79,399,35

During the same period the public debt increased year by year as follows:

1857	Free $28,699,831
1858	Trade 44,911,881
1859	58,496,837
1860	64,842,287
1861	90,580,873

Look at these facts:

1. Five years of free trade.
2. Expenses of the government in five years of free trade $79,399,354 more than the receipts.
3. Increase of the public debt $62,081,036 in five years of free trade rule, five years of peace.
4. The revenue decreased from $68,000,000 to $40,000,000 under free trade.

When the Democrats went out of power in 1861 they left four fifteen cents in the treasury, and plunged the country in debt. When they went out in 1888 they left a surplus, and later they left the country peaceful and prosperous, and so rich that the Democrats don't second to the right, being all that stand on the Democratic side of any extent of territory.

Now look at the following chart showing the Tariff since the beginning:

THE SENATE SUBSTITUTE.

Republican Protective Plans Against the Mills Bill.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—There has been so much said about the Mills Bill that a few words at the close of the campaign in reference to the Senate substitute for that "Free Trade" measure may not be inopportune.

In the first place, it will be well for us to remember that under the Constitution the Senate has no power to originate bills for raising revenue, that privilege belonging solely to the House, the right of the Senate even to originate appropriation bills being of a somewhat doubtful nature.

The fact that the Senate was unable to take the initiative part is a matter of this kind made it simply impossible for the Republicans to offer a Tariff Bill sooner than they did, for the Senate had to await the arrival of the Mills Bill from the House before it could take any action as regards reducing the surplus.

Senator Aldrich, from the Committee on Finance, to whom the House Bill was referred, says:

"A thorough revision of our revenue laws is imperative. In order to reduce our internal revenues, which are now excessive, it is necessary to readjust the tariff taxes. Therein he refers to the four years of Free Trade, under the Tariff of 1828, as "unequaled" "in any portion of the world" for the "happiness and prosperity" it brought this nation.

Notice that during the years of greatest Tariff, for Protection of home industries, wages were highest, and that the country was most prosperous and equally that during the decade from 1870 to 1888, while the Tariff has been highest, the country has been the most prosperous and equally, and it was under Republican rule; while during the time that the Tariff was lowest—that is, from 1857 to 1860, under Democratic rule—wages were lowest, and there was general depression. 1858	Trade 44,911,881

Difference.

"England and Wales, with 27,000,000 population, with Free Trade and the markets of the world, had, in 1880, $37,040 paupers, kept at the public expense. The United States, with 50,000,000 population, with protection and a splendid home and a respectable foreign market, had, in 1880, 88,605 paupers kept at the public expense.

"If England and Wales had no more paupers in proportion to population than they had, they would have had 47,500 instead of 852,940. If the United States had as many paupers in proportion to population as England and Wales, we would have had 1,550,000 instead of 88,605.

"England and Wales were, in 1880, taxed in poor rates for the support of their paupers $8,000,000, or $40,000,000. Shall we spend $40,000,000 in cash on duties on foreign manufactures, or shall we spend $40,000,000 in maintaining paupers like England?"

A Protective Tariff.

What is a Protective Tariff? It is the imposition of a duty or Tariff on foreign productions, but it is always on competing foreign productions. A Protective Tariff says that everything that we cannot raise in the United States shall come into this country free, and that everything we raise, and go to, taxed to the American people. The Republican party says that the duty, under the Protective system, shall be put on the foreign production the like of which we can produce in the United States.

The last only raises enough revenue for the purposes of the Federal Government, but at the same time it fosters our own industries, encourages the building up of new ones, develops our great undeveloped resources, furnishes employment for our people, and that in turn furnishes remunerative employment to American laborers.

THURSDAY NEWS.

LET US ALL GIVE THANKS

President Cleveland Issues the Annual Proclamation.

OTHER NEWS FROM THE CAPITAL

While We Give Thanks for Peace, Prosperity and Comfort We Are Enjoined to be Charitable—Condition of the National Treasury—Product of the Mint—Gossip.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The president has issued the following proclamation:

Constant thanksgiving and gratitude are due from the American people to Almighty God for His goodness and mercy, which have followed them since he made them a nation and vouchsafed to them a free government. With loving kindness he has constantly led us in the way of prosperity and greatness. He has not visited with swift punishment our shortcomings, but with gracious care he has warned us of our dependence upon his forbearance, and has taught us that obedience to his holy law is the price of a continuance of his precious gifts.

"It is our duty to remember that God has done for us as a nation, and to the end that on an appointed day the prayers and praise of a grateful country may reach the throne of grace, I, Grover Cleveland, president of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November instant, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, to be kept and observed throughout the land.

On that day let all our people suspend their ordinary work and occupations and in their accustomed places of worship, with prayer and songs of praise, render thanks to God for all his mercies, for the abundant harvests which have rewarded the toil of the husbandman during the year that has passed, and for the rich rewards that have followed the labors of our people in their various departments of trade and industry. Let us give thanks for peace and for social order and contentment within our borders, and for our enlightened and that adds to national prosperity.

And mindful of the affective dispensation which, while a portion of our land has been visited, let us while we humble ourselves before the supreme God, acknowledge our sorrowing bonds to the deadly march of pestilence, and let our hearts be chastened by sympathy with our fellow countrymen who have suffered and who mourn.

And as we return thanks for all the blessings which we have received from the hands of our heavenly father let us not forget that he has graciously enjoined upon us the duty of thanksgiving let us generally remember the poor and needy, so that our tribute of praise and gratitude may be acceptable in the sight of the Lord of heaven.

Done at the city of Washington on the 1st day of November, 1888, and in the year of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

In witness whereof I have hereunto signed my name and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the president:

T. F. BAYARD, Secretary of State.

OCTOBER REDUCTION OF THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The reduction in the public debt during October was about to $4,500,619, and for the first four months of the fiscal year $28,294,-093. The net cash in the treasury is $74,491,-966, against $96,144,845 on Oct. 1. The gold held in the treasury has decreased about $8,000,000 during the past month, and amounts to $191,974,570, and the silver fund (including certificates of $66,080,080) to dollar, is $24,566,259, or $10,000,000 less than a month ago. National bank depositories hold $84,189,279, or about $3,000,000 less than on the first of the present month. Customs receipts for October were $23,955,338, against $31,803,172 in October, 1887. Customs receipts during the past month, the first quarter, are nearly $1,000,000 less than in October a year ago; internal revenue receipts were $11,500,000, or about $1,000,000 more than in October, 1887; while the receipts from miscellaneous sources were $2,565,000, or $100,000 less than in October a year ago. Receipts from all sources for the first four months of the present fiscal year reach $124,-500,000, against $134,131,560 for the first four months of the preceding fiscal year, and as receipts in July, August, September and October are usually a little heavier than in any four months of a year, point to a reduction of about $875,000 for the year. Expenditures for the first four months of the current fiscal year amount to $110,500,000 against $110,500,000 for the first four months of the preceding fiscal year. During October, the past month, the sinking fund purchased $26,650,000 bonds, $18,000,000 4½s, and $8,700,000 4s at a premium of $4,518,457.

MR. MILLS DOUBTFUL OF RE-ELECTION.

Representative Mills was at the Capitol yesterday. Though not really ill, Mr. Mills was feeling badly, no doubt from overwork, as he has been performing a continuous and laborious service to his party in the campaign. Mr. Mills left for his home last evening, but with regard to points of special efforts to defeat him, he said that they caused him no uneasiness whatever, that everything is all right in his district.

READY FOR THE TUNNEL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. Haskell, of Kansas, the third member of the expert engineer board to investigate the tunnel, arrived and met Col. Flad, the other members of the board and Reporter Stahlman, yesterday. The board organized by selecting Col. Wilson chairman, and then proceeded to the examination of plans of the tunnel preparatory to beginning active work.

PRODUCT OF THE MINTS.

The total coinage executed at the mints during the month of October was $9,005,150 pieces, representing a value of $5,271,900. Of these pieces 1,150,150 were gold, representing $5,000,550; 5,500,000 were silver, of the value of $2,250,000, and 1,350,000 were minor coins, of the value of $21,000.

MISS MATHER'S DISTINGUISHED AUDITORS.

A brilliant audience witnessed Miss Mather's rendition of Juliana, in "The Honeymoon," at the New National theatre last night. The president, Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. Folsom and Mrs. Harmon occupied a box.

A Favorite Mark for Burglars.

BROOKLYN, Conn., Nov. 2.—The savings bank and post office building here was entered by burglars Wednesday night. They drilled a hole in the top of the safe, and by some explosive material made the door fly open. They secured $150 in bills, but neglected to take $200 in postage stamps. They also entered the store of R. D. Spencer and stole some goods. Mr. Spencer is the Higgins Manufacturing company's works, hearing the explosion, started to ascertain the cause. When he arrived in front of the postoffice the burglars fired at him. He retreated and gave the alarm, but the burglars made good their escape. The thieves failed to force the inner door of the safe. This is the fifth time the postoffice has been entered within the past few years.

The Pennsylvania's Dividend.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad company at a meeting held at noon declared a semi-annual dividend of 2½ per cent. on the capital stock. The following resolution was adopted without a dissenting voice: "Resolved, That the board of directors do hereby declare a semi-annual dividend of 2½ per cent. upon the capital stock of the company, and that the same be paid on the first day of next state taxes, on and after Nov. 20, 1888, to the shareholders as they stand registered in the books of the company at 3 o'clock p. m. on Oct. 31, 1888."

A BRUSH WITH OYSTER PIRATES.

They Give the State Sloop a Lively Fusillade with Small Arms.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—Early in the morning the state oyster sloop Mary Compton sighted 400 or more boats which were engaged in illegal dredging on Swan Point bar, and swooped down upon them. But the pirates would not fly. The oysters were plentiful and so were bullets and small shot. The police sloop had no sooner invaded the waters occupied by the pirates than the latter opened a hot fire with small arms. The sloop answered with similar weapons.

The officers did not seem to care a button for bullets, and as a last resort the cannon with which the sloop was armed was turned against them. The awful boom of the gun rang out upon the air, but still they did not scare. Not an inch would they budge, and finally the Mary Compton turned her stern to the pirates and ingloriously fled for Chester river. Her flight was accompanied by the ringing cheers of her enemies.

After proceeding a little distance the Compton caught sight of the police steamer McCulloh and signaled her. The steamer then proceeded to the scene of the late fight. But the dredgers concluded that a victory over one poor vessel was enough glory for one day, and they hoisted sail and left. At night the dredgers again collected on the bar, and when morning dawned the commander of the Mary Compton was surprised to see the pirate fleet again before him. The Compton again swooped down upon them. The dredgers stood firm and poured volley after volley into the hull, rigging and deck of the sloop. The Compton once more opened with her cannon, but the law breakers greeted each fire of the big gun with derisive yells; but they finally retired. It is reported that that several of the dredgers were wounded.

SIX WOUNDED.

Firemen at Carlisle, Pa., Throw Water on a Students' Bonfire and Are Attacked.

Free Fight with Water and Stones.

CARLISLE, Nov. 2.—A riot occurred here between the Dickinson college boys and the firemen this city. An alarm of fire was sounded. The students had torn down the fence surrounding the college and made a bonfire. The fire companies turned out and arrived at the scene, when they found it a false alarm. The students refused to admit the firemen on the college campus and a fight ensued. The firemen attached their hose to a plug and commenced throwing water on the fire and students. The students grasped the nozzle and tried to wrench it from the firemen, the latter succeeding in retaining possession and threw more water on the students. A volley of stones was then thrown by the students, injuring a number of firemen. The firemen then returned a volley of stones and water.

The following persons were injured: Harry Noble, fireman, cut by a stone across the head, condition critical; Elmer Nathan, fireman, severely cut and bruised; Hal Parks, fireman, cut about the head and face, and internally injured; William Lininger, cut about the head, face and hands.

The following are the students who were injured: H. Hartzell, cut in face and several teeth knocked down his throat; C. C. Baldwin, knocked down and trampled by the crowd, condition critical.

The affair has created a great deal of excitement, and it is expected the matter will be carried to the courts. The college building has been closed, it is broken out by the water thrown by the firemen.

Axworthy's Predecessor Was Crooked.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 2.—Another sensational development in the Axworthy defalcation case was made yesterday. The mayor's clerk, Briggs, who has been investigating the treasurer's books, has discovered a shortage of $8,000 in the books of S. T. Everett, Axworthy's predecessor in office as city treasurer. It is also hinted that other large shortages will be found in the accounts of that official, and that the funds were short when Axworthy took the office. Mayor Babcock directed the city solicitor to sue the estate of Everett, but that official refused to act until the books were further examined. The treasury accounts will now be overhauled by experts. The affair is the talk of social and political standing, and is now vice president of the Union Savings bank. He is in New York at present.

Cable Railroad Transfer.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 2.—A deal by which the controlling interest of the Cable Railway company of this city is to be turned over to Chicago capitalists has been consummated. The transfer includes the entire road and laborious service to his party in the campaign. Mr. Mills left for his home last evening, but with regard to points of special efforts to defeat him, he said that they caused him no uneasiness whatever, that everything is all right in his district.

A Proposed Railroad Deal.

PENDLAY, O., Nov. 2.—For several days past officials of the Santa Fe road have been inspecting the line of the New York, Mahoning and Western railroad, now in process of construction between Pendlay, Fort Wayne and Port Sandusky, with a view of purchasing the road as an eastern outlet of the Santa Fe. One section between this city and Ottawa is already completed, and the road is nearly all graded from this city to Fort Wayne, but the company has got into financial difficulties and will be compelled to sell.

In Jail for Refusing to Pay Taxes.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 2.—Last April many citizens refused to pay the municipal license tax, on the ground that it was a double tax and unconstitutional. The city court decided otherwise and imposed fines in many or severity cases, and the supreme court has now affirmed the constitutionality of the license law. Yesterday twelve executions were issued and five served. The defendants refused to pay the fine and were committed to jail.

McAuliffe Will Box Hyams.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Jack McAuliffe, champion lightweight of America, and Jake Hyams, who claims a like title in England, signed article to box ten rounds, Queensberry rules, within 109 tales of New York, six weeks from Nov. 1, the winner to take 40 per cent. of the gross receipts. The match for a championship match within the time decided by the Englishman, as he has a fight on with Billy Myers in January for $5,000.

Close of the Engineers' Convention.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 2.—The Locomotive Engineers' convention met here to-day in considering reports on matters discussed during the first part of the session. The convention will adjourn this afternoon, having been in session since Oct. 17, or fifteen working days. The "O" strike will be the last matter disposed of, for the decision will be closely watched from the public.

Centennial Treasure.

OWENSBORO, Ky., Nov. 2.—Andrew Johnson, a cripple, living near Red Hill, this county, while digging in the woods on his farm unearthed a copper kettle in which were silver coins. The kettle was dated "October, 1788." The bottom was filled to over $5,000.

MANY MASS MEETINGS.

A Blaze of Political Glory in the Metropolis.

GREEK FIRE AND STUMP ORATORY.

It Was Democratic Night in the City.

Their Leaders Spoke in Four Great Halls—Republicans Rarrah in Harlem and Brooklyn—Other Demonstrations.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Daniel Dougherty, Bourke Cockran, Roger A. Pryor and other prominent Democrats addressed a large meeting at Tammany hall, in ratification of the national Democratic ticket.

At the same time another huge meeting was being held at Steinway hall, for the same purpose, under the auspices of the Exchanges and Business Men's Democratic associations, the speakers being Governor Hill, Mr. Crokett, James C. Carter, president of the Bar association, Morris K. Jesup and others also spoke.

The adherents of J. J. Coogan, United Labor candidate for mayor, held a big open air meeting in Union square, and paraded the streets.

The Republicans held no meetings in this city, but had a monster torchlight parade of Kings county Republican clubs in Brooklyn, in which it was claimed that 25,000 men participated. The parade was reviewed by Col. S. V. R. Cruger, Hon. J. W. Husted and other leading Republicans, who also made speeches. The Republicans of Harsem also held a big parade and series of meetings.

The Henry George single tax people filled the Cooper Union, and were addressed by Mr. George, Mr. William Lloyd Garrison, Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost, Louis F. Post and W. T. Croasdale.

Hon. Thomas F. Bayard addressed a Democratic meeting at the Rink in South Brooklyn. His speech was upon the same lines as the one he delivered in Baltimore Wednesday night. The audience was large and demonstrative.

Hon Warner Miller spoke upon state issues before the New York Federal club, dwelling chiefly on high license and ballot reform.

Republican Orators at Norwich.

NORWICH, Conn., Nov. 2.—Mr. Blaine arrived here by special train and was escorted to Williams' park, where fully 25,000 people from all parts of eastern Connecticut had gathered to hear him speak. It was said to be the largest political meeting ever held in this vicinity. The enthusiasm reached a high pitch when Mr. Blaine appeared, accompanied by Gen. Adam E. King, of Baltimore; Hon. John T. Wait, Hon. H. H. Dugan, Hon. Morgan G. Bulkeley, Republican candidate for governor, and Hon. Charles A. Russell, of Killingly. Mr. Blaine presided, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. King, Bulkeley, Russell and Blaine.

Binghamton's Effort.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 2.—It is estimated that 15,000 strangers were in town attending the Broome county Republican mass meeting. There was a 42-piece parade of tradesmen and merchants, with appropriate floats and banners, and in the evening there was a torchlight parade in which 5,000 men took part. Uniformed delegations were present from Scranton, Elmira, Ithaca and many other places. Chauncey M. Depew, W. C. Plummer, of Dakota, and Judge A. W. Tourgee spoke in the afternoon and Mr. Depew also spoke in the evening, the audiences numbering many thousands.

In Honor of Levi P. Morton.

RHINEBECK, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Rhinebeck turned proud last night in honor of the Republican candidate for the vice presidency. About 3,000 men were in the parade, which marched through the illuminated streets. The line was led in the torchlight march by Hon. Levi P. Morton, Col. J. L. De Puyster, E. N. Howell, of Poughkeepsie; George Eggerton, Martin Isserlanese and a number of party leaders from Rondout, Poughkeepsie and the neighborhood.

To Settle the Voting Question.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—The question whether election inspectors must or must not receive the votes of citizens who arrive at the polls before 4 p. m. on election day, but who have been unable to cast their ballots for that hour, is being argued in the supreme court to-day, on an application for a mandamus compelling inspectors to receive such votes.

Mr. Blaine at Hartford.

HARTFORD, Nov. 2.—Mr. Blaine arrived here last evening accompanied by Walker Blaine, Hon. Morgan G. Bulkeley and leading Republicans. He spoke to an audience of 5,000 people in the First Regiment armory being enthusiastically greeted.

Buffalo's Big Parade.

BUFFALO, Nov. 2.—The great parade of the campaign took place here last night. Nearly 10,000 Republicans were in line. Throughout the line of march the streets were a blaze of fireworks, Chinese lanterns, flags and bunting.

Remorse Killed Him.

DENVER, Nov. 2.—James Longo-otti, a bartender, who shot and killed a man named A. Case on Monday, while expelling him from a saloon, died yesterday in convulsions, apparently the result of nervous prostration and remorse, which caused him to imagine that the murdered man was torturing him. Longo-otti was one of the three members of the New Orleans lynching force who escaped the ravages of cholera in that city in 1878.

Fired Into a Crowded Train.

WABASH, Ind., Nov. 2.—An unknown scoundrel fired into a crowded train on the Wabash road, which was returning from the Republican rally at Peru. The train had reached the city limits when the ball crashed through the window of one of the coaches and whizzed by the faces of Iowa ship Trustee Bury and County Superintendent Myers. There is no clew to the miscreant.

Robbed of Thousands by Tramps.

AKRON, O., Nov. 2.—Joseph Dickenhof, aged 70, while riding through on a freight train on the Erie road, was assaulted by two highwaymen and robbed of $7,500 that he carried in a valise. He was knocked down with a club. The thieves escaped and the wounded man was taken to the hospital. The valise was found in the weeds. Officers are in pursuit.

Killed by a Train.

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—John Smith, a farmer living near Lake View, while driving across the Ravenswood railroad track, was struck by a train and instantly killed. His wife was badly injured, her body being dreadfully mangled. He leaves a wife and a large family of children.

RIVAL FORCES READY TO FIGHT.

The Canadian Pacific Troops Opposed by a Crowd of Loyal Manitobans.

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 2.—Fully 600 men are encamped at a point where the Portage extension crosses the Canadian Pacific. All are armed. A Canadian Pacific railroad train, with 100 infantry, was sent to the scene, while a second train, with 250 men from the Canadian Pacific railroad shops, was sent shortly after. The feeling between the two forces is gradually getting more bitter. Should the Canadian Government force a crossing the Dominion infantry will interfere, as such are their orders. Judge Clark, the Canadian Pacific solicitor, who has just returned, says he considers that the latter have all the odds, as the law is on their side.

As the forces of both sides are now face to face at the Fort Rouge crossing a conflict is expected at any moment. The Northern Pacific men have been straggling along, and are now gathered in good force. Indications are that they will attempt to run an engine over the Canadian Pacific track, but any interference with the Canadian line will be strenuously resisted by the Canadian Pacific forces.

A construction train has gone out to the scene of operations laden with rails, and has been run up close to the Canadian Pacific line on the Northern Pacific tracks. The officials of the Canadian Pacific company are on the alert, and are well prepared for an emergency, while additional special constables have been sworn in on the part of the government, and it is evident that some extraordinary move on their part is pending.

TO IMPROVE THE CONNECTICUT.

Business Men and Manufacturers Consider the Project.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 2.—A meeting of manufacturers and business men was held here last evening, at which various plans were discussed for improving the Connecticut river for navigation between Holyoke and Hartford, thus giving to Springfield and vicinity navigation to tidewater. A committee was appointed to proceed to build a canal at Enfield, 17 miles long, 120 feet wide and 10 feet deep, at an estimated expense of between $3,000,000 and $3,500,000. It was argued that the improvement thus made would open up a valuable territory, and give freight rates fully $1 a ton cheaper than the present rates.

Articles of association and bylaws were adopted, under the name of the Connecticut River Improvement association. Mayor E. H. Haynes, of Springfield, was chosen president; E. W. Seeger, secretary; and a long list of vice presidents, comprising enterprising manufacturers and merchants of Springfield, Holyoke and Chicopee, was elected. Ample capital is behind the scheme, and it is determined to put the matter through with a rush. Petitions will be left at the various polling places in Springfield, Holyoke and Chicopee for signatures of voters.

Edison Displeased with Some Portraits.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—Several years ago Thomas A. Edison discovered a remedy which has been extensively advertised as a "Edison's Polyform." A company in this city purchased the right from Mr. Edison to manufacture polyform under his formula and to use his name in advertisements. He also gave the company the right to print his picture upon the labels. In the last year the advertisements published throughout the United States have been accompanied by the use of the picture of the inventor. To this Mr. Edison now objects, as says in his letter to the manufacturing firm of Lydia Pinkham, and asks the courts to enjoin the company from displaying his picture in the newspapers.

Stricken Down at Vespers.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 2.—Rev. F. X. Schmidt, assistant to the late Father Grotemyer, at St. Joseph's Catholic church, this city, was saying vespers yesterday afternoon, and just as he was pronouncing the benediction he fell over unconscious. He was carried to the parsonage, where it was discovered that he was suffering from heart failure. Father Schmidt is about 60 years old and his condition is critical.

Bedell Unaided in Crime.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—The examination of Forger Justus E. Bedell in the suit of his late employers against the Bank of New York to recover the amount which the bank paid on Bedell's forgeries, was continued in supreme court chambers yesterday, Bedell relating calmly and coolly how he spent the money. He reiterated that neither Cashier Dodge nor anybody else assisted him in his crooked work.

The Removal of Libby Prisom.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 2.—The executive committee of the Libby Prison association passed through this city on their way home to Chicago from Richmond, where they made all arrangements for the removal of the famous old prison by sections to Chicago. These gentlemen are traveling in great splendor, having at their disposal the elegant Pullman buffet sleeper "Mascotte."

CONDENSED NEWS.

The council of Mercersburg, Pa., has offered a reward of $1,000 for the capture of the incendiary who has destroyed so much property in that place. During the last two months eight stables and several dwellings were consumed.

C. H. Truesdell, business manager of the "Burr Oaks" theatrical company, which left New York two weeks ago, has disappeared and the company has disbanded. No salaries were paid. The members of the company are stranded in Hartford.

A fight among street car men in Chicago Wednesday night resulted in the serious injury of Motorman Allen and Gallaway. In boisterous manner that three of their number were arrested. Thus their companions went in a mob to the jail and tried to effect their release, but were unsuccessful.

The Constellation has sailed from Portsmouth for the West Indies.

A syndicate of forty Chicago capitalists has purchased the entire railway system of the city of Los Angeles, Cal., for $800,000.

A thief sounded an alarm of fire which caused all the clerks in the Topeka (Kan.) postoffice to rush out of doors. Then the robber stole a number of registered letters.

Earnest Zoathwaite, the Chicago agent for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York, has disappeared with embezzlement and a warrant for his arrest has been issued.

John T. Bennett, formerly a merchant of Bedford, (Pa.) committed suicide on his wife's grave Wednesday night.

Two prisoners escaped from the Kentucky penitentiary Wednesday night.

Word has been received of the safe arrival at Rio Janeiro of the passenger train that was captured by brigands, and subsequently released after a ransom had been paid.

Mrs. Parnell Had Nothing to Do with Them—One Witness Shoots at Another, The Sackville Sensation Still the Absorbing Topic.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—At the sitting of the Parnell commission Capt. O'Shea was recalled to the witness stand. He submitted the protest, referred to in his evidence Thursday, regarding his exclusion from parliament by Mr. Parnell.

The taking of evidence of policemen who had taken shorthand reports, as to the correctness of their notes, was then resumed.

Hot seething grams by the police reporters before Parnell commission was decidedly favorable to the Parnellites. Sir Charles Russell cross-examined them thoroughly, and in the line of questions he put out responses that indicate that the League saved the people from famine and despair, and that the outrages committed in Ireland were due solely to landowners who were opposed to lawful agitation in any shape. The opinion is now expressed that the inquiry will not continue as long as was at first thought. The very nature of the testimony given so far, and the apparent weakness of The Times' case, seem to indicate an easy and swift victory for Mr. Parnell and his associates.

It is a known opinion the law courts Joseph Kavanagh drew a revolver and fired a shot at Pioneche Cox. The shot did not take effect. Kavanagh was arrested and committed to jail on a charge of attempted murder. It is reported that both Kavanagh and Cox had been cited to appear as witnesses before the Parnell commission. The latest report of the revolver, with four of the chambers loaded, was found on Kavanagh. He stated to the police that he carried the weapon for self defense, as he had been threatened with death for making certain disclosures.

Although nearly one deplores the necessity for Mr. Bayard's action in giving Lord Sackville his passports, the feeling of English men who have expressed opinions on the subject are unshaken in the belief that the chief fault lies in Lord Sackville's disobedience of Lord Salisbury. The latter is charged with the responsibility of the humiliation of England's representative, which could and should have been averted. Lord Salisbury failed to realize that the approaching American elections made promptness in the matter on his part imperative. His critics declare that he ought to have acted immediately in the affair, and recalled the minister whose indiscretion and undiplomatic conduct made his presence in America as England's representative impossible. It is generally held that Lord Sackville, though certainly to blame for the unwise letter he foolishly allowed himself to write, was led into the snare by the country men, and that the minister's long diplomatic service entitled him to more careful and thoughtful treatment from his government.

The Fine Edge of Sarcasm.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The Pall Mall Gazette says it hopes that the anger of the Democratic organs in the United States over Mr. Cleveland could do no more," it says, "with out friend Lord Sackville into jail. The British constitution is that the folly of President Cleveland subjects Lord Sackville's discretion. It is one thing to be tricked into making a slip in private, but it is quite another thing to be publicly made a show of folly and ill temper. We owe Mr. Cleveland thanks for showing that the silliest man in Washington was not born in England."

Mr. Parnell's Scotch Lawsuit.

EDINBURGH, Nov. 2.—The case of Mr. Parnell against The London Times for libel was again heard in the court of session to-day, and discussed the question of the relevancy of the action brought by Mr. Parnell, the defendants contending that the court had no jurisdiction. Judge Kinnear reserved his judgment.

Fellow Feeling.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 2.—The czar has received telegrams from the emperors of Germany and Austria and from President Carnot congratulating him upon his escape from the accident which his train met with on Monday.

Cardinal Newman's Accident.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The illness of Cardinal Newman is now reported to be very serious. He fell down through weakness while walking in his residence recently and knocked his head against the wall.

King William in a Critical State.

THE HAGUE, Nov. 2.—The condition of the king of Netherlands has grown worse, and is declared to be critical. His mouth and throat are inflamed, and he takes nourishment with difficulty.

Birmingham's Election.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—In the municipal elections at Birmingham nine wards returned seven Unionists and two Gladstonians. The elections were contested on political party lines.

Suicide of a Veteran Railroader.

CHESTLINE, O., Nov. 2.—Henry Eetly, aged 60 years, day baggage master for the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago road at this place, committed suicide by taking laudanum. His body was found near the cemetery, he having left his note saying where he would be found. Eetly was in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad company for thirty years.

Their Young Dream Cut Short.

GREENSBURG, Pa., Nov. 2.—Amanda Montgomery and Gus Williamson, lovers, were run down by a freight train on the Southwest railroad and killed. The young couple were out for an evening stroll, and in stepping off the track on one train did not notice the approach of another train coming in the opposite direction.

Power Takes Another Jump.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 2.—There were fifty-six new cases, sixteen white and forty colored, and two deaths during George Washington and James Harris. The day was the coolest for a week past (60 degs.), but the fever record took another jump and people are discouraged. There seems to be no prospect of frost.

The Humorist's Wife.

She—George, dear, why is it that the newspapers make fun of London Punch?

George—Because the jokes in that paper are considered dry and pointless.

She after a while, innocently)—George, why don't you send some of your refused jokes to Punch?

George did not tell why, but made a mental note of her question to use at some other time in a joke.—Yankee Blade.

At Nice.

Miss Baron (complacently)—Weally, Miss Amilton, I cawn't see what makes Mees Jenkins fleert so outwageously wis me. What can I do to get rid of her?

Miss A.—Propose to her. She's a girl of sense.—Life.

Mr. Darnelle's Reasonable Request.

"It is so sudden, Mr. Darnelle."

"I know it is," responded the young man gently.

"I know it is," he repeated. Measured by ordinary standards and by the cold conventionalities of society, it is indeed sudden. We have known each other only twenty-four hours. Until twenty-five minutes after 8 o'clock last night neither of us had ever heard of the other. Yet with the heart one day is as a hundred years. Could we have known one another better, darling," he went on with a tremor in his cultivated B flat baritone voice, "if we had attended the theatre, the concert, the church, and the oyster parlor together for a dozen years? Does not your heart beat responsive to mine?"

"I will not pretend to deny, Mr. Darnelle," replied the young lady, with a rich blush mantling her cheek and brow, "that your avowal moves me strangely."

"I knew it—I felt it," he responded eagerly. "Love is not the slow vegetable like growth of years. It does not move in its course with the measured, leisurely step of a man working by the day. It springs up like a mushroom like a electric flash. It takes instant possession. It needs not the agonized coaxing of—of a young man's first chin whiskers, my darling. It is here! You will forgive my presumption, will you not, and speak the words that tremble on your lips—the words that will fill my cup of joy to overflowing?"

The evening had passed like a beautiful dream. Mr. Darnelle, admonished by the clock that it was time to go, had risen reluctantly to his feet and stood holding the hand of his beautiful betrothed.

"Ah," he said, in eager, passionate accents, "now that you have blessed my life with a measureless, ineffable joy and made all my future radiant with golden hope, you will not think I am asking too much if I plead for just one favor?"

"What is it?" shyly responded the lovely maiden.

"Please tell me your first name."—Chicago Tribune.

"Merciful heavens! Tell him I'm out."—Philadelphia Record.

A Sure Sign.

Jinks—Wonder how Longpurse came out on the wheat corner?

Binks—Think he must have been a heavy loser. Don't believe he's got a penny left.

"Eh! Has he been showing signs of poverty?"

"Yes, siree. He's stopped being slouchy and now goes about all dressed up as if he wished people to think he had money. Oh, he's a goner."—Philadelphia Record.

At the Breakfast Table.

Mrs. Wifey (looking up from the paper)—Dear, what are breadstuffs? Is the bread I make a breadstuff?

Mr. Hubby (absently)—Yes, darling, your bread's tough—quite so.

WOMAN AND HOME.

SAVING PENNIES AT THE EXPENSE OF HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

The Slavery of Housework—Bad Manners of Husbands—Home Influence—Society's Foible — Mercenary Marriages — Toilet Articles—"Thanks"—The Ideal Woman.

In my housekeeping experience, which covers a period of nine years, I have come to the following conclusions: First, economy may be carried to such an extent as to become chronic. Second, woman's mission does not consist in spending all her energies in studying a five cent piece in order to discover the secret of enlarging its capabilities. Third, it is not the mission of the wife or mother to make savings banks of the family stomachs. Buy enough; select the best; cook enough; eat all you want; but do not have a large quantity of anything left over, which will require time and strength and the addition of other materials to render palatable.

From time immemorial men and women have been in the habit of laying mortgages on their backs, making backs, muscles and nerves do the work that money ought to do, simply that they may outshine their neighbors in a large house, a new piano, handsome bric-a-brac or a "fashionable library," and when all has been procured, if indeed Mother Nature has not foreclosed her mortgage, the fingers are too stiff to play the piano, the mind too dull to enjoy the library, the back bent almost double, is held in place by the sharpest of rheumatic stitches, and the soul has been so pinched and starved as to be beyond the power of redemption.

How has such a state of affairs been brought about? Oh, by economy, saving the pennies at the expense of health, strength and soul expansion. We can all of us cite instances that have come under our observation, and may have entered into our experience, where the "woman folk" have made a bargain with the "man folk" that they will do all the work, providing he will pay them the money which it will cost to hire help. Spring suits made and the spring house cleaning all done in the imagination of mother and daughters, and for a time everything passes along smoothly. The spring house cleaning is performed in short order; stoves are taken down before the frost is out of the ground; the heavy spring work is done up early, so that the usual "summer holds" can have a chance to sew on the new suits before the warm days come on. But one day the doctor is called to visit the mother or daughter and the old story is repeated, "Oh! I guess we tried to do too much and got overdone." Fortunate it is for the sick one if long illness does not follow, and if the front door does not wear "drapery." Ten times the amount saved (?) goes to the doctor, and poor Mother Nature has to repair the wasted strength by slow and wearisome stages.—Good Housekeeping.

The Slavery of Housework.

And then this lady exalted, as all cookery experts do, the dignity of labor in the kitchen. She spoke of the time when it would be a woman to be a household drudge but a "home maker." That is a very charming phrase, but the Listener does not believe that what is true in the majority of New England housewives away from the fullest personal contact with pots and kettles is any notion about the indignity of labor, but rather the sheer impossibility of performing all that is required of a wife and mother in this generation and devoting themselves to the pots and kettles, and the cold water sink, and other kitchen arrangements at the same time. It is simply out of the question unless a woman could succeed in getting up a revolution of her own against all the customs of our life at this epoch and could simplify domestic institutions to a point quite unknown for a generation past.

There are women who are "home makers" in the good old sense; who do their own work, and keep their parlor in good order at the same time that they do their kitchen work, and go to church, and keep their children neat and well dressed, and fulfill in some degree the social requirements of the time. But such large natures are generally grave makers for themselves, and sometimes for their children. No man has a right to lay a woman under such a tyranny of toil; no woman has a right to lay herself under it. If she survives it by her own inherent strength, and escapes paralysis, she is pretty sure to put the stamp of invalidism upon her children. And she dwarfs her own moral and mental growth at the same time she dwarfs the stature of her children.

The Listener doubts whether the slavery of housework has not really a more hideous record behind it than negro slavery on the southern cotton plantations. It is not at all very charming, indeed, if household life could be so simplified that a housewife could do all her own work and not break down her health and her spirits, and be left to cope alone with the world; if civilized people could borrow some lessons from cave free, easy living gypsies, and could manage to get along with one-tenth of the useless friction of taking care of themselves that we now waste our energies in, and sacrifice none of our civilization in the way of gain. But that seems to be out of the question. The life that we live we are in for now. And the genuine home maker, under such a system, must be somewhere else most of her time than in the kitchen.—Boston Transcript.

Bad Manners of Husbands.

A friend was spending the day with me the other day, and while she was here our pastor called. After he left, the friend said: "Did you ever notice with what ease Mr. Conrad speaks of his wife, and how courteously he treats her at all times?" I nodded assent, and my friend went on: "I suppose my husband is as good a man as ever lived, but his mother did not train him to be courteous to ladies. His sisters were his slaves, and thereby he is spoiled as a husband. I wish I could have a law passed that would be a benefit to the girls of the next generation. Do you suppose they'd consider it their preparative to drive the girls out of the earliest child, take the smallest corner of the room, the best place by the light, throw books, papers or slippers down for some one to put away, and grow up with the idea that a wife might be valet and lady, and the rest of the household stand respectfully by to obey orders? You smile, but this is anything but a subject to laugh over.

"I really believe husbands never think how their unkind ways hurt. They don't realize the difference to us—to them, in their manner when they come to dinner. All day the wife has been alone with the children and servants, and is sorely hungry for a kind word from her husband, or at least a pleasant glance. He comes in just as the dinner bell rings. 'For a wonder dinner is done ready on time,' the tired wife thinks. Couldn't he have noticed that fact, and said, 'Dinner is ready, and you must be hungry, Nellie,' and what kindness it would be a hungry fellow, and what kindness it would be from adding what would be milk and honey to a weary soul all the rest of the day long; and the rest of her life, if there are a good wife, Cornelia? And if, dinner is not quite ready why need he say, 'Of course not; never is!' in working tones for the home, why hasn't some one taken Wesley's remark, 'I'll as Soon Swear as Pret,' instead of hanging up 'I Need Thee Every Hour.'

"When I think I have a hard time I just think of the women who have no servants, but who themselves care for the children, wash, iron, cook, mend, churn, milk, carry wood and water, all for less than the hired servant girl's wages. Of course men appreciate their wives, of course they do, but they keep their polite manners and courteous way for outsiders, and I think Mrs. Conrad thanked me for giving him room beside me at a concert, and then sort of apologized for being polite by saying he thought it was my sister Mary."—Mrs. C. P. Wilder in Atlanta Constitution.

The Mother's House Influence.

If a mother does not lay aside her courtesy with her company dress, if a father is as refined in speech when the door has closed after the guest as he was when they conversed together, the child will learn to be habitually polite and modest. For good manners are better taught by example than by precept.

The woman who wrote the "Practical Thoughts of a Mother," says she has often noticed that girls who have grown up in refinement and simplicity have shown, when placed in the great world, such elegant tact and behavior as to astonish high born ladies.

"Where has the little one learned it?" exclaims some one of them. "She behaves like a queen; and my daughter, who has been educated in Paris, only just look at her! there she stands and turns her back to that lady; how improper!"

The mother does not reflect that her daughter has been taught many rules of behavior, but never very few. But "the little one" has imbibed courtesy with the air of her home. Her mother has taught her few rules of politeness, but has set an example of high breeding and delicacy that has acquired so unconsciously the art of polite behavior that she feels what is and what is not "good form."

In her home she has never known a word, a look, an act, that differs from the acts, words and looks used in polite society. When the first entrée is required from a baby into an assembly room where well bred people had gathered, she simply transferred herself to a larger but not different sphere. Her repertoire is unchanged, and returned by thanks, little acts of service are done quietly, as a matter of course, and a spirit of kindness and consideration is associated in all she says and does.—Youth's Companion.

Society's Pet Foible.

The cynic wants to know what is gained for any rational being when a city full of women undertake to make and receive formal visits with persons whom, for the most part, they do not wish to see. What is gained, he asks, by leaving cards with all these people and receiving their cards? When a woman marries her various rounds why is she always relieved to find people not in? When she can count upon her ten fingers the people she wants to see, why should she pretend to wish for more? Is any one deceived by it? Does anybody regard it as anything but a sham and a burden?

Much the cynic knows about it. Is it not necessary to know what is called society? Is it not necessary to have an authentic list of pasteboard acquaintances to invite to receptions and evening parties? Can one get on without receptions? Everybody likes to give them. Everybody flocks to them with great alacrity. When society calls the roll, we all know the penalty of being left out. Is there any intellectual or physical pleasure equal to that of jamming as many people into a house that they can hardly move, and treating them to a Babel of noises in which no one can make herself heard without screaming? There is nothing like a reception in any uncivilized country. It is so exhilarating!—Harper's Magazine.

Concerning Mercenary Marriages.

We find a number of women thrown on the world to earn their own living in the face of every sort of discouragement. Competition runs high for all, and even were there no prejudice, the struggle for bread would be a hard one; as it is, life for poor and single women becomes a mere treadmill. It is folly to inveigh against mercenary marriages, and every woman has a right to be sure, for a glance at the position of affairs shows that there is no reasonable alternative. We repeat, and every woman to be a heroine and choose a hard and thorny path when a comparatively smooth one (as it seems) offers itself, and when the pressure of public opinion urges strongly in that direction.

A few higher natures will resist and swell the crowds of worn out, underpaid workers, but the majority will take the voice of society for law and order, the easy rate of wisdom, and our common respectable marriage—upon which the safety of all social institutions is supposed to depend resulting, as it is now, the worst, because the most hypocritical, form of woman purchase. Thus we have on the one side a more or less degrading marriage, and on the other side a number of women who cannot command an entry into that profession, but who must give up health and enjoyment of life in a losing battle with the world.—Mona Caird in Westminster Review.

A Girl's Toilet Articles.

A sensible girl will not keep a lot of cosmetics and drugs on her toilet table, but there are a few articles she should always have in a convenient place. She should have an array of glass stopped bottles containing alcohol, alum, camphor, borax, ammonia and glycerine or vaseline. A little camphor and water may be used as a wash for the mouth and throat if the breath is not sweet. Powdered alum applied to a fever sore will prevent it from becoming very unsightly or noticeable. Insect stings or eruptions on the skin are relieved by alcohol. A few grains of alum in a glass of water will relieve people whose hands perspire very freely, rendering them unpleasantly moist. A few drops of sulphuric acid in the water are also beneficial for this purpose and are more desirable for those whose feet perspire freely. We should always recommend care in the use of scented soap; in many cases the perfume is simply a disguise for poor quality. A good glycerine or honey soap is always preferable. Of course one may rely on scented soap from a high class manufacturer, but it usually costs more than it is worth. In addition to the soap for bathing, white castile should be kept for washing the hair. Occasionally a little tea or ammonia may be used for this purpose, but it is usually too harsh in its effects.—Rural New Yorker.

Is Thanks a Compensation?

There is a nasty little abbreviation going the rounds. It has been caught up, and has a run of its own. It means: I mean "obliged." People used to say, "I thank you," "I am obliged to you." Now, when you pick a young woman out of a ditch, she snips out "thanks," and skips off as if the matter were square. You wipe the sand off your sheep and meditate. Or if, going home at night, after a hard day's work, you secure a seat in a car and a woman comes in, you rise promptly and tender it to her; she sweeps her ample silk into the gap, and a small "thanks" floats through the air to you. Is it compensative?

If that woman had only looked you straight in your eye and said, "Sir, you are very kind, and I am greatly obliged to you, you would have felt not only paid, but would have a great deal to spare otherwise. To stand for an hour would be easy, for a happy exhilaration would put life into your whole frame. But to be paid with an abbreviation! I once had a manuscript returned as follows: "Dear Sir—We return your manuscript, with many thanks. You were very kind to have allowed us the pleasure of perusing it. By this time you will have found out that to make it unjust to detain your valuable paper, leads us to return it." Bless my soul! but I believe I was glad to get back that last time I published.—M. Maurice, M. D., in Globe-Democrat.

The Ideal Woman.

The ideal woman of the future must be a woman of grand and strong physique. Bulwer says "the match for beauty is a man, not a money chest." Equally true is that the match for the ideal man, the coming Twentieth century man, is a woman, not a bundle of aches and pains. And woman will not have gone far in her research for health before she will have discovered that her dress is a fetter self imposed, which she herself must summon strength to break. She must have the courage to cast off fashion plate and go back to the freedom and grace of the old Greek ideals, and find in the deep bosomed Junos and the stately, well poised Venuses of classic days some

Gen. Grant's Reason.

A Boston gentleman has the following lines in the handwriting of Gen. U. S. Grant, written and signed by him in 1880. The reason therein cited for being a Republican is as pertinent today as eight years ago:

"There is not a president in this vast nation where a Democrat cannot cast his ballot and have it counted as cast, no matter what the predominance of the opposite party. He can vote his political opinions, even if he is one among thousands, without fear and without proscription on account of his opinions. There are fourteen states and territories in some others, where Republicans have not this privilege. This is one reason why I am a Republican. U. S. GRANT."

JOTTINGS.

—The class in light gymnastics, taught by Mr. W. W. Martin, will meet at the Y. M. C. A. again this evening and thereafter Friday and Saturday evening of each week.

—The members of the Women's Temperance Aid Society will serve coffee and sandwiches in Reform Hall election day, all day and evening; and the returns from the election will be given from that point.

—A size in a coat is an inch, a size in underwear is two inches, a size in a sock is one inch, in a collar one-half an inch, in shoes one-sixth of an inch, in trousers one inch, gloves one-quarter of an inch, and in hats one-eighth of an inch.—EX.

—The manager of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company has made arrangements with the Western Union Telegraph Company for all election returns and will furnish the E. S. subscribers at the rate of three dollars apiece.

—A uniformed contingent from the Plainfield Republican clubs visited Westfield last night and made a creditable appearance in the Republican parade. The boom of the light artillery cannon was heard in Plainfield. Most residences were handsomely illuminated. With refreshments at the wind-up, all had a good time. The Plainfielders returned home late.

MCKENZIE LANDS IN JAIL.

The Tramp-Pretender in a Peck of Trouble.

[From the New Brunswick Home News.]

Edward Hugh Mackenzie, the Scotch tramp who claimed to be an heir to great wealth and married a farmer's daughter near New Brunswick, has been cast into jail at Somerville, and his wife is said to be in the poorhouse awaiting the arrival from this world of one of a possible heir to Edward's expectations.

Mackenzie is boarding at the county's expense on account of charges brought against him by the merchants and others of Somerville, for pretending to deliver unto him clothes and other articles under the specious promises of settling for them when the ship comes in. But the ship he looked for never came, and consequently the bogus heir has come to grief.

Mr. Johnson, Mackenzie's father-in-law, received a letter a few days ago from Mackenzie's brother, who is a mate on one of the Pacific Ocean steamers, stating that the real Duke Mackenzie back to England when his money ran out in this country again, if he will go as he wants him to, but his duke won't go to take Mackenzie's wife.

Mackenzie, it seems, got into trouble in England and his wife left him and came to America bound, for the Sandwich islands, but Mackenzie followed her to New York.

His wife is thoroughly tired of him and wrote her father to take her home, but the old people have not as yet responded.

THE HON. JOHN ULRICH.

Third District Assemblyman. Candidate for Re-Election.

From The Legislative Manual of the State of New Jersey we excerpt portions of the biographical sketch of Assemblyman John Ulrich. He was born in the city of New York on September 16th, 1857, and is consequently thirty-one years of age. In 1871 he came to Plainfield and was placed in the Plainfield High School, completing his preparatory course in the Post-Graduating class.

He subsequently entered a classical course in the University of the City of New York and was admitted as an Attorney-at-Law in 1882. The first political office he held was that of City Judge of Plainfield, which position he so acceptably filled two years and a half. At the last State election he was elected to represent this, the Third, District in the Assembly, receiving a majority of 677 votes over his opponent, which was the largest majority ever given in the District.

Judge Ulrich made indeed a bright record for himself as a member of the last Legislature. To him was accorded the honor of swearing in the members of the House of Assembly, and he was assigned the chairmanship of the Committee on Ways and Means. As a member of the Committee on Corporations he served with honesty and fidelity, nor was he wanting in looking after the general interests of Plainfield. By his tact, judgment and discretion the "Fire Department act" for the benefit of this city passed the House of Assembly within three days after the introduction of the bill. He reported a bill in relation to personal taxation, where-over personal property is found, and was instrumental in its speedy passage. This act imposes an assessment of over $70,000 in this city on non-residents who own personal property in Plainfield, and compels them to pay taxes into our city Treasury amounting to over fifteen hundred dollars. This District also fared better in representative offices, than ever in its history, in the selection of a member of the State School Board from this city, a Union County Jury Commissioner, a State Prison Inspector from Elizabeth, and a door-keeper of the Gentlemen's Gallery of the House of Assembly in the personage of Fire Chief Doane of this place. His entire legislature course has been marked with integrity, courtesy and honesty of purpose, and no better eulogy can be paid him than the words expressed by Senator Miller at the convention, when he said "Judge Ulrich and I were often brought together on important questions, and, before casting his vote on certain bills, he would often say 'What is right ? not 'What is policy ?'"

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Meet Long Enough to Borrow $300 and Adjourn One Week.

Mayor Cooley and Councilmen Emmons, Hegeman, McCutchen, McGee and Needham answered to Borough Clerk Arnold's roll call at the ninth meeting of Council last night. Councilman Riker was absent. After the reading and accepting of the minutes of the last meeting, the suspension of the regular order of business and the passage of Mr. Hegeman's resolution to borrow $300 for street expenses, Council adjourned till Friday, Nov. 9th.

TO-NIGHT'S MASS MEETING.

Good Protection Speakers at Music Hall.

Messrs. Howard MacSherry, of New Brunswick, and Oscar Hale, of Bloomfield, will address the Republican mass meeting at Stillman Music Hall to-night.

546 More Voters Here.

Thursday was the final registration day for Plainfield this year. Following are the figures from each ward, with those of 1884 compared:

First Ward	561	441
Second Ward	373	421
Third Ward	470	381
Fourth Ward	779	504
Total	2,383	1,827

Increase over 1884, 546.

M. E. Church to Have a Concert.

A concert will be given at the M. E. Church Thursday, Nov. 8th, at 8 p. m., by the Mme. Try Concert Company, assisted by Mr. Wm. F. Wentworth, who is considered the finest reader Boston produces. The artists are: Madame Try, violoncellist, contralto and pianist; Miss Eugenie Try, prima donna soprano and violinist; Miss Lulu Try, flute soloist and contralto; Miss Alta Try, solo violinist and soprano; Mr. Wm. F. Wentworth, reader and impersonator. The admission fee is set at 35 cents, with 15 cents additional for reserved seats.

Nationals 26 to 0.

The "Nationals", a foot-ball team, played an eleven captained by Vincent Rockwell yesterday afternoon on the Front street grounds. In the first half of the game there were no points made, but the second half resulted in the score of 26 to 0 in favor of the "Nationals".

DANIEL DOUGHERTY.

THE ELOQUENT IRISH LAWYER AT MUSIC HALL.

Pleading for Cleveland Before a Large Audience.—The Final Words for Free Trade.

Fully as large an audience as has been any of the local Republican assemblages that was present at the Democratic Mass Meeting at Music Hall last evening, although from two-thirds to three-fourths of the voters in the opinion of several judges were present to honor the Irishman, gratify their curiosity to see the man who nominated Cleveland and hear him, since he has a National reputation for eloquence, although it is said of him that every man he ever nominated has been defeated, as his friend Grover will be next Tuesday. Never did a political orator have a better chance for applause, and yet we have doubt if any one so distinguished so signally failed, but we will show this later on.

The chairman of the meeting was Otto Arens, a very tall, fine looking German residing on Park avenue. He is a New York importer, all of whose interests are on the Free Trade question, and the Protection of our home industries? He is looking after Otto Arens first, last and always.

The Secretary read a list of 40 names of persons as Vice Presidents, although only a few of them honored the occasion with their presence, some residing in Westfield and other points along the line, and a good portion of them are Republicans who have not the repotest idea of changing the faith that is in them, and are among the truest of Republicans. Their names were used without their knowledge or consent.

After the list was read, the orator of the evening, Hon. Daniel H. Dougherty, was introduced, and was greeted with the wildest of applause by the minority of the audience composing the Democracy, which made up in noise for what they lacked in numbers. Mr. Dougherty gracefully acknowledged the compliment in a few appropriate remarks, and then proceeded with his speech which received close attention throughout, and his jokes were much subjoyed and applauded. He has a very pleasing voice, a splendid delivery, and is a fine looking man generally.

At the outset, he said he proposed to address the audience as he would address a jury. We all know how a lawyer addresses a jury. They say the guilty of all the sins of the decalogue, but a smart lawyer before the jury may make him appear as white as snow. Mr. Dougherty is a smart lawyer, and he made the most of a bad case. He said he was not a politician, and believed that if the Democrats of New Jersey had been as well as they did in Philadelphia, they would not have sent him as a delegate to St. Louis, which was rather rough on the Democrats from their chosen champion. He attempted to show that the Democrats were not for Free Trade, notwithstanding the letter of the British Minister, trying to help elect Cleveland to benefit English industries; notwithstanding Col. Watterson, the foremost of Democrats in this campaign, who says that the Democrats mean Free Trade and nothing else; and also notwithstanding Senator Vest, Democrat, who says that the Democracy is engaged in a war of extermination, in a fight to the death, of Northern industries. Mr. Dougherty, as a delegate to the St. Louis Convention, knew or ought to know that as out and out a Free Trade plank was offered, to be inserted in the platform, and was greeted amid the wildest cheers of the Convention; he knows or ought to know that such a resolution was referred to the Committee on Resolutions, and that it was suppressed because of the anger and persistent objections and threats of only ex-Gov. Abbett, of New Jersey, and Senator Gorman, of Maryland, who knew that, while the Southern Democracy and Cleveland wanted Free Trade, they would not carry a single Northern State, not even New Jersey, if they should so boldly show their hand. But Mr. Dougherty was pleading as a lawyer, to save his client's scalp at all hazards.

He referred to the terrible panic in 1857, which the Republicans show was the result of Free Trade, but said the Republicans don't say anything about the panic of 1873, under our Protective system. Why should they? The panic of 1873 was due to speculation in new railroads and stocks, in which Jay Gould, Russell Sage and other monopolists were the engineers and chief beneficiaries, and wrecked so many Wall street speculators, and even conservative business concerns, that the influence of it was felt all over the country. Mr. Dougherty also failed to say that these very monopolists are now working for the success of the Democratic party, while their opponents, the Knights of Labor, from Mr. Powderly down, are doing their utmost as far as they can for the cause of Protection, represented by the Republican party in their leader, Gen. Harrison.

In fact all the Democratic National Committee are the worst kind of monopolists and the foe to the wage earner. The Committee are about all many millionaires, but take one as an example:

Mr. William L. Scott, of the Democratic National Committee, and Man Friday to Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, besides owning many miles of railroad, according to his own boast, operates three mines on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. Lord Fairfax is interested in them, with the other operators, to raise the pay of his miners five cents per ton on November 1st. Now he is the only one who refuses to do it. It is not impossible that the other parties to the agreement may be forced to keep their men down in order to compete with the Democratic nominee, and that District Assembly 135, Knights of Labor, may order a strike in the Scott mines. He has now 730 men employed, and they have been organizing all Summer.

The three miners that Mr. Cleveland's second kitchen Cabinet officer operates on the Baltimore & Ohio road are Atlantic Nos. 1 and 2 and Pacific. Mr. Scott has always paid his miners five cents less than other operators, and caused much unrest on the ground that all his coal went East. It was soon proved, however, that his shipments went via Ashtabula and the lakes, aggregated forty cars daily, and he was enabled to secure contracts at Chicago and Duluth at lower rates than any other operators because he paid his labor less. The miners began a strike to make him pay scale wages, but did not succeed. Then, in justice to the other operators, the miners agreed at the 2d February interstate meeting to accept a reduction from seventy-nine to seventy-four cents for the six months after May 1st. Mr. Scott then gave us to understand that on and after November 1st he would pay scale rates.

The Democratic National Committeeman from Pennsylvania is a large employer of labor, both on his railroads and his mines and other capitalistic enterprises. He has had frequent trouble with labor organizations on account of holding out against them, as in the above case, and would be very glad if all the Knights of Labor assemblies and trades unions could be destroyed. The majority of the native of his devoted advocacy of Cleveland and Free Trade, and the reason why he contributes so willingly to the campaign fund. He argues that under Free Trade the labor market would be suddenly thrown open to the world and large numbers of men could be shipped from some foreign pauper labor country to this so easily and confidently by the employer that such things as strikes or demands for increase of wages that seemed too loud to be refused would not be known.

In conclusion, we could follow the speaker to the end, and in like manner show the fallacy of his reasoning, but from the comments of those who heard him we think they saw through his points themselves.

He showed how the Republicans have always favored unnecessary taxation, intending, however, to make it appear that though they favor it, they did not bring it about. He quoted from Gen. Harrison's remarks in 1888 to show how the Republicans champion of Protection, urged it, but did not say that unnecessary taxation that the Republicans after eleven years control of the House reduced taxes 308 millions of dollars, while the Democrats, after eleven years of equal power reduced taxes but six millions. This might hurt his case, but the people know it just the same.

Mr. Dougherty concluded his speech at 9:30, and thereupon the audience dispersed.

AFTER WATCH AND MONEY.

A Borough Drummer Assaulted at Midnight.

Mr. R. A. Clark, a traveling salesman living in North Plainfield, has just reported an attack by a tramp at half-past one o'clock last Tuesday morning as he was passing a lonely spot near the old Cadmus saw-mill. The fellow asked him the time, and when he replied that he had none called him a liar and grappled, trying to wrench away Mr. Clark's gold watch. The drummer fought the man off with a walking-stick and escaped his designs. During the struggle the stem of the watch was twisted off.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Edwin S. Hooley, of Central avenue, has become a partner in the stock-brokerage firm of Ralston and Bass, New York.

Mr. Harry Starkey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was married to Miss Vinnie VanWhy, of Dunellen, by the Rev. Joseph Beers, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Skellenger, Nov. 1st, 1888. The bride's presentswere very beautiful and costly.

Mr. G. F. Bagley, formerly of the Chester Base Ball club of Chester, Pa., was in town to-day for the purpose of conferring with those interested in base ball about forming a professional base ball team for the New Jersey State League for the season of 1889, to be composed of Paterson, Elizabeth, Rahway, New Brunswick, Trenton, Burlington, Camden and Plainfield teams.

Those who know anything about Mr. Dorsey W. Hyde, of Woodland avenue, are aware that he is as good a composer of music as he is playing it, and there is much consequent interest in the announcement that one of his compositions is to be rendered by Mr. Wm. H. Sherwood, "the great American pianist", at the vocal and instrumental concert to be given Nov. 20th at Stillman Music Hall. This entertainment will be given under the direction of Mr. W. Ward Stephens, of Newark, who has warm friends in Plainfield, and who himself is a pianist of no mean ability. Other interesting numbers on the programme are to be contributed by Miss Mary Dunn, soprano of St. Stephen's church, New York; Mr. Wm. R. Williams, tenor of Dr. Cuyler's church, Brooklyn; Mr. W. E. Harper, solo-baritone of Dr. Storr's church, Brooklyn; the Haydn Trio Club, Mr. Milton H. Gruet, violinist, and Mr. Philip Egner, cello.

The Rev. J. James Baker, a retired Baptist clergyman, age 78, died suddenly at his home on West Second street last evening. He had been out on the street during the day and had been bright and cheery, but at about six o'clock he arose from his chair, staggered convulsively, and had expired before he could be assisted to his bed. He leaves a widow, four sons and four daughters. These are Dr. Benjamin N. Baker, of Rhinebeck, N. Y.; Wm. H., druggist, and Lansing R., of Clinton, N. J.; John J., of White Haven, Pa.; Mrs. Ursula Drake, of Brooklyn; Mrs. Davis, of Red Bank; Mrs. Herbert Ryer, of New York; and Mrs. L. C. Marsh, of Perth Amboy. Mr. Baker preached at the Somertown Baptist church during war times, and his last charge was at Marlboro, N. J. He at one time gave the right hand of fellowship to the Rev. Dr. David J. Yerkes, the quarter-centenarian pastor of the Plainfield First Baptist church, and was in turn welcomed into this congregation by the former pastor-loner, two or three years ago.

—The regular meeting of the McAll Auxiliary will be held at Mrs. A. C. Baldwin's, Park avenue, Tuesday, Nov. 6th, at 11 a. m.

LAST ARGUMENTS AND APPEALS

And Last Explanations, Last Speeches and Parades—Voters Will Do the Rest—New York's Polls Must Close at 4 p. m.—Obedience to the Law First in Importance.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Judge Barrett decides that the law requiring the polls to close at 4 p. m. is mandatory. This is shown by several things in the context. For example, the law provides that immediately after 4 o'clock the inspectors shall write "Not" after the name of every name registered for which no vote has been cast, and shall then immediately begin to canvass the vote. To extend the voting after 4 p. m. as fixed would require three distinct directions of the law to be violated. The closing of the polls means the closing of the voting. It cannot mean the closing of the peephole where the boxes are, for the law expressly says that the premises must not be closed until the canvass is finished. This is a provision for allowing citizens to watch the count.

The constitution confers the right of suffrage, but leaves to the legislature the power of means to exercise that right. If the legislature makes inadequate provision there is no more remedy in this matter than in regard to other laws of defective laws. The remedy is by legislative amendment. The courts can declare a law unconstitutional and void, but cannot alter a constitutional law because it is defective. If the inspectors receive votes after 4 p. m. they not only violate the law, but the validity of the whole election may be put in question. It is important that no citizen be deprived of his vote. It is more important that the laws be obeyed and that the entire community be not put in peril of disfranchisement.

BUFFALO HAS A SENSATION.

President Cleveland Telegraphs an Indignant Denial to an Old Charge.

BUFFALO, Nov. 3.—A large and enthusiastic mass meeting at Music hall last night, which was presided over by James Mooney, ex-president of the Land league, was addressed by Secretary of the Treasury Fairchild, who was treated to a sensation in the preliminaries. The afternoon issue of a Buffalo evening paper published an affidavit made by Edwin C. Robbins, claiming to be a room mate of Grover Cleveland in his student days, charging that at the time he was nominated for mayor Mr. Cleveland had asserted that he would never go on a ticket with an Irishman, and on other occasions had declared he would never vote for an Irishman, and particularly not for an Irish Roman Catholic. The former law partner of the president, W. S. Rosell, immediately telegraphed to the Wyoming Democrat denying the affidavit and the following reply was read to the mass meeting by the chairman, J. R. Mooney:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Nov. 2, 1888.

Mr. Wilson Rosell:

I am much surprised that at this late day any person in Buffalo should make the accusation you quote, or that any newspaper publication should give currency to such a lie. It was promptly denied when first started some years ago, and the meeting at which you have proven by the sort of my Irish friends in the counties pens g. I emphatically deny the allegation made in the affidavit, because these charges are so related as my home and be cause I cannot fairly or expressing my amusement that such a charge should be made even by the basest ingrates. GROVER CLEVELAND.

A great sensation was created by the dispatch, which was hurriedly observed to the echo. Secretary Fairchild's address was a careful and exhaustive discussion of the condition of the nation's finances.

MURCHISON WROTE IT HIMSELF.

He Lives and Breathes and Has a Being. The Idea All His Own.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 3.—The Times of this city, the paper that first printed the Lord Sackville letter to the Pomona Enquirer, publishes what the editor claims are the real facts concerning the letter. A Murchison West correspondent. The Times says: "Information has been gathered directly from the few persons who are on the inside and possessed of all the facts in the case. The idea of writing the letter to Minister West originated with Murchison himself in the latter part of August or early in September. He is a reputable citizen of Pomona, in this county, and is of English parentage.

The conception of the letter was his own, and the only confidential friend in the preparation, Murchison said at the outset, and before sending the letter, that the minister would be addressed, and apparently, but to get Minister West's opinion on the views expressed in the letter. Murchison's letter was dated Sept. 4 and West's answer was received on the following letter was received in Pomona Sept. 20, and kept by the person addressed, 19, a full month, when it was handed to Hon. Chauncey W. Bell, the city attorney of Pomona, and laid before W. F. Fitzgerald, a member of the state Republican committee, Henry G. Gage, delegate and member of the state convention, Harrison Gray Otis, the editor of The Los Angeles Times, and one other local candidate. They saw in the letter a boon to the Whig party in a political point of view, and it was unanimously determined by the persons present to make the letter public without delay, which was done on the date of the first publication here being Oct. 21.

A QUESTION IN VIRGINIA.

The Chief Supervisor Misconstrues the Election Law.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Nov. 3.—Much excitement and no little indignation prevails in this section of the state over certain instructions issued to the Federal supervisors of election by Chief Supervisor Linsley, of the western judicial circuit. It is claimed that Mr. Linsley has exceeded the authority and duties of supervisors in cities and towns of 20,000 inhabitants, where they have the right to prevent, wrongly, etc., from the supervisors in counties where they can act only as witnesses of the election. It is also charged that Linsley has in other respects perverted the spirit and intent of the law. The Daily News editorially charges that the instructions are in direct contravention of section 2,020, R. S. of the United States, and authorizes and commands Linsley to arrest and jail every supervisor of election, in counties, who undertakes to exceed his authority as defined in said section. The News says: "Under Linsley's instructions the supervisors may steal the state."

Mr. Blaine in Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 3.—James G. Blaine was greatly strained in this city at noon yesterday. He was met at the depot by the Young Men's Republican club and escorted to the Green, where Mr. Blaine was introduced to a vast audience of 7,500, by ex-Governor Harrison, as "the distinguished representative of protection to America." Mr. Blaine's remarks were very brief. After the speech he left for Bridgeport, where he took a special train for Derby.

DERBY, Conn., Nov. 3.—On arriving here Mr. Blaine and party were escorted to the residence of Mr. Thomas Wallace, where lunch was served. They were then driven to the Trotting park, where an audience of probably 10,000 people gave Mr. Blaine an enthusiastic reception, and he responded with a strong protective speech.

Chicago's Final Spasm.

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—The indications are that the parade with which Democrats will close the campaign to-night will be much the biggest political demonstration ever seen in the state. The estimates of the number of men in line vary from 25,000 to 40,000. Clubs are coming from all parts of the state. The representation of business men will be particularly large. The board of trade and allied interests will have about 5,000 men. The produce commission men will show 1,200. Railway employes, clerks, dry goods men and every line of retail trade will also have clubs in line. All the candidates on the state Democratic ticket will review the procession. The Republicans are having their parade this afternoon. All the bands within 100 miles have been engaged for the two demonstrations.

Harvard Republicans.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Tremont Temple was crowded and an overflow meeting was held in the Meionaon last evening, the occasion being a rally under the auspices of the Harvard Republican club, intended to offset a similar demonstration made by the Harvard College Tariff Reform league two weeks ago. Rev. E. E. Hale presided at the Temple and spoke, and was followed by ex-Governor Robinson, Judge E. R. Hoar, Senator G. F. Hoar, Col. N. P. Hallowell, Henry Cabot Lodge and ex-Governor Long. A letter was read from John G. Whittier. John M. Merriam, Harvard '80, presided at the Meionaon, and the speakers were Judge Hoar, Rev. Dr. Hale, Col. Hallowell, Col. W. W. Russell, of South Carolina, and others.

Another Alleged Forgery.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Col. George Bliss, counsel for W. W. Dudley, says he will begin several suits to-day against papers which have published the Dudley circular, alleged by the Independent to be a forgery. He says, however, that he believes the national Democratic committee are the parties guilty of the forgery. He says the circular, as published here, differed in a dozen ways from the one published at Indianapolis, showing, he argues, that there was not only forgery, but very cunning work. He does not expect the suits will come to trial until after election. He has not decided whether to sue members of the Democratic committee or not.

One Last Word.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The Democratic national and campaign committees, through Chairman Harnum and Brice, have issued an address to the people of the United States, in which they make a final appeal for support of the Democratic ticket. They say: "The methods pursued in the contest against us are plain indications of what the future history of the country would be if the faction now contending in the name of the Republican party should achieve power." The address closes with a warning to good citizens to be on the watch against frauds at the polls. No reference is made to money matters.

A Question of Responsibility.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Patrick Ford issues a long statement in denial of The Boston Pilot's declaration that the Irish-American societies are responsible for the dynamite clause in the proposed extradition treaty with England. Ford gives telegrams from Senators Dolph, Platt, Evarts, Ethridge and Riddleberger denying the Pilot's assertions. He also gives an address, signed by himself, Patrick E. Quinlan, Dr. Cronin and many others, denying The Pilot's statement, and declaring that Senator Morgan is responsible for the clause.

False Registration at Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Nov. 3.—It is stated that 700 names have been detected in the registers that are not entitled to vote, some of whom are dead, and others residing in other districts, or wholly imaginary voters. Some registered in two districts, which do away with the use of the streets mentioned, while others are registered from houses where they are not even known by name. Several cases have been taken to have the fraudulent names stricken out, and all who are not entitled to vote will be arrested at the polls.

Mr. Blaine's Closing Programme.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Mr. Blaine arrived from Connecticut in the evening in the private car of President Charlton of the New York and New Haven railroad. He speaks in Williamsburg (North Brooklyn) this afternoon, and in Brooklyn this evening. He and his family leave for Augusta Sunday evening.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The Young Men's Independent club, of which Hugh J. Grant, Tammany nominee for mayor, is a member, indorsed Mayor Hewitt's candidacy for reelection last night.

A Shrewd and Youthful Forger.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 3.—When the Charles Bodman Tobacco Warehouse company announced its books Thursday a startling forgery by a former employe, Charles Tinkler, was discovered. It is supposed that the latter threw forged checks of $5,000 each, on the First National, Mercantile National and Commercial banks. The forgeries were discovered on Saturday, but were not committed on Sept. 24, 26 and last week, so shrewdly done as not to come to light until Nov. 1. The forger, Tinkler, is only 19 years old, and was employed by the Bodman company as a collector. During the Latonia races he informed Mr. Hoffman, the proprietor of the warehouse, that he had an offer to invest in a stable, holding $10,000 for a $10 a day, and intended to accept it. Since he has not been heard from. It has developed that Tinkler has led a very fast life during the past year.

Found Guilty of Swindling.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 3.—George Dean, a wiry looking old fellow with a very decided brogue, pleaded guilty in the new court house to-day to swindling a young woman out of $1,000 by the confidence game. The charge against him was "old naturally, although probably considerably over, and despite his years he is a very active man. He was arrested on the charge of the theft of Bridget Dolan, who lives at 1,000 Tasker street, and who was induced by Dean to withdraw the money from the Girard Trust company and hand it to him for safe keeping. The money was to be returned to her on demand, but when she called for it Dean denied all knowledge of the transaction, and applied such opprobrious words to the dishonor and contempt of the Almighty God." Dean is also under indictment on at least one other charge of swindling.

THAT SHOOTING AFFAIR.

It Leads to Damaging Revelations Against the Times.

THUGS AND LIARS AS WITNESSES

The "Thrasher" Charged with Filling London with Human Refuse—"Parnell Commission" Counsel Come to Grief. It is Called "Wallachian and Crimea" News.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—The Kavanagh-Cox affair has created a tremendous sensation in Parnellite circles, and has also stirred up considerable feeling among the Tories. The examination of Kavanagh in the police court has proved the reckless manner in which The Times has gone about obtaining evidence to sustain its case, as well as the disregard of truth shown by its agents, whether upon their own or their employers' account. The witnesses in the case showed conclusively that even humble workmen were paid £9 per week—a handsome sum, if they ever had it—their lives—to remain in London and answer to their names when called to the witness box, and the testimony altogether showed that the witnesses brought, including the prisoner, Kavanagh, are of the kind not to be believed under oath, if their antecedents are known.

The Evening Star (Parnellite) heads its report of the Kavanagh-Cox examination, "Walterian and Crime," and accuses The Times of furnishing funds with human refuse in expectation of being allowed to disgrace the courts with that sort of witnesses in its behalf. London, The Star continues, has been turned into a sort of Texas, and Fleet street, at the expense of The Times, is infested, in debating rooms and taverns, with scoundrels carrying revolvers and filled with strange oaths and whisky. The admission of Cox that he could not, or would not, make under oath before the commission the statement he made to his employers—the agents of The Times—upon which his subpœna was based, has led a great many persons to believe that The Times case is founded upon a conglomeration of falsehood, forgery, suspicion and expectation which, under the searching light of cross examination and the burning heat of rebuke, suffered in a dozen ways from the one published at Indianapolis, showing, he argues, that there was not only forgery, but very cunning work. He does not expect the suits will come to trial until after election. He has not decided whether to sue members of the Democratic committee or not.

WITH REVOLVER AND RAZOR.

Unexplained Suicide of a Wealthy and Talented Woman.

DENVER, Nov. 3.—The Rocky Mountain Barnacre, one of the best known women in Rockland county, committed suicide yesterday. Her body was in a with but gunshot upon close the Hook monument, which, so far as is known, she lived happily. A few days ago she was taken ill, and inflammation of the lungs set in. She was found dead in bed, and all the evidence of suicide, including the natural presumption was that she had died of hemorrhage. Her body was not then disturbed, but a physician, an undertaker and Coroner Ackerson, from Rockland Lake, were notified.

Later in the day an examination was made. One of the woman's nails grasped a revolver pressed against the body, with the muzzle pointing outward. Her head was moved, when it was found that her throat was cut. Besides this ugly wound a bullet hole was seen in her head. After an examination it was decided that the woman had cut her throat and then, to make sure of her work, had fired a shot upward through the wound into her head. This is the natural supposition from the facts that are now known. The coroner has taken charge of the body, but the inquest has been deferred.

Mrs. Barmore was a woman widely known and universally respected. She possessed a remarkable degree of intelligence, and until recently did considerable literary work, being a clear and graceful writer. She was the possessor of the handsomest, largest and most valuable flock of Angora goats in this state.

Breaking Up a Bad Gang.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa., Nov. 3.—For some time the citizens of Mercersburg have been annoyed by a gang of toughs, thieves and young desperadoes. Within three months ten stables and several fine dwellings and stores have been distroyed, the loss footing nearly $100,000. The council has offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest of the offender or offenders. Today Charles Fendrick, a son of Philip Fendrick, a leading lawyer of Mercersburg, was arrested, charged with the crime. His father went his bail. He left Mercersburg and is now a fugitive from justice. The citizens of Mercersburg are more determined to rearrest Fendrick and capture the rest of the band. Fendrick admits his guilt, but stoutly denies that he had confederates in the diabolical work. The penalty is twenty years' imprisonment.

He Despises Private Detectives.

MONTREAL, Nov. 3.—At the opening of the court of queen's bench for the Novumber term, Judge Church, in his charge to the grand jury, advised the establishment of a provincial detective system, under the sole control of the executive, and denounced in the most scathing terms private detective agencies. He said: "There is, to my mind, something outrageous in men assuming for a consideration to become paid spies over their fellow citizens in the interest of any one saving their services to shadow and track them down, etc., to report without responsibility on the private lives of those whom they shadow, or to report regarding their families, and this only too often for not the most laudable purpose."

Discovering a Waterfall in Colorado.

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, Colo., Nov. 3.—A hunting party returned from the mountains last night and reported the discovery of a wonderful waterfall hitherto unknown. Though not equal to Niagara in volume, it was thought to exceed it in beauty. The plunge is 1,000 feet, twenty-five miles from here, and is supposed never to have been visited by white men before. The party discovered also the bodies of four of the band, and the water glides over the rocky edge, spreading out into a thin sheet as it falls a distance of 130 feet to the bottom of the canyon. It is thought that it will be named Rocky Mountain Falls.

Kindness to His Only Fault.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., Nov. 3.—Cashier Canfy, of the Berkshire National bank, has resigned at the request of the directors of the institution. President Hunter states that the accounts are being perfected. A prominent director in an interview says Canfy's system of bookkeeping was unsatisfactory to the directors, and that he accepted paper which, however, is gilt edged, without consulting the committee of directors, to whom such matters should have been referred. In fact Mr. Canfy, whose honesty is unquestioned, was considered too kind hearted in his accommodation of the patrons of the bank.

A $75,000 Cyclone.

LAPORTE, Ind., Nov. 3.—A cyclone struck this place, coming from the northwest. Union hall was demolished and a large number of houses were unroofed and blown down. Thousands of dollars' worth of timber many blocks away. Nearly all the stores in the business portion of the town suffered great damage. The residence of Samuel Walker was blown to atoms and his children rolled about on the ground. The mother was seriously hurt. No other injuries were reported. The loss on property is $75,000. Reports of damage are coming from all sections of the county.

Assaulted in the Dark.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Nov. 3.—Gen. Asa Bushnell is confined to his house, the result of a brutal assault made upon him Thursday night. A brick which was thrown struck the general just over the left eye, knocking him down, and in falling he struck an iron fence, cutting his head badly. There is a cut over his eye, his jaw is badly bruised, in addition to a long cut on the face, and two teeth are knocked out. Darkness prevented an accurate description of the assailants from being obtained.

One of the Hatfield-McCoys Caught.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 3.—Detectives and the West Virginia contingent of the Hatfield-McCoy gang collided last Monday, and the entire party of detectives were arrested. Ellison Mounts and a man named Chambers Chambers was shot in the hand and escaped, but not until he had shot one of the detectives in the arm. Mounts was captured and frightfully beaten before subdued. He was taken to Pikeville, Ky., and lodged in jail. The detective who was shot is named J. W. Napier.

The Fronts Are Not Heeded.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 3.—The management of the Reading Railroad company has sent out a large number of circulars to stockholders requesting them to give proxies to President Corbin to vote as the voting and not, executive. One of the objects of the meeting, it is understood, will be to increase the capital stock. It is also reported that the Reading will probably be largely interested in the building of the new Broad street line in the vicinity of the city hall.

Dissolution Declared.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—The Times of Natal says that Dunlop, the Natal Democratic leader, has declared in reply to the Natal Dutch that the Natal Democratic party is ready to dissolve the Natal Democratic party.

SACKVILLE IS ANNOYED.

Denies All the Alleged Interviews with Reporters.

HE WILL LEAVE THIS MONTH.

Remaining in Seclusion—His Dismissal Would Have Been Considered a Cause Belli Among European Nations—Speculations as to His Successor.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—The interviews and statements which have been attributed to the British minister during the excitement following the publication of the Murchison letter have annoyed Lord Sackville extremely. He says that all statements attributed to him are false, as he has not seen a reporter since the first day's events growing out of the letter, and then he simply said that in view of the breach of confidence the writing of the letter was a mistake.

The curtains are all the windows of the mansion occupied by Minister Sackville are closely drawn. The minister himself has remained indoors and will not appear in public. He will leave here when his preparations are completed—possibly about the latter part of the present month. After completing the necessary forms incident to assuming his title he will take his seat as a peer in the house of lords.

It is intimated in diplomatic circles that the action taken in his case by the American government will be regarded as a casus belli among European nations, but was not so regarded toward the United States on account of American methods.

Speculation is rife as to who will be appointed minister to the succeed to the mission. Second Secretary Herbert has been formally designated to take charge of the legation until the return of Mr. Edwards, who is now on a visit to Europe.

The report of Mr. Phelps to Mr. Bayard upon his recent conferences with Lord Salisbury on the fisheries question is still withheld. It is understood to be quite voluminous. The ground upon which he placed Lord Salisbury's declination to take any serious action in the matter is that the negotiations were private and confidential, and therefore not a subject of serious diplomatic conference.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—In diplomatic circles here the suggestion that Lord Dufferin shall succeed Lord Sackville as minister to Washington is regarded as absurd. Lord Dufferin has been appointed to the ambassadorship of the first rank in the diplomatic service and is eligible to the highest pension. If he were appointed minister to Washington he would occupy a second class position, with diminished pay.

To the general public in England Lord Sackville is almost unknown, and this is taken to account for the absence of public excitement over his dismissal. The newspapers keep up a running fire of comments on the matter.

A Stone Thrower Killed.

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—As a car on the Garfield avenue and State line electric motor Centre street, John Miller, a striker, threw a stone at the car and hit the driver. An officer was on the car, drawing his revolver, jumping off, fired a shot after Miller, who started to run away. Miller was afterwards found in a hole with his neck broken. He had a bullet wound in the right leg and his pockets were filled with stones.

A Fatal Step.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 3.—Cornelius Richards, of 53 Chamber street, a laborer, had his right arm blown away and his skull fractured during a Democratic ratification meeting last night. He was standing on the platform of a cannon belonging to a Democratic battery as it was being discharged, and sustained the injuries above stated.

BODIES HURLED FIFTY FEET.

Frightful Explosion of a Powder Mill—Five Killed and Several Hurt.

READING, Pa., Nov. 3.—A terrible accident, resulting in the death of five men and injury of many others, occurred on the farm of George Engard, in Ontelaunee township, this county, where a steam threshing machine was in operation. The boiler exploded with fearful force, carrying destruction on every hand.

The killed are: Irvin Dautlebarger, aged 19; Joseph Mashner, aged 16; Isaac Mashner, aged 50; Edward Hever, aged 16; Joseph Hever, aged about 31.

The bodies of all five were hurled from thirty to fifty feet and were terribly mutilated.

George Hinnershitz, Sr., was badly injured about the head and cannot recover. Minnie Bear, aged 11, suffered a concussion of the brain and will die. Engineer Hoover received severe bruises. John Riehel was internally injured, and two or three others received injuries of a most serious character. The boiler is supposed to have been rotten and totally unfit for use. A coroner's jury simply found that the deaths were caused by an accident.

Struck Down His Wagon and Killed.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 3.—As Austin Minturn, a G. A. R. veteran, was driving a wagon on Troost avenue, his horse shied and Minturn was thrown violently to the street. When passers by reached him, he said, "Take me home," and became unconscious. In a few minutes he was dead. His spinal cord was broken.

Protected His Sister-in-Law.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., Nov. 3.—News reaches here of the arrest, in Pittsburg, of Daniel Leahy, until recently a well known resident of Niagara Falls, on the charge of killing the husband of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Miller. Miller brutally assaulted his wife, when Leahy interfered and shot Miller dead.

An Extreme Remedy

It was time to go, by the steamer's clock yet she lingered still at her dingy dock, and the master-mariner paced, and the captain roared, and the rain it steadily poured and poured on the luckless men who still implored that obstinate mule to go aboard. With rigid limbs and a stony stare, with ears firm set and its tail in the air, and an aw-he-haw-he long and loud, that horrible mule defied the crowd, and heedless of hunch and kick and nudge, it stood, stock still in the muck and sludge—a mule with an everlasting grudge that had taken an oath it wouldn't budge.

"Let me take that mule," said a passer by; "I'll lead him or know the reason why." I've had some dealings with men and mules, and learned some things not taught in the schools." Then well made way and the man drew near, and into the unresisting ear of the hapless beast he sang—for shame!—he sang of "The Letter That Never Came," With a voice like a wheezy fabricnet's he warbles the song, "Sweet Violets." Bewildered by the dismal sound, the tortured mule turns half way round, and full in its face the man tied up since the crowning woe they call "White Wings." With a trembling step at each fell note, the animal backs into the boat 'Tis done. But the mule—ah! well-a-day. 'Tis in corpse that steamer carries away.—Chicago Tribune.

"Ain't It Cute?"

A lady recently visited the Lick observatory and asked to see Sirius, the Dog Star. The learned scientists at once turned the great telescope on Sirius, and the lady looked at it long and earnestly. Then turning around to the scientific gentlemen who were waiting for her to make some astronomical remark, she placidly murmured, "Ain't it cute!" just as if she had been viewing the latest thing in poodles.—New York Tribune.

A Triumph of Art.

Customer (in "hand-me-down" store)—This suit is all full of creases and wrinkles. It looks as if it had been slept in.

Dealer—Dot vas our ladest improved tourist suit; mineer; noddings like it in Viladelphia. Dot suit make all your friends dink you shust return vrom a tervelve months tour oof Europe. No extra charge vor dose wrinkles. Dey goes mit de suit.—Philadelphia Record.

A Trifle Skeptical.

Minister—Well, Bobby, what did you learn at school today?

Bobby—I learned that the world is round, and turns on hinges like that globe in the parlor.

Minister—Well, what did you think of that?

Bobby—I think they're asking me to believe a good deal for a small boy.—New York Sun.

Reassuring.

Mrs. Marigold (hostess at a fashionable reception)—Come, Mr. Swinburne, let me introduce you to Miss Richgirl. We want you two to fill up a set.

Mr. S. (hesitatingly)—I don't know that I care to be introduced to Miss Richgirl. She seems to be so haughty, and all that, don't you know. I am afraid she wouldn't care to dance with me.

Mrs. M.—Oh, don't have any fears on that score, Mr. Swinburne. Miss Richgirl ain't a bit perticular who she dances with.—Yankee Blade.

On Edge.

"Smith is a mighty mean man, I say," exclaimed Jenkins warmly.

"Why, what has Smith ever done to you?" asked Binkerton, surprised.

"Bet me $10 I could not hit a barn door with a revolver at five paces," said Jenkins angrily. "Turned me into taking him up. Got me to pull the trigger, too. Measured off the five paces in presence of a lot of witnesses. Gave me a revolver loaded, and then set the barn door up edgewise."—Somerville Journal.

He Knew the Word to Draw Sympathy.

Tramp—Couldn't yez help a poor man, sor, who's just afther gettin' over a bad sick-ness?

Agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Vice—H'm! What was the matter, my poor fellow?

Tramp—Sure, it's on the island I've been, sor, for three months back, recoverin' from the effects av an attack av blepharoma-la—Life.

Resenting an Insult.

Robinson—Jackson, I hear that Brown called you a liar last night.

Jackson (hotly)—Yes, he called me a liar.

Robinson—And didn't you resent it?

Jackson (warmly)—Resent it? You bet I did. I told him that was simply a matter of opinion and not of fact. No man can call me a liar and get away with it.—Life.

One Thing Certain.

First Club Lounger—After all, Mackenzie and the German doctors are agreed on the main point at issue.

Second Club Lounger—What is that?

"Why, that the late emperor is dead."—New York Tribune.

Bonding Their Never Grow Weary.

Angeline—What are you going to have on your fall hat?

Emeline—White wings.

Angeline—White wings! What for?

Emeline—Because I can get them for a song.—Time.

The Wandering Jew—The Tradition as Given in 1228.

The legend of the Wandering Jew was brought to Europe from the east late in the 13th century, after the first crusade under Peter the Hermit. In the year 1228 this legend was told for the first time by an Armenian bishop, then lately arrived from the Holy Land, to the monks of St. Alban, in England. According to his narrative, Joseph Cartaphilus was doorkeeper at the prætorium of Pontius Pilate when Jesus was led away to be crucified. As Jesus halted upon the threshold of the pitiless Cartaphilus struck him on the loins and said, "Move faster! Why do you stop here?" Jesus, the legend continues, turned round to him and said, with a severe look: "I go, but you will await my coming." Cartaphilus, who was then 30 years old, and who since then has always returned to that age when he had completed a hundred years, has ever since been awaiting the coming of our Lord and the end of the world. He was said to suffer under the peculiar doom of constantly traversing the earth on foot. The general belief was that he was a man of great piety, of sad and gentle manners, of few words, often weeping, seldom smiling, and content with the scantiest and simplest food and the most poverty stricken garments. Such was the tradition which gradually assumed various local forms, and many languages have introduced into song and story. As the ages rolled on new circumstances were added to this tale. Paul of Eitzen, a German bishop, wrote in a letter to a friend that he had met the Wandering Jew at Hamburg in 1564 and had a long conversation with him. He represented him to be fifty years of age. His hair was long, and he went barefoot. His dress consisted of very full breeches, a short petticoat or kilt reaching to the knees, and a coat so long that it descended to his heels. Instead of Joseph Cartaphilus, he was then called Ahasuerus.

The Crescent and the Cross.

Warburton, in his work on the crescent and the cross, relates the following incident: "The crescent was the symbol of the city of Byzantium, and was adopted by the Turks. This device is of ancient origin, as appears from several medals, and took its rise from an event thus related by a native of Byzantium: Philip, the father of Alexander the Great, meeting with great difficulties in carrying on the siege of the city, set the workmen one dark night to undermine the walls. Luckily for the besieged, a young moon suddenly appeared and the designs of the besiegers were discovered, in acknowledgment whereof the Byzantines erected a statue to Diana, and the crescent became the symbol of the state. If this is correct it antedates B. C. 336, when the death of Philip took place. In Leland's 'Life of Philip of Macedon,' it is related that at the siege of Byzantium a bright meteor appeared in the air. The meteor, which had appeared so opportunely to direct their motions, the Byzantines ascribed to the peculiar favor of the gods, and in honor of their deliverer, a monument dedicated a statue to Hecate or Diana. In Calmet's Dictionary, article 'Moloch,' is represented a Persian coin with the figure of a star and crescent, in the time of Pacorus, A. D. Chron., 15, 16, a Phœnician coin bears a crescent; Matthew, xxi. Prince Cantemir, in his 'History of the Ottoman Empire, says: 'The Janizaries (flourished in 1362) bear on their banners a two edged sword, bent like a ray of lightning, opposite to a crescent.' And in describing the siege of Vienna in 1529 he mentions the crescent as the emblem of Mahammedanism antagonistic to the cross. After all, perhaps the Turkish crescent, like the modern crowns of Europe, may be but a variation of the horn, the ancient symbol of authority so often alluded to in the Old Testament, or perhaps it originated in connection with the worship of Diana or the moon."

Old Verse.

The following specimen of ingenious versification was published in a Philadelphia paper while the rev lutionary war was in progress. It may be read three different ways: First, let the whole be read in the order in which it is written; second, read the lines downward on the left of each comma in every line; third, in the same manner on the right of each comma. In the first reading the revolutionary cause is condemned, and by the others it is encouraged and lauded:

Hark! Hark! the trumpet sounds, the din of war's alarms,
Our seas and solid grounds, doth call us all to arms
Who for King George doth stand, their honors soon shall shine;
Their name is at hand, who with the congress join.
The acts of parliament, in them I much delight,
I hate their cursed intent, who for the congress fight;
The Tories of today, they are my daily toast,
They soon will sneak away, who Independence boast.
Who non resistance hold, they have my hand and heart,
May they for slaves be sold, who set a Whiggish part;
On Maintaining, North and Bute, may daily blessings pour.
Confusion and dispute, on congress evermore,
To Scotland and British lord, may honors still be done,
I wish a block or cord, to Gen. Washington.

Luck of Eden Hall.

Hutchinson, in his "History of Cumberland," speaking of Eden hall, says: In this house are some old fashioned apartments. An old painted drinking glass, called the "Luck of Eden hall," is preserved with great care. In the garden, near to the house, is a well of excellent spring water, called St. Cuthbert's well. The glass is supposed to have been a sacred chalice, but the legendary tale is, that the butler, going to draw water, surprised a company of fairies who were amusing themselves upon the green near the well. He seized the glass which was standing upon its margin; they tried to get it from him, but after an ineffectual struggle flew away singing:

If that glass either break or fall,
Farewell the luck of Eden hall.

Earl or Count.

When the Saxon kings created an earl they gave him a shire or division of land to govern. At the Norman conquest the word count superseded the title earl, and the word shire was called a county. Even to the present day we call the wife of an earl a countess. A belt running in a northeastern direction from Lincolnshire and Herefordshire marks off the shires. In a general way the shires mean the midland counties. Angelsey, in Wales, and twelve counties in England do not terminate in "shire."

"Let Her Go."

The following has been offered as the origin of the expression, "Let her go, Gallagher." "A few years ago a man was convicted of a crime in Texas. The accompanying hanging. The day of execution arrived and the prisoner was placed on the trap and asked if he had anything to say. He answered, motioning to the hangman: 'Let her go, Gallagher.' Gallagher was the sheriff who had charge of the execution."

Early Prints.

The earliest prints that are known are a set of the seven planets, in an almanac, by way of frontispiece.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Hints to Amateurs About Restoring Valuable Pieces of Antique Furniture.

Old furniture is so valued nowadays that housewives, who often include amateur cabinet making and repairing in their accomplishments, may find use for the following experience of a London mechanic. He recommends scratches and rasp ings of hard oak with wood filling the finest holes and worm holes in old pieces of furniture, and says that he learned their value in his young days from Oriental carpenters. You should sift them through wire gauze. Put each separately in a box with a label and you are always ready for a sudden job. For a crack, a worm eaten hole or a deep flaw prepare the proper dust, by the admixture of brick dust in flour (also kept ready), or whiting, or ocher, or any required tint. Then take well cooked glue, and on a bone plate stir it in slowly while hot, with sufficient powder for your work. Dab the hole or crack with your glue brush, then with a putty knife stir about the mixture on the plate, taking care you have the right color. When sure on this point, take some of the mixture on the end of the knife and insert it in the desired place. Then use as much pressure as you possibly can with the blade, and keep smoothing at it. Sprinkle a little of the powder on the spot. When thoroughly dry sandpaper the surface with an old used piece, so as not to abrade the joint. You can then varnish the mending. Where varnish and woodworms have devoured the furniture, cautiously cut out the part till a sound place be reached. Poison the wood with a solution of sulphate of copper injected into the hollow. Let it dry. Cut an angular piece of same wood from your board, and with a sharp chisel make a suitable aperture for its reception. Fix it with glue. When thoroughly dry, work with carving tools or rasp and glass, scraping till the new bit of work exactly matches the old.

Sweetbreads with Cream Sauce.

Put the sweetbreads in cold water; remove the pipes and members. Cook in boiling salt water, with one tablespoonful lemon juice, twenty minutes. The above is a Boston cooking school recipe, which adds: For sweetbread with cream sauce prepare the sweetbreads as directed above; then take a pint of cream, two scant tablespoonfuls of butter and two of flour; heat the cream, cook butter and flour together and add the hot cream. Cut up half a can of mushrooms, add to the sauce with half a teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of pepper. Let cook for a few minutes in the upper part of the double boiler. Add the sweetbreads and let them warm through.

Cut toast into points and serve around the sweetbreads on a platter.

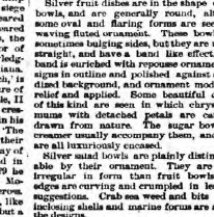
Silver Bowls for Fruit and Salads.

Silver fruit dishes are in the shape of low bowls, and are generally round, although some oval and flaring forms are seen with waving fluted ornament. These bowls have sometimes handles, but they are usually straight, and have a band like effect. This band is enriched with repousse ornament, designs in outline and polished against an oxidized background, and ornament modeled in relief and applied. Some beautiful designs of this kind are seen in which chrysanthemums with their leaves and buds are carefully drawn from nature. The sugar bowl and creamer usually accompany them, and they are all luxuriously encased.

Silver salad bowls are plainly distinguishable by their ornament. They are more irregular in form than fruit bowls. The edges are curving and crumpled in leaf like suggestions. Cresses and bits of net inclosing shells and marine forms are among the designs.

Dining Room Furniture.

The stiff and massive style of furniture characteristic of the period of Henry II has been revived in the world of fashion, with various modifications, for modern dining rooms.



A DINING ROOM IN HENRY II STYLE.

Straight backed chairs and ponderous tables, with legs turned on the lathe, cabinets and sideboards of architectural design, are the prominent features of this ponderous furniture, which, for solidity and hard wear, leave nothing to desire, but can hardly be called elegant.

An Interesting Flower Bulb.

The "Oriental lily," known to florists as the Chinese narcissus, may be grown in the ordinary manner in water, earth, moss or sand, but a very interesting way of cultivating this flower is to take a dish from four to six inches deep and put into it some small stones, then set the bulbs upon the stones and fill up with water to touch the bottom of the bulbs. They will begin to grow in a few days, and will flower in six to eight weeks. Do not set the bulbs away in the dark, as is usual in starting other varieties. By planting at different times a succession of these beautiful and fragrant flowers may be secured for the winter. The same bulb sometimes produces both double and single flowers.

A Popular Fabric for Winter Draperies.

The new double faced canton flannels, showing on one side floral or scroll designs on a dark surface, and on the other side one plain color, represent a very desirable material for draperies of a comparatively small cost. The fabric is close and thick, with a long, soft nap, so that, though in fact nothing but cotton, it protects against draughts and has a sufficiently rich and heavy look for winter use.

Useful Suggestions.

For an informal or family breakfast cream tinted damask cloths with borders in bright colors are liked. The napkins match and are finished with fringe.

An excellent way to clean old brass is to use ordinary household ammonia undiluted and rub with a brush. This will leave the metal clear and bright. It should then be rinsed in clear water and wiped dry.

When replacing the stair carpets, do not put it down exactly as it was before, but if it will allow reverse it by putting the top at the bottom, and vice versa. This keeps it from wearing in spots, and will make it last much longer.

In beating cake for a long time turn the spoon over and use it backwards, unless a cooking school teacher. It will be found much easier.

A little washing soda or borax in the water is excellent for whitening the table and floor.

When grease has been spilled on a stone cover, turn the cover over and let the grease burn off before trying to clean it.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

THINGS TALKED ABOUT IN THE WORLD OF SCIENCE.

Amateur Photographers Are Reminded of the Advantage of Keeping the Developing Fluid on a Plate in Constant Motion. How to Do It.

The advantage of keeping the developing fluid on a plate in constant motion is indisputable. The development proceeds more evenly, air bubbles are removed and spots and streaks are to a large extent prevented. In the illustration is shown a simple mechanical arrangement on the principle of the pendulum, which can be made by an amateur and will be found convenient.

SIMPLE MECHANICAL ARRANGEMENT IN PHOTOGRAPHY.

La Nature, from which our cut was taken, says: The supporting framework is made of stout wire, covered with rubber tubing. Glass rods might be substituted if one has a little skill in glass blowing. It is only necessary to fill the tray with the developing fluid, immerse the plate, and set the apparatus in motion, which will continue for a period long enough for the development of the most refractory plate.

Collapsible Lifeboats.

Following in the wake of Berthon's patents unsubmergible lifeboats that collapse into one-fifth their width for storage, come Chambers' patent unsinkable semi-collapsible lifeboats. The following description of Chambers' boat occurs in Engineering: It is a craft of 26 feet length, 7 feet beam and 3 feet 4 inches depth, has a displacement of 11 tons and affords accommodation to 40 people. The depth of the boat proper is 14 inches, but above that is a can vas washboard fitted with galvanized iron stanchions and rails, and hinged to the gunwale of the boat. When raised to the upright position the washboard locks itself into position by means of stays. In the ship the boat can only occupies a space 18 inches in depth, so that three may easily be placed the one over the other and yet not occupy a greater height than the ordinary boat. There are formed around the inside of the hull something like forty air tight compartments, over three tons space, which gives the boat greater buoyancy. The bottom of the boat is so arranged that it may be used as a raft, and ropes are fitted to enable any one in the water to get on to such a raft or to right the boat when overturned. The seats in the inside of the boat are formed into tanks for stores, provisions and distress signals. The advantages of these semi-collapsible boats may be appreciated when it is mentioned that had the same number of ordinary boats been placed on board the City of New York, nearly three times the space occupied would have been needed.

Here and There.

The importance of preserving fruits before consumption is in South Africa, where the soil is drier every year and springs and rivers less strong.

Owing to the perfection of her spinning machinery and the large amount of capital invested in the business, England spins more woolen and cotton yarn than all the other countries combined, and yarns are among the most important of her exports.

One of the annoyances connected with the use of instruments containing lenses, in the examination of the cavities of the body, is due to the fact that they become dim by the deposition of moisture. Dr. Stocquart claims that this can be prevented by spreading a drop of glycerine on the lens.

The rapid development of southern California has brought Lower California into prominence, and recent explorations have shown that it is not as all that desert land which it has long been supposed to be.

Statue in the Galvano-Plastic Process.

The monumental statue of the late Miss Hollis, of Boston, recently on exhibition at Tiffany & Co.'s, is believed to be the first statue done in this country in the galvanoplastic process. The sculptor, Mr. Carl Rohl-Smith, is a Dane by birth and does not belong to any school. He was educated at the Academic classicism, but works after his own free, natural manner.

A Wheel Turned by Gas.

In the annexed cut is illustrated a very simple wheel, to be operated by gas, that was recently described in Scientific American as follows:

A GAS WHEEL.

The wheel consists of a disk of light but stiff cardboard, mounted between two corks on a straight knitting needle, and provided around its periphery with buckets formed of squares of writing paper, attached to the periphery of the disk by two adjoining edges so as to form hollow cones, as shown. The knitting needle is journaled in wire or wooden standards, and lubricated so that it may turn freely. Carbonic acid gas may be generated in a pitcher and poured upon the wheel in the manner illustrated. By making the wheel large enough to carry sufficient sensitive, it may be turned by liberating hydrogen gas under the mouths of the buckets.

Bronchopneumonia of children has been treated in the hospitals of Paris with quassamba to the extent of vomiting the patient occasionally. Injections of pelletan to quiet the cough, and mild counterirritants applied to the chest.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

A Peril Which Weiser Brings in Uneasy Trousers and Hobgoblin Violets.

With the coming of cold and damp weather arises the remembrance of a peril ever present and by no means small, like the proverbial statement of a writer who claims that "a respectable proportion of the deaths that occur during the winter season are directly or indirectly due to sleeping in damp sheets."

"The experienced traveler," continues the authority quoted, "rarely hazards the risk of sleeping between sheets which are nearly sure to be damp, until they have been aired under his personal supervision at a fire in his bedroom. If this be impracticable, he wraps his cloak around him, or pulls on the shawl and sleeps between the blankets, a disagreeable, but often prudent, expedient. The direct mischief may result from the contact of an imperfectly aired body with sheets which retain moisture. The body heat is not sufficient to raise the temperature of the sheets to a safe point, and the result must be disastrous in the extreme, if, as is sure to happen, the skin is cooled by contact with a surface colder than itself, and steadily abstracting heat all the night through.

"Ordinary people are especially culpable in this matter. A 'spare' room is reserved for guests. For weeks it may remain unoccupied, unaired, or worse, unwarmed. A visitor arrives. Unconscious of the fate that awaits him he calmly passes the evening in social enjoyment. Later he is shown to the 'spare' room for the night. He enters and at once the apartment has the chill and damp of the tomb, and the sheets of the bed are veritable winding sheets—shrouds, in fact. He is fortunate if he escapes with nothing more than a 'cold.' There is no excuse for the neglect of proper precaution to insure dry beds."

Union of Severed Parts.

Among remarkable instances reported of the union of severed digits is the following, accredited to The International Journal of Surgery: A boy while splitting wood cut off a part of his right thumb. It dropped to the ground and he ran into the house. The mother bound up the injury. The father went to the barn, harnessed the horse, found the severed piece of thumb, wrapped it with the stump in a cloth and drove nearly three miles to the office of a physician. Only an hour and a half elapsed before the doctor saw him, when he removed the cloth and found the thumb lying loosely in the bandage and covered with blood and dust. The dirt was cleaned it and secured it to the stump. It united promptly, and two years afterwards it was hard to tell which thumb had been injured.

Vaccine Versus Bovine Virus.

The fear of contracting disease has to a great extent done away with the use of vaccine virus taken from the arm of a vaccinated child, and caused physicians, oftentimes against their judgment, to confine themselves to bovine virus. That this latter virus is not always innocuous is well shown by a report of the royal bureau of hygiene at Berlin. Virus which was obtained from a vaccinated child was inoculated into 11 calves which were vaccinated with it eruptions of the skin, and in some instances pustules formed. Among children, several deaths occurred. In 1 child, a post mortem examination revealed an abscess. Considerable constitutional disturbance followed the occurrence of the eruptions.

The Power of the Imagination.

A hospital physician wishing to test the power of the mind upon the body, gave a hundred patients a dose of sweetened water. Fifteen minutes after, entering apparently in much excitement, he announced that he had by mistake given a powerful emetic, and preparations must be made accordingly. Eighty out of the hundred patients became thoroughly ill and exhibited the usual results of an emetic; twenty were unaffected. The curious part of it is that with very few exceptions the eighty were those subjects were men, while the strong minded few, who were not to be caught with chaff, were women.

Baseball Injuries.

For the swollen and painful "baseball pitcher's arm" is given, according to a physician, the hot bath—water at 110 degs.; and he says that he has used this treatment and thicken the joints—put the finger or arm right in the blaze of the sun, having the limb held up by a rest.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

Hints for Those Who Are to Be Chiefly Concerned at a Morning Wedding.

What is in fashionable parlance a morning wedding is one occurring at any time before 6 o'clock p. m. In such an occasion the groom does not appear in evening dress, even though the bride be in full dress toilette. His proper costume is a black frock coat (or a cutaway, in favor of which there is a strong movement just now), light trousers, patent leather shoes, white gros grain four in hand scarf, pearl gloves with pearl or black stitching and a pearl gray hat. Studs and rings are similarly attired, but wear either pearl or lavender gloves with broad black stitching on the back. The bride is in full dress white toilette or traveling dress, according to preference.

Gaslight is extremely becoming, and therefore much used at day weddings.

Things to Be Avoided.

Through a mistaken notion of politeness, many people indulge too freely in the use of the words "sir" and "madam" in conversation. The old etiquette which required children always to say "Yes, sir." "No, ma'am," etc., to their parents and elderly relatives is out of vogue. Young people are now taught to reply, "Yes, papa," "No, mamma" (with accent on the second syllable of papa and mamma), "Yes, aunt," "No, uncle," and the like.

Neither is it quite elegant for grown people to use the word "please" with much frequency. "Will you oblige me?" "Will you have the kindness," or a similar equivalent should be oftener heard.

Some Disadvantages of Fault Finding.

Don't find fault, that is, in the raw pick-ing, grumbling way. It not only makes you look and seem and feel disagreeable at the time, but 16 persistently nasty habit about the mouth there is certain to come a cluster of lines to tell the world at large of the peevishness of your disposition. It mates the eye smaller, because they contract at the time, and the lips grow extremely sensitive from continual biting.

Potato Small but Important.

"I" is a very good pronoun, but it should be kept in reserve.

According to the etiquette of the best society knife and fork are left on the plate when passed for a second supply.

The spoon should be allowed to rest in the saucer when one drinks from coffee or tea cup.

A guest unable to attend a wedding sends two cards do arrive on the day of the wedding, one addressed to the bride's parents, the other to the newly wedded pair.

No harm will come to a girl from the companionship of a nice and good chaperon—her mother, if possible.

—The Plainfield Cornet Band went to New York Saturday morning and played for the Blaine, Finley & Iives Club during the Republican parade in the afternoon.

—"Man shall not live by bread alone"—Matt 4:4—is the topic for the young men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night. Leader, Mr. Wm. D. Murray. All men are welcome.

—"I don't like to sell Tulip soap," says a certain grocer, "as the profit is very small, but most of my customers will use no other kind; so I have to sell it." This is what the manufacturers say.

—The Lincoln Club will furnish workers at each polling place. Republicans, wishing to be sure they receive a straight Republican ticket, should obtain the same from some person wearing the badge of the Lincoln Club.

—Voters are cautioned against voting spurious tickets. The regular Republican nominations are given at the head of the first column of THE NEWS. Let each citizen compare his ballot with this head and so guard against the beware of splits, especially in the list of electors.

—During the Democratic parade Wednesday evening some person discharged a revolver while passing the residence of Mr. Mooney on Grove street. The bullet shattered the glass in one of the parlor windows and lodged in the wall on the other side of the room.

—Two of the most notorious Plainfield saloon-keepers started out in a barouche Saturday, taking the most out-of-the-way streets to Scotch Plains and Westfield, to electioneer against Judge Ulrich. Let every believer in temperance against the accursed saloon stand by the Judge. The saloons work in the dark by underhand methods, and their destruction as a political power is necessary for the protection of society.

—Mr. Henry, of Philadelphia, has just completed a little volume, entitled "From Washington to Cleveland", the history and platforms of all political parties from 1789 to 1888, which is worthy of being in the hands of every voter. To gain this and the prices has been fixed so low as to place it within the reach of all. By mail (paper cover) 25 cents; library edition, 35 cents. (Stamps or postal notes.) Address only E. B. Streteh, P. O. Box 338, Philadelphia, Pa.

—It is stated that the local Democratic Club took to Plainfield Wednesday night a transparency bearing the legend, "No Free Rum". This is all right, and it would be better still if it had simply read "No Rum". The Democrats of Hunterdon, however, are not such good temperance men, for in their county they elected Washington Mooney they adopted without a dissenting voice a resolution pledging the candidate nominated for the legislature to vote to repeal the high-license local-option measure passed last Winter. Afterward, when it was found they had gone too far, the resolution was stricken from the platform.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

Saloon Against Family.

The saloon-keepers around Plainfield spent much of Sunday electioneering to defeat the Hon. John Ulrich for assembly because he voted for the local-option bill. The same is the case in Somerset county against the Hon. Oscar Cokeling. It is the same all over the State. Every Democrat and Republican alike who believes in upholding temperance principles and destroying the saloon-power in politics ought to be on hand election day to stand by these men.

KILLED ON THE PLAINFIELD TRACK.

A Democratic Parader from Philadelphia Loses His Life.

James Quinn, of Philadelphia, fell from the special train conveying the Hancock veterans from that city to New York, to participate in the Democratic parade, Saturday evening, and was instantly killed. The accident occurred between Grant and Plainfield avenues, this city. The remains were discovered by the engineer of a passing coal train, who detached his engine and went to the North avenue station for a stretcher. When it was found that the man was dead undertaker P. Casey was notified. He proceeded to the spot and conveyed the remains to the morgue. Word was telegraphed to Mr. Quinn's address in Philadelphia, and a brother of the deceased arrived in this city last evening and identified the remains. County Physician Westcott was notified and came to this city yesterday afternoon and made an examination and ascertained that the man's skull had been crushed.

The deceased was twenty-five years old and was unmarried. The remains will be taken to Philadelphia for interment.

Closing the Campaign.

The Hon. Charles W. Place presided at a Republican meeting at Stillman Music Hall Saturday evening and introduced three speakers, Mr. Ernest R. Ackerman, of Plainfield; Mr. Howard MacSherry, of New Brunswick; and Mr. Oscar Hale, of Bloomfield. Mr. Ackerman was called on without a moment's notice, but he responded gracefully and delivered a homily on the Senate substitute for the Mills Bill, as given in his communication in the Courier. Mr. MacSherry presented Protection arguments in a clear light, enlivening his talk with humorous anecdotes appropriate to the matters in hand and enriching his facts with a masterful flow of language and beautiful figures of speech. He held that with a debt of $800,000,000 the sum of $120,000,000 in the U. S. Treasury could hardly be called a surplus, and he showed how infinitely the protective policy of the Republicans has benefited the country and how immeasurably injurious the Free Trade policy of the Democracy would be were they given, under Cleveland, further control of the United States. Mr. Hall pointed out the necessity of sending a Republican Senator from New Jersey, as on the vote of that one Senator may hinge the decision of a tie in Congress. He urged all to vote the straight Republican ticket.

The meeting was over at ten o'clock. The audience, which numbered about three hundred and fifty people, was as large as was expected, as the Committee had neglected to advertise the meeting until the last moment and the clubs had all gone to Bound Brook to parade, while many Plainfielders were in New York, where they had gone to witness one of the grandest spectacles of the century, the parading of as fine-looking a body of men as ever marched beneath the Republican banner or any other.

All the speakers were well applauded.

The Eastern Question.

Prof. Tripp lectured on a subject of peculiar interest at Cutter's Hall, Saturday evening, and the audience was one to suit the subject. In a pleasant, satisfactory way the speaker sketched the rise and decline of the Ottoman power in Europe, giving vivid accounts of the powers which followed in the wake of the conquering Turk. The phenomenal growth of Russia and the present policy were described and discussed. The relation of the various European countries to that vexed and imperfectly understood "Eastern question" was presented clearly and vividly. The strained relations of Russia and England, and the plans, purposes and prospects of each were handled in a masterly manner. In apt language he pictured the great leaders, who in the past held and in the present hold the destinies of the natives in their hands. The lecture closed with a vivid portrayal of the great battle of the Crimean war. The speaker's own powers were reinforced by maps, plans and engravings.

The third and concluding lecture will be given to-night, on the subject "The Ill-Starred Mexican Expedition, from its inception in its tragic close, with the life and career of Maximilian and Carlota, and personal reminiscences of the latter.

The lecturer will sketch and explain by a large map the Panama ship canal, as well as other projected routes across the Isthmus. This lecture is regarded as the most attractive of the three given here.

The Chautauqua Circle.

The eighty-eighth meeting of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle will be held on Saturday evening, Nov. 17th, at 7:45, at the "Y" rooms, 55 East Front street. The programme includes the roll call, with quotations from Homer; "Greek National Festivals", by Miss Taylor; "The Acropolis", by Miss Radford; "Philip of Macedon", by Mrs. Newell; music; memory exercise, "The Gods and Goddesses of the Greeks"; reading, "Dialogue of the Gods", Lucian, by Miss N. Randolph; review exercise, Chapters VIII-X, "History of Greece", with Miss Annie Hasbrouck as critic; readings, "History of Greece", Chapters IX and X, and "Preparatory Greek Course", Chapter IX.

Y. M. C. A. Statistics.

The weekly average attendance at some of the local Y. M. C. A. institutions during October was as follows: Young men's meetings, 70; Brotherhood Training Classes, 46; Young Men's Bible Class, Washingtonville, 35; Union Village, 46; Classes in English Branches, 11; Mechanical Drawing, 20; German, 9. There were 81 books drawn from the library each week, two receptions, two conferences, two singing classes for boys, three situations secured for young men, and seven professed conversions.

—To-morrow is a legal holiday, and the public schools and banks will be closed all day. Most business houses will be closed at noon.

—Look out for roosbacks, the device of the beast of politicians, stories manufactured the day before election when it is too late to show their falsity.

HOW IT IS DONE.

The Legal Routine for Electing the President.

Tuesday, November 6th, 1888, being the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, the people in the several States will vote for Presidential electors.

Wednesday, December 5th, being the first Wednesday in December, the electors will meet in their respective States and vote for President and Vice President.

Wednesday, February 13th, 1889, being the second Wednesday in February, the certificates of the electoral votes will be opened in Congress.

Monday, March 4th, 1889, the President and Vice President elect will take the oath.

Election Returns on the Stage.

Neil Burgess is to appear in "The County Fair" at Music Hall to-morrow night, and during the evening election returns will be announced from the stage.

The Philadelphia Press says that "The County Fair presents a series of scenes of a more or less realistic character of New England life, which introduce the star in the guise of a humorous type of rural distinction, which is rendered to the life. While Mr. Burgess has no equal in his line of assumptions, neither is he likely to have an immediate or entirely worthy successor. This looking ahead is to be regretted, but it only makes it the more important that the present opportunities to see him should be taken advantage of. In 'The County Fair' he is, we are told, the leading attraction of a pronounced character. The fair scene itself and the looking back is decidedly interesting as well as amusing, while some excellent pictures of rural life nearly as refreshing as those of the 'Old Homestead' are contained in it and form an excellent background for the characters."

Mr. Peckham Mistaken.

To the Editor of The News—I see that Mr. Peckham attributes my questions to him on the Westfield Tariff Debate as coming from Senator Miller, and, while such a mistake on his part is very flattering to my wildest efforts, the fact is that Senator Miller had nothing whatever to do with it, either directly or indirectly, which only goes to show that Mr. Peckham is mistaken on other subjects as well as on the Tariff. The Westfield people would be very glad to listen to Mr. Peckham's answers to my questions, but he thinks that nobody wants to hear him, under cover of answering such questions, make a scurrilous personal attack on a gentleman who stands as high in the estimation and regard of this community as the Hon. James L. Miller, he will find that this last mistake is the worst of all. WESTFIELDER.

Maligning Bishop Vincent.

To the Editor of The News:—What is termed Dr. Vincent's prophecy has been given considerable space and attention in the columns of your contemporary. It is a mean rumor or sentiment attributed to a noble and true man.

The falsity of the same may be found in the full, word-for-word report of the speech on the state of affairs, delivered by Dr. Vincent in 1880. Your contemporary has been referred to this to correct his error, but persists in misrepresentation. L. BROWN.

Thanks for Useful Gifts.

To the Editor of The News:—Will you allow me through your paper to express the thanks of the Association to Mr. L. Bergen for a generous donation of flour, meal and useful articles of hardware and kitchen furniture? Also to the Sunday school of Mr. Goodrich's church for their kindness in sending vegetables from their "Harvest Home" celebration? For the Association,

Nov. 5th, 1888. M. E. KIERALL.

Plainfield Wins Two Games.

The Leal School foot ball team, of Plainfield, defeated the East Orange Athletic Club at East Orange Saturday afternoon by the score of 14 to 8. The Leal "second" eleven played Pingry's eleven, of Elizabeth, on the Park avenue grounds, Plainfield. The Leal boys won by the score of 24 to 0.

PERSONAL.

Mr. August Conde, age twenty-nine, an esteemed member of the German Gesang and Turn Verein Society, died at his home on West Front street this morning.

Messrs. James Mooney and Wm. E. MacClymont, of Washington Park, shot an opposum weighing seven pounds near Washington Rock Saturday morning. Their weapon was a pistol.

Miss Lilian Paul, of Carleton avenue, now visiting friends in Toronto, Canada, has been placed on the list of regular contributors to Frank Leslie's monthly. In the October issue she has a very good story entitled "One Hallowe'en".

A speech of Mr. Ernest R. Ackerman, of the Lawrence Cement Co., before a Republican meeting at Kingston, Ulster county, N. Y., occupies the first column of the first page of last Saturday night's New York Mail and Express. It is a sound, business-like address, and in its ring of honesty and truth it argues for Harrison, Morton and Protection every time.

Mr. J. C. Randolph, formerly of Plainfield, died last night at his home in Newark. He is the father of Mr. L. Warren Randolph, of Field & Randolph's City Pharmacy. The funeral services will be held Wednesday afternoon at the late residence, 319 Mulberry street, Newark. The remains will be brought to this city for interment and will be taken direct from the train to the Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield, where the casket will be opened at the grave.

Mr. Daniel S. Roberts, of North avenue, says that he never saw anything to beat the Republican parade in New York Saturday, and he doesn't think that any man in this generation will see the demonstration paralleled. Crowds surged through the thoroughfares from the Battery to Forty-second street, and the enthusiasm everywhere was tremendous. Plainfield sent many representatives, notably Councilman J. B. Dumont, who marched with the Bankers' and Brokers' Club, of which he is Treasurer. It was a grand affair throughout and surpassed even the most sanguine expectations.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The tie game of foot ball between the New York Athletic Club eleven and the team of the Orange Athletic Club will be played off next Saturday at Roseville.

The charges made against a New Brunswick letter carrier, "Dan" Sears, have now been incorporated in an affidavit, which has been signed by a well-known citizen, Silas D. W. Owens, and presented to Postmaster Price. Sears is charged with destroying mail sent out by Republicans.

John Cleary, a lad of sixteen, living at No. 24 Arlington street, while passing through the old burning district, between Bond and Haber streets, yesterday, was kicked in the head by a horse belonging to Clayton & Huff, livery men. The boy was severely injured and was removed to St. Barnabas Hospital.

The body of an unknown man, age about thirty-five, was discovered at about daylight yesterday morning lying under the elevated railroad tracks at Hoadley street, Hoboken. His neck was broken and the position in which he was found indicated that he had fallen from the train. The body was removed to Crane's Morgue. The man is supposed to be a mason or bricklayer, as mason's tools are scattered around the body.

Louis Wessel, a driver, employed by Bermes, the Union Hill brewer, was driving at a high rate of speed Saturday night and at Gordon street, Hoboken, upset his wagon, four Italians, two men and two women. One of the Italians stood the horses and the other drew a revolver and shot Wessel, the bullet taking effect in his head. The Italian was arrested and declared himself as Tuesso, of No. 107 Jefferson street.

John Kilmartin, a musician, who accompanied the Philadelphia Invincibles to Jersey City Saturday night to participate in the closing Republican parade, was accidentally killed just as he was about starting for home. He was sitting in a Montgomery street horse car, and in order to let the Pennsylvania Railroad station, and as the car started he leaned out of the window. His head struck a post with sufficient force to break his neck, and death was instantaneous. Kilmartin was twenty-seven years old, married, and lived at Third and Christian streets, Philadelphia. His body was taken home yesterday.

Christian Bischen, a brakeman on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, in walking over the top of a freight train at an early hour yesterday morning, made a misstep and fell between the cars. His skull was fractured, his right arm broken, both legs below the knee badly mangled, and his face and head terribly cut. The accident occurred near the Grove street station, and the man was not missed until the train reached South Orange. In the meantime his body had been picked up by a passenger train following. Bischen was a single man, twenty-five years old, and lived at Port Morris. On his person were found a silver watch and a membership card, dated July, 1887, from Fatherland Lodge, No. 111, I. O. O. F., of Easton, Pennsylvania. Lafayette Lodge, No. 13, of Orange, took charge of the body.

For Whom Will You Vote To-Morrow?

"Let me illustrate, by my experience, the difference between the protection and free trade policies in free trade England and in protection America," said Wm. H. Meyers, of Jersey City, a retired paper manufacturer, to a New York newspaper reporter yesterday.

"Thirty years ago my brother and I were employed in a factory in Liverpool at five dollars per week. I came to America in 1868, and obtained employment in a factory engaged in the same line of trade, while my brother remained in England. Two years ago I retired from business with $100,000. My brother succeeded me, he has an annual income of $15,000 each; another son is a successful lawyer, while another is studying medicine. My daughter, who is a college graduate, is engaged to be married to a prominent physician."

"What about your brother in Liverpool?"

"He is still employed in the same factory as $5 per week, and he can neither read nor write."

Workingmen of America, are not these eloquent facts!

What are the incidents of protection in America?

High wages, prosperity and free schools.

What are the incidents of free trade in England?

Low wages, poverty and ignorance.

—See that your ticket corresponds with THE NEWS of TO-DAY. Be on your guard against frauds. Only fraud will defeat the Republicans this time. But even that will not work, notwithstanding that British gold has poured into this country like water, that the Democracy are in power, and control all the machinery, and that they are backed by a solid South. Fraud will not triumph, because patriotism is alive in the hearts of the people, who are, we believe, thoroughly awake and sure to win.

The Difference.

Here are some of the things with which the Democratic party has either been identified in the past or is identified now:

Low Licenses and Plenty of Saloons.
Rum Power in Politics.
Ballot Box Frauds.
Loose Election Laws.
Polygamy.
Intimidation and Political Murders.
Shutting States out of the Union on Partisan Grounds.
Human Slavery.
Treason.
Civil War.
Inflation.
Repudiation.
Free Trade.

Here are some of the things with which the Republican party has either been identified in the past or is identified now:

Restriction of the Liquor Traffic.
Defeat of the Rum Power in Politics.
A Free Ballot.
An Honest Count.
Laws Protecting the Ballot Box.
Equal Political Rights for Black and White.
Unceasing Warfare against Polygamy.
Prompt Admission of Qualified States.
Honest Money.
Loyalty to the Union.
Peace—with Honor.
Honest Money.
Honest Payment of all Debts—Dollar for Dollar.
Protection for the American Home and Home Industries.
Which employs the intelligent voter to discuss—New York Tribune.

—Judge Ulrich is a Christian gentleman. Last year in the assembly he voted for local option. He is this year a candidate for re-election. The liquor men of the District have, it is alleged, subscribed $1,000 to defeat him at the polls. Remember, friend,

WE ARE TOLD

"A Tariff for Revenue Only" Does Not Mean Free Trade.

Let the utterances of the leaders of the Democratic party and their English allies decide the question.

Senator Vest: Mr. Cleveland, by his message, for which I sincerely honor him, has challenged the protected industries of the country to a fight of extermination.

Henry Watterson: The Democratic party is a free trade party or it is nothing.

Roger Q. Miller: I will not help to perfect any law that stands in the way of free trade.

Speaker Carlisle: All trade should be as free as possible.

Henry George: I am for Grover Cleveland because I am a free trader.

Congressman Breckinridge: I am a free trader. The Mills bill is a step in that direction.

Congressman Campbell, Ohio: If this bill (Mills) means anything, it means a long step toward free trade.

Secretary Fairchild: Add to the free list as many articles as possible.

Note particularly Congressman Breckinridge's remarks.

The English newspapers understand perfectly the trend of the president's policy. Read what they say:

London Times: It is certain that the arguments which President Cleveland urges are those which Cobden used to employ forty-five years ago and which any free trader could employ now.

London News: For American party purposes the president feels compelled to characterize the attempt to brand him as a free trader as "calumny," but the fact remains that the electoral conflict now in progress is a conflict between free trade and protection and nothing less.

Manchester Examiner and Times: President Cleveland's message to congress will not fail to attract the attention which it deserves. It may be the beginning of a serious movement in the direction of free trade.

Saturday Review: They (the Democrats) have, from whatever motive, resolved to adopt the very principle of free trade.

London Star: The re-election of President Cleveland means the adoption of his programme of a tariff revision, and his Lose on that subject go a long way toward free trade.

London Globe: Mr. Cleveland stands upon free trade principles and his powers for good in the States, while Gen. Harrison flies the protectionist flag.

It is useless for the Democratic papers to assert that these extracts from English publications are forgeries. The Democratic editor knows they are genuine.

CHEAP BREAD.

No man denies that the wages in free trade England are much less than in the United States, but the advocate of free trade claims that a day's work in England will purchase more than it will in our country. Let us see about this.

The following table shows what $1 will buy in our country, also in England, and is based on actual prices in London and New York:

	Beef, lbs.	Bread, lbs.	Flour, lbs.	Potatoes, bu.	Coffee, lbs.	Tea, lbs.	Sugar, lbs.	Kerosene, gals.	Soap, lbs.	Butter, lbs.	Coal, lbs.
United States	20	20	20	2	5	2	16	7½	16	4	400
England	3	12	12	1	2	1	3	1	3	1	200

Note that the dollar buys more of most articles in New York than in London.

Now, about a man's earnings in the two countries. Each year the following rates are paid skilled labor in the various branches of industry noted, and many others might be added, varying little from those named:

Bookbinders, $1.50; carpenters, $1.25; coopers, $1; farm hands, 50c.; hatters, $1; iron molders, $1.25; masons, $1.50; painters, $1.25; plumbers, $1.25; weavers, $1; laborers, 70c.; house servants, $5 per month.

Such figures would hardly satisfy the workers of this country.

Gen. Harrison says: "It is not so much the length of the step as the direction of it," referring to the reductions proposed in the Mills bill.

WHAT THE MILLS BILL MEANS.

The London Times of July 19 portrays English benefits to accrue from Mr. Cleveland's election. Among the Mills bill means open doors, gradually at first, but wide enough to secure a vast amount of English merchandise into American ports free of duty, which duties have heretofore kept out. Mr. Cleveland's re-election on the tariff reform platform will mean a widening market for English goods of every kind, with enormous money coming over here in increased volume to help pay our workers and craftsmen and furnish additional work for our unemployed.

And this is the situation on the eve of the presidential battle of 1888, which will close on Nov. 6.

A member of the British parliament said: "To convert the United States is indeed a triumph. The Cobden club will henceforth set up a special shrine for the worship of President Cleveland and send him all its publications gratis. Cobden founded free trade; Cleveland saved it."

The question is: "Will that policy so much desired by the English manufacturer be a benefit to the wage earners of this country?" No, it cannot be!

—Members of the Women's Temperance Aid Society will serve coffee and sandwiches in the parlors of Reform Hall to-morrow, election day, and evening. Also, prompt election returns will be received from New York.

MONSTER PARADES IN NEW YORK

Republicans Have the Afternoon and Democrats the Evening — Chicago Has a Triple Demonstration — Political News of All Kinds.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The metropolis was given over to the political enthusiasts Saturday. The Republicans had their inning in the afternoon and the Democrats continued the harrah until after midnight. There was no traffic on lower Broadway after noon. Solid walls of humanity lined both sides from Bowling green to Waverly place, thence down to Fifth avenue and up that grand thoroughfare to Fifty-ninth street. The reviewing stand was at the junction of Fifth avenue and Broadway, in the corner of Madison square. The head of the procession reached there at about 2:30, and the last division passed in review after 7. There were over 50,000 men in line, all carrying flags and wearing badges, and many companies handsomely uniformed. The decorations were profuse and magnificent.

There was scarcely time for the Republican paraders to get out of sight before the gaps in the grand stand before it was filled with Democrats, the most prominent of which was Governor David B. Hill. Less than an hour after the last of the Republican procession passed the head of the Democratic army passed in review. The Democrats formed in Waverly place, at the foot of Fifth avenue. The procession was fully as long as the preceding one, and the crowd along the sidewalks was greater. There were fully 500,000 people, altogether, between Waverly place and Central park. The shouting and cheering was constant, and the street was ablaze with Greek fire and Roman candles. Many houses were brilliantly illuminated.

CHICAGO'S TRIPLE DEMONSTRATION.

Republicans, Democrats and Prohibitionists Parade the Streets.

CHICAGO, Nov. 5.—The political campaign in Cook county was brought to a brilliant termination Saturday afternoon by the Republicans and at night by the Democrats and Prohibitionists. The Republicans in the afternoon continued for two hours and was witnessed by thousands of people. The procession was a mile long, and it took nearly as long to pass a given point. There were 1,000 display wagons in line, and about 12,000 men. It was nine miles in length, marching in double column most of the time. In the evening both Republicans and Democrats paraded, over 10,000 taking part in both demonstrations.

Mr. Hearst's Prophecy.

CHICAGO, Nov. 5.—William R. Hearst, proprietor of The San Francisco Examiner, was in the city en route to New York. Regarding the political outlook in California Mr. Hearst says that the Democrats will probably carry California at the coming election by about 3,000 majority. He says that the Republicans count chiefly on gains from emigration to Southern California from the New England states, but this is offset by Democratic emigration from Texas. He also claims from two to three thousand Democratic gain in San Francisco, principally on account of the Chinese exclusion law.

Fatality Shot by the Town Marshal.

COLUMBUS, Ind., Nov. 5.—A Republican rally at Hope, this county, two young men named Gideon Percifield and Joe Middleton, who reside here, quarreled with Town Marshal Brennan. The latter drew several shots at the young men, Middleton being fatally wounded and died soon after the shooting. Percifield received a flesh wound and will die. Brennan was arrested.

Just in Time to Vote.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Mr. and Mrs. Blaine took luncheon with Mr. Whiteiaw Reid at the latter's Madison avenue residence Sunday afternoon. They left for home this morning, stopping over night in Boston and reaching Augusta Tuesday afternoon.

Murder in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Jerry McCarthy, a plumber, aged 37, was fatally stabbed early yesterday morning in a First avenue saloon by Tim Sullivan, a bar-tender, during a discussion over Saturday night's parade.

LADY HERBERT'S CHARITIES.

Devoting Her Life and Wealth to Making Others Happy.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Lady Herbert, mother of the Hon. Michael Herbert, recently appointed charge d' affaires of the British legation here, is the guest at Doughergan Castle, Maryland, of ex-Governor and Mrs. Carroll. Lady Herbert is an authoress of European celebrity. She is the mother of ten children, her oldest son being the Earl of Pembroke. In devoting her talents and a large part of her income to charitable and religious work amongst the colored people, and, as an evidence of her earnestness in this respect, she gives the proceeds of the rental of her London house to the support of an orphanage for colored children. The marriage of Mr. Herbert will take place in New York city on Nov. 27. The bride-elect is Miss Wilson, and after their wedding journey they will come to this city. Lady Herbert will have provided a suitable establishment for them. Lady Herbert has a large circle of acquaintances, friends, and her tour in this country will be replete with interest, both socially and in other ways.

Shooting Sensation in Court.

FRESNO, Cal., Nov. 5.—A fight, ending in the death of the two participants, was a sensational episode in a slander case now on trial in the superior court. Dwelling on the old gold girl, said W. A. Carruthers for $25,000 damages for slandering his ward. Carruthers is a wealthy farmer. He secured a married man named Hardwick to swear that he had been criminally intimate with the girl. Two doctors testified that the statement was false. After this evidence Hardwick went outside of the court room and struck him, calling him a perjurer. Stronce's brother caught him to prevent a fight, when Hardwick drew a revolver and shot Stronce in the bowels. The brother then shot Hardwick, who returned the fire. Both Stronce and Hardwick were fatally wounded, and died a few hours after. The scene in the court room was terrible and intensely exciting. Women fainted, men drew pistols, and it looked for a time as though rival sympathizers would have a bloody battle.

Lured to His Death.

PUEBLO, Col., Nov. 5.—The body of C.W. McCain was found buried in the sand in Turkey Creek, twenty miles from the city. McCain left here one week ago with two companions, ostensibly on a hunting and prospecting trip. He came back alone, and from a man whom the latter pre-emiled to own. When they camped at Turkey Creek Watson struck McCain on an ax, hauled the body a few distance and buried it, took possession of both teams and went with them to Carson City. He wrote from there to Mrs. McCain, telling her that her husband's name and being her to sell everything and meet him at Grand Junction, and saying that he had sold the horses. Mrs. McCain knew that it was a lie, and at once telegraphed to Carson City. He wrote from there to Mrs. McCain, telling her that her husband's name and being her to sell everything and meet him at Grand Junction, and saying that he had sold the horses. Mrs. McCain knew that it was a lie, and at once telegraphed to Carson City. He made from there to Grand Junction, but the latter place he was arrested and taken back to Pueblo.

Chairman Quay's Last.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Chairman Quay, of Republican national committee, has issued the following address to the people, which is characteristic of the man: "Information recently received by the committee convinces us that the Democratic party-state extortion in French politics will result in differ at sections of the south in the present administration there is no reason why it cannot be prevented. But in no section so far as the party is concerned is there any necessity, and accordingly at our meeting Saturday the sum of $50,000 was appropriated to be paid in rewards when the law is violated and convictions of persons committing fraud direct our people in all districts where the frauds are likely to occur to be present at the polls and to insist upon the naturalization papers being examined at the proper time with the necessary evidence. A specific offer of rewards, stating the amount appropriated, will be made in due time."—Quay.

Both Parties Sure of Victory.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—At Democratic National headquarters last night, victory on Tuesday was claimed by the following figures: New York 60,000 majority; Indiana, 10,000; Illinois, 30,000; New Jersey, 10,000; Connecticut, by a plurality considerably larger than in 1884. They feel perfectly confident of Mr. Cleveland's majority vote in West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee and Delaware, and have most encouraging final reports from Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, and even New England states besides Connecticut. When Col. Swords—in charge at the National Republican committee rooms—was told of the claims of both Democratic claims, he laughed long and loud and said: "I'm not surprised. The Democrats think they run the earth." Col. Swords said the Republicans were not giving out figures just yet, but they had every reason to believe that they were sure of victory.

Both Sides Out at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 5.—Saturday night both parties had possession of the streets with their respective parades, both organizations putting their best efforts in that direction. By agreement between the two chief marshals the line of march was laid out so as to allow no crowding. The Democrats, by far the largest in point of numbers, the number being variously estimated all the way from 15,000 to 25,000.

Just given as was the Republican demonstration in the afternoon, it was equaled by the Democratic torchlight at night. The city appeared as though in complete possession of the Democrats.

At 7 o'clock the drum boomed on the lake front, and the parade began to move. Fireworks filled the air and the shouts of the immense multitude sounded like the roar of a mighty cataract. For two hours and a half the procession, under two hours and a half the line filed past the gubernatorial candidate, it being long after midnight before the scene terminated.

The Prohibitionists closed their campaign also, beginning with a torchlight procession, which was followed by a rally with an enthusiastic meeting. Among the transportation carried was one bearing the legend: "The crankies are coming—500 or more."

HERE IS THE RECORD.

IT CONFRONTS THE DEMOCRATIC LEADERS TODAY.

Frank Administration Made by Some Congressmen During the Tariff Debate. Read These and You Will See the Hollowness of the Democracy.

Mr. Mills said in his tariff debate:

"We will increase wealth if we lower the duties and let importations come in of those things which can be produced cheaper in other countries than our own."

DON'T BELIEVE IN PROTECTION.

Representative Tarsney, of Michigan, said: "I am frank to say to the gentlemen here who believe to the high protective school of politics that I for one am prepared on the floor of this house today to say I do not believe in the doctrine of protection for protection's sake."

DESIRES FREE TRADE.

Not long ago a delegation of Philadelphia wool merchants was in Washington asking Mr. Mills' assistance in correcting the worsted and waste clauses of the present tariff. Said Mr. Mills: "The more confusion the tariff work is to business the better I like it, because it will the sooner be done away with. I desire free trade, and I will not help to perfect any law that stands in the way of free trade."

NOT ONE.

The Mills bill was introduced by a free trader. It was universally praised or criticised as "a step toward free trade." It contained just as much free trade as its promoters thought the situation would bear. The debate upon it up to the time it became subject to amendment was marked at the close by this astounding colloquy:

Mr. McComas (Rep.)—Has any friend of this bill in this debate uttered one sentence in favor of the American tariff system which discriminates in favor of the home producer and laborer?

Mr. Hooper (Dem.)—No, there was no one, and you will not find any Democrat to utter one.

ADMITS HIS MISTAKE.

Among the Democratic congressmen who are already confessing their mistake in voting for the Mills bill is the Hon. James E. Campbell, of Ohio. This is the candid confession:

"I voted for the Mills bill, and, it is true, we passed it by a larger majority than we anticipated when the compilation of the measure was begun. It is true, also, that we secured the Republican votes and lost but three Democrats; but I have a premonition that we have made a bad job of it. You see I sit on the floor of the house, right in the center of the Democratic members of the committee on ways and means. I have been telling them for months that it was a fatal error to put wool on the free list and to make such a small reduction of the duty on sugar. I can go to the map and put my thumb on all the territory in the United States which produces sugar; while there is not a county that does not grow wool. I do not understand how otherwise long headed men on our side of the house have been demanding free wool as the great panacea of tariff reform. I do not expect to see more than four or five Democratic members returned to the next house from my state."

"I am not a candidate for re-election, and I do not believe I could be re-elected. I am what I would term a high tariff Protectionist, and yet I have voted for a bill with strong free trade tendencies. If this bill means anything it means a long step towards free trade, because it has put many of our leading productions on the free list. There may be nothing in the fact that we passed the bill by a majority of thirteen—an unlucky number—but I have a general feeling that the Mills bill as a whole will be unpopular before the country, and that it is a mistake."

A FREE TRADER, BUT—

Congressman Breckinridge, of Arkansas, a member of the ways and means committee, gives to a Washington correspondent his views on the passage of the Mills bill in so straightforward a manner that they are reproduced here as a corrective to the dishonest hedging that has characterized so many of his party. Such hedging, he said, was to him amazing.

"I am a free trader," said he, "and believe that the free the trade the better off is the workingman. No, the bill as passed is not a free trade bill, but it is a step in that direction. The only fault I have to find with it is that the step is not long enough."

"What kind of a campaign will the Democrats carry on this fall?"

"We will carry on an aggressive one. All our efforts will be directed to convince the voters that the bill itself is not free trade. We've got to do that or be defeated. If we are defeated it will mean that the mass of the people prefer high taxes; if we win it will mean that the Mills bill as a preliminary step toward free trade is all right."

Omaha's New Bridge.

For many years there was but one bridge between Council Bluffs, Ia., and Omaha, Neb., and that was the Union Pacific's railroad's structure. One of the strangest sights to the eastern man visiting the two cities on the Big Muddy was the long train of box cars without ends, coupled close together and with their ends removed into which the man who wished to cross the river with a wagon must drive and be taken across by a locomotive. Now all this is changed. The handsome new structure here pictured has just been opened and is located half a mile to the south of the old bridge. It is fitted with footways, driveways and a line of rail on which electric cars travel swiftly and almost noiselessly back and forth. Both Omaha and Council Bluffs hope for great things from the new bridge.

Scattering Votes in New York.

In New York state previous to 1885 the tables as published lump many votes together as "scattering." Of these 11,974 in 1882 were cast for Howe, Greenback candidate for governor, and 7,221 in 1883 for the Greenback candidate for secretary of state. In the latter year the Prohibition candidate for secretary had 18,316 votes. In 1884 two judges of the court of appeals (the return of the court, as the supreme court is elsewhere were returned) almost unanimously, receiving 1,092 did votes against 31,288 for all others. These were Judges Andrews and Rapallo.

A GLORIOUS RECORD.

SENATOR SHERMAN TELLS WHAT THE REPUBLICAN PARTY HAS DONE.

How the Country Has Prospered Under Protection—Ohio's Great Senator Tells the History of a Quarter of a Century of Growth.

In his speech at Cincinnati, Mr. Sherman said:

"The progress and development of our country under Republican institutions and under Republican policies has been the most marvelous in the history of mankind. In 1860, when this party assumed power, we had scarcely any manufactures. You could not have had such an exposition as this in the old Democratic times, for the things that make your exhibition wonderful and great have been invented and manufactured by the American people since the Republican party came into power. Not only that, my countrymen, but every essential of growth in this vast development which you see about you, every element in the marvelous progress made in the settlement of our public lands, in the extension of the vast territories of the habits and customs of civilized life, and the substitution of civilized and Christian habits for savage and barbarous modes of life by which we have covered half a dozen territories and made them great and powerful states, is due to Republican principles and the policies of the Republican party. The Republican party, not to the tune, four years ago, when the Democratic party assumed power, had shown a greater degree of progress than had theretofore been recorded in human history. This is not a matter of boast because that the Republican party has made that has not been literally and fully performed, and the remarkable growth of our industries and their rapid development, the change of our national life from an almost simple agricultural community to a vast community with every variety of manufacturing industries has been worked under the policy of the Republican party which protected and fostered the industries of our people in all branches of employment.

"I congratulate my Democratic friends that we have been able to do this for them. They have had power now for four years in this government by the accident of a chance, and thousands of Democrats regret the use that party has made of it. What interests have been advanced by this Democratic administration? What measures have been proposed or adopted by it? I know of none in all the multitude of political measures that have been introduced since the Democrats have been in power, except what is called the Mills bill, and no one will father that.

"It is a bill which, if carried into effect, my countrymen, would cripple at least twenty or thirty of our great industries, the products of which you see so magnificently illustrated in this great exhibition of yours. It is a bill the effects of which would retard the progress of human life step by step, until we would be ready to find things as they were thirty or forty years ago—in the slough of despond.

"No, my countrymen, I congratulate you upon the auspicious signs of the times. You have tried these people for four years, and I'm sure you'll try them no longer. We—the Republican party—will restore them their rights and deprive them of nothing. Yes, my friends, we will not only do that, but we will secure for them more than they can enjoy under a Democratic administration. Their measures would bring blight and ruin to all our people; would reduce the wages of our workingmen, and would bring them down to the sharp and hard competition of the underpaid labor of European countries, from whence many of you came to this land of refuge and free dom."

Brice an Enemy to the Workingman.

Mr. Brice is chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic national committee, and in charge of the campaign. He is appealing to workingmen, and trying to make them believe that the Democratic party is their friend.

Mr. Brice has a record as an employer that workingmen should familiarize themselves with. He is now interested in many railroads, but his first venture was in building the Ohio Central for the development of what is known as the Hocking Valley coal field. It does not run down the Hocking Valley proper. Some time after it was built the miners struck for better wages. They were being paid less than the Hocking Valley miners. An organization of the miners of the state had demanded an increase to the level of other mines. Mr. Brice was managing the road and its interests, which included the principal mines along the route. His partners were Gen. Samuel Thomas, of Columbus, and D. P. Eels, of Cleveland. He sent to Europe and procured several hundred men to take the miners until he had some 1,200 at work. By this time the Hocking Valley miners became alarmed. They went over into the Ohio Central's regions in great droves, with the intention of driving out the "scabs." There were serious conflicts. The authorities were appealed to. Property and lives were endangered. Troops called out. Brice was in favor of fighting it out to the defeat of the union workingmen if it took a lifetime. Not so his partners. They were willing to compromise, which he reluctantly consented should be made, notifying them at the same time that he should sell out every dollar of interest he had in the Valley, and that he would never invest another dollar there. He did sell out in 1883-83, and now himself boasts that he has kept his vow. He says that the failure to fight down the laboring men was the mistake of the road's history.

Mr. Brice has himself a candidate for office, but he is the chosen leader of the Democratic party, and as such his history is a matter of interest. When he built the Ohio Central road he wanted men to work for European wages. Americans would not do it, so he imported workmen. The Democratic party, under the lead of Mr. Brice, is now scheming to place wages in this country upon a place with those in the old world, so that there will be no occasion for sending abroad.

Workmen in this country can aid or prevent the carrying out of this programme. Which will they do?

Resisting Temptation.

Binkins—I thought I'd better, Mrs. Pilkins. I was afraid I'd forget myself and eat your bill board when they.—Puck.

"TELL THE TRUTH."

Facts About Wool Have Existed for Years.

So far, the main effort of Mr. Brice's "campaign of intellect" seems to have been directed toward the work of confusing and deceiving the readers of Democratic papers on the all important tariff question.

A great many intelligent persons who fancied they were being honestly dealt with were surprised to find the following editorial in The New York World:

"All the wool used in this country is grown here. The quantity imported is insignificant and growing smaller yearly. But we only grow about one-third the wool we can use, and only about one-third the amount required by 1,666 wool n mills, employing 80,000 hands. The result is that we have to import foreign manufactured woolen goods, in which there is more foreign raw wool than we now make."

Many who have read this editorial write to the editor of The Tribune to ask if the remarkable statements made by the World editor were true, and this is the answer they received: There is not a single statement in this quotation which is not an error. The World and other Democratic journals sometimes wonder, or profess to wonder, why The Tribune does not devote itself to combating their ignorant misstatements about the tariff. The answer is that to answer them would, in the time and space to correct statements so palpably untrue that their untruth is seen by all readers intelligent enough to understand a census, is a task too brief extent. The World in each and every item is proved false by official documents as follows:

1. "All the wool used in this country is grown here." The treasury report of imports and exports for the year ending 1888, treasury document 1,130, page 61, states that the imports of raw wool for the year just ended were 113,038,752 pounds.

2. "The quantity imported is insignificant." The special report of the bureau of statistics for April, page 16, and also reports of the agricultural bureau monthly for 1888, show that the production of wool was 295,000,000 pounds during the last year, 285,000,000 pounds in 1887, an average of 1885 and 1884, so that the imports of raw wool were 30 per cent. of the entire consumption this year, and nearly 40 per cent. in 1887.

3. "Growing smaller, yearly." The wool report just quoted, page 16, shows that the proportion of imports, which is 30 per cent. this year, was 28 per cent. in 1886, 24.9 per cent. in 1885, and 18.7 in 1884, so that it is growing larger rapidly, and it has not been as large as it is now in any other year since 1872.

4. "We only grow one-third the wool we can use." Official documents already cited prove that we grow nearly two-thirds, and before the reduction of duties in 1883 did grow about four-fifths.

5. "Only 1,666 woolen mills" supp ses all operated mills, wool hat mills, hosiery, knit goods, carpet, felt goods, and mixed textile establishments. Even then the statement is true only as to the census eight years ago.

6. "We have to import foreign manufactured woolen goods in which there is more foreign raw wool than we now make." The official report of the bureau of statistics of commerce and navigation for 1886, pages 688 to 693, shows that the quantity cannot be less than one-half the imports of raw wool, and therefore not more than about a sixth of all wool consumed.

When a newspaper manages to pack into eight editorial lines six distinct false statements, every one of which is proved false by official documents, and known to be false by every reasonably informed citizen in or out of the wool trade, what reason has that paper to expect serious notice of its statements in any discussion? The truth about the wool business is as follows: In this country increased its production of wool under the tariff of 1867 from about 60,000,000 to over 300,000, 000 pounds, that is more rapidly than any other important action has ever increased in that product. It reduced the proportion of foreign wool used in manufacture from nearly 40 per cent. to less than 19 per cent. Then a reduction was made by the democratic votes in 1883, caused a decrease of 42,000,000 pounds in the product and an increase of 45,000,000 in the imports.

THE PARTISAN POSTAL SERVICE.

Democratic Postmasters Open Mail Matter and Violate the Laws.

The demoralization of the postal service is growing in an alarming way. A chorus of complaints comes from all parts of the country. The western papers are full of charges against the Democratic postmasters, who clearly ignore the postal regulations in many instances, which the New York and Democratic postmasters seem to be leagued together in hindering the delivery of mail supposed to be addressed to Republicans. Republican papers are either regularly delivered or suppressed that free trade and tariff reform documents can be inserted. These breaches of the postal laws, made by Democratic postmasters are put on the doubtful list. In Indiana the mail matter containing Republican documents through the mails has been conducted with the greatest difficulty, and every possible hindrance seems to have been put in the way. It is especially so with documents and letters addressed to Germans, for it is on their votes that the Democrats hope to squeeze out a bare plurality. Gen. Halstead, who is in charge of the German bureau for the Republican national committee, has received many complaints from Germans in that state. Documents and letters addressed to them have either been kept back as long as possible without arousing suspicion, or they have been opened and pamphlets belauding up the Mills free trade bill have been inserted.

In Ohio the postal service became so bad and so many complaints were given to the management of the Columbus office, that the department at Washington was compelled to send a special inspector there to make an investigation. The editor of the Columbus Journal, in an open letter published in his paper, charges the office with opening his private mail and inserting Democratic campaign matter inside the Republican papers addressed to him. Equally as serious violations of the postal laws are charged against the postmaster in Cleveland. He is the editor of the Cleveland Leader, and after sending it through the state, a campaign document issued by Chairman Townsend and his assistants, as second class matter, at the same rate allowed to the publishers of regular newspapers. These papers were admitted in bundles and sent to the Democratic postmasters in numerous parts of the state. By them the packages were opened and the circular folded into Republican papers.

The Party of Reform.

Democratic "economy" under President Cleveland in the last year has created 700 new offices, of which 675 get annual salaries making a total of $702,210.50, while the per diem pay of the remaining 128 is estimated at an aggregate of $100,000 per annum. This does not include the army of additional employes which the administration in every department of the government. All told, the government is costing about $2,000,000 more a month than it did under the last Republican administration. As the Democrats used to say, "reform is necessary."—Portland (Me.) Press.

TAKEN FROM LIFE.

A VERY PLAIN TALK FOR OUR FARMER READERS.

The Tariff-Fortune Made and the Surplus Something That No American Citizen Can Afford to Vote Unasked—A Voice from the State of Michigan.

As a farmer, I wish to talk to my brethren on the questions of the surplus, the tariff and a few kindred subjects in a manner that can be readily understood. As an illustration I will cite the experience of my father and a Mr. Allen, who several years ago came to Michigan and each purchased a farm, the highway only dividing their places. They only had enough means to procure their land, and as there were houses to build and stock to buy they were compelled to raise money by mortgaging their land, which they each did to the amount of $1,000, giving ten notes of $100 at 4 per cent., one note and interest on whole, payable yearly. Things worked along smooth until a drought compelled them to give a second mortgage of $500 on seven years' time to enable them to hold their places.

About this time a mutual friend started a mill in the city of Detroit for the production of a land fertilizer. Father and Allen were induced by this friend (Smith, by name) to invest in a few barrels of his fertilizer, which proving an excellent article, caused them both to procure enough the following year to scatter over the whole farm. The consequence was that their next season's crop—the like of which they had never figured on—was secured. This year they had a good round surplus as the result of the well applied fertilizer.

Father goes to the bank and finds six of his one hundred dollar notes with interest unpaid. As they called for interest the total would make $684. After some parley he bought the notes for $634, saving $50 by doing so. His second mortgage remained, but he concluded that could easily be met, so built some needed fences and made other improvements with the balance of his surplus.

Allen, on the other hand, was stunned at his enormous surplus; besides he had attended some indignation meetings held by the farmers in the community, protesting against Smith for charging so high prices for the fertilizer. It was a well known fact that Smith went into the business with but very little capital, and now ran around in a top buggy with fast horses and fine clothes, employed 150 men, and seemed to be rolling in wealth. He (Allen) would not increase his wealth if he knew himself and would have no more of his expensive fertilizer. Time rolled on—father had his well improved place all clear. Allen—well he sold half of his place to clear the other half.

Now, if a lower tariff will simplify the United States finances, make the bonded debt the farmer's mortgage, the tariff the fertilizer, and I will readily comprehend the whole question as being a question of free and free trade. The tariff increases the government's wealth, builds up factories who employ thousands of people who no longer be the foreigner. Now we will leave it to the reader, be his politics what they may, if this illustration is not a fair one, and by a little thought make the issue plain and unmistakable.

The last campaign was won by the Democrats with the cry of the low and very cheap ninety millions surplus heaped in the treasury. Cleveland admits, in his letter of acceptance, that there is now over one hundred and thirty millions, and at the time the law has permitted his secretary to pay out of this surplus a premium for outstanding bonds. The Republicans want this surplus paid out just this way. They want to continue the tariff (the fertilizer), get the debt paid off, keep the factories and men employed and continue the general prosperity. The Democrats want to reduce the surplus by stopping the tariff, doing away with the fertilizer and let Smith and his men shift as best they can. Farmers, you certainly have distinguishing brains enough enough to decide on which side of this issue you will vote.

Detroit, Oct., 1888. JOHN T. GROAT.

Free Potatoes, Too.

While the British tin trust and salt trust are preparing for free tin plate and free salt the thrifty Scotch farmer is anxiously hoping that free trade will give him a splendid market for his potatoes. Here is an item which we clip from The British Banner, Confectioner and Purveyor of Aug. 1, 1888:

"As much as 10,000 sacks of 168 pounds each of potatoes were shipped from this country to New York during the last nine months. These were mostly sent from Scotland; only a comparatively few additional were sent to New York from the continent, some 80,000 bags. Besides this sent to New York potatoes were also sent to Philadelphia and one or two other ports, so that it will be seen definitely free there is no doubt that very large shipments would continue to be made in future years, to the benefit not only our industrious growers, but also securing a more abundant supply of excellent tubers, well suited for rich and poor alike, at very moderate prices, to the principal cities on the American seaboard."

Of course it will benefit the "industrious growers" of Scotland, but will the farmers of New York state and of New Jersey look upon the prospect with equal joy? We think not.—New York Press.

Better a Little Than None at All.

After writing a message in favor of free trade generally, and having attempted to establish a special system of free trade in fish with Canada against the advice and counsel of The Sun, Mr. Cleveland has now adopted The Sun's policy of protection in regard to railroads. He tells the senate that something should be done to stop the competition by the Canadian railroads with those of the United States.

The truth is that Mr. Cleveland is, as Mr. Sumner said of Mr. Grant, "surrounded by his environments." They carry goods cheaper than we can, and, in consequence, they are doing a great deal of work which, if they would let done by our roads. Mr. Cleveland wants this to be forbidden, so that shippers shall hand over their goods to the native corporations and the profits in carriage shall remain in native coffers. This is protection.

We have always regretted that Mr. Cleveland did not agree with us upon the fishery question; but now he has come over to our side in that matter, and it is also better to be a protectionist in the matter of railroads only than not to be a protectionist at all.—New York Sun.

Chief Arthur, who is at the head of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, has again exercised the approval of Gen. Harrison's course in the labor riots and on labor questions. Soon after Gen. Harrison was nominated Mr. Arthur said that he saw nothing in his record which should prevent any workingman from voting for him. He has recently reiterated that opinion, and in addressing to the labor disturbances at Indianapolis in 1877, he says, as to Gen. Harrison's utterances there, that in his opinion Gen. Harrison "acted as the Democrats used to say, 'rather in accordance with the Republican' view."—Boston Herald.

Sound Argument.

Said a Democratic workingman in New York the other day: "I would rather pay one cent more for a dinner pail and establish an industry worth $80,000,000 annually to this nation than continue to support 100,000 Englishmen in nasty pot houses, when that number of Americans want employment." The argument is sound. It is sound from the workingman's standpoint especially, and it is sound from the standpoint of every intelligent American citizen.

Let Us All Harrass for Him.

The news from New York is so glorious on the news from Vermont and Maine. Ellis's renomination will bring 25,000 extra votes to the Republicans in the Empire state on Nov. 4.—Globe-Democrat.

Educational

ELOCUTION.
Another Free Trade Lecture—Jay Gould on Wool.

Cleveland and the free traders seem to have found an unexpected ally in the person of Jay Gould, the railroad king of New York. Mr. Gould announces as his opinion that free wool will benefit rather than injure our manufacturers engaged in that branch of industry. Now if the manufacturers can be shown that there his more assertion might have carried some weight with it, but not content to let well enough alone he undertakes to give reasons.

He says: "It will give them free of duty raw material from England and Australia, where the quality is very fine, to mix with the coarser grades grown here. If the wool imports I was of equal grade with ours, the effect might be different, but it is much superior."

Mr. Gould's reasoning is just about as sensible as that of the philosopher who cut two holes in his gate for his two cats, a big hole for the big cat and a little hole for the kitten. It is true that the wool now imported is of a fine grade, but if we admit wool duty free, is it not obvious that wool of low grade will rush in upon us to the detriment of our own wool industry? Not even Mr. Gould could open a flood gate to a rushing river and expect only pure, clear water to come in. It is the low grade wool we want to keep out until we can improve our own clip and raise our own high grade wools.

But Mr. Gould does not know his subject. He trades in wool, but of high grade wool, and the domestic product is certainly increasing, being stimulated by a protective tariff. There are, too, some low grade wools imported, of a special kind, but not in great quantities.

The manufacturers of wool do not agree with Mr. Gould. New England is almost a unit against free wool, and the manufacturers may be supposed to know as much about their own needs as Mr. Gould can, whose labors have been popularly supposed to be confined to the stock exchange, to the making of railroads, to manipulating Wall street, to the making of coloseal fortune out of the misfortunes of others.—San Francisco Chronicle.

MR. MILLS' BILL.

A Few Industries the Democrats Propose to Kill.

The Mills bill declares for—

Free trade in lumber, which we produce to the value of $300,000,000 annually.

Free trade in wool, of which we produce nearly 300,000,000 pounds annually.

Free trade in salt, of which we produce nearly 60,000,000 bushels annually.

Free trade in flax, hemp, jute and other fibers.

Free trade in cement, potash, lime and brick.

Free trade in meats, game and poultry.

Free trade in vegetables, peas and beans.

Free trade in marble and stone.

Free trade in tin plate, which would destroy the sheet iron industries.

Free trade in at least 100 other articles produced in this country, most of which would be produced in sufficient quantities for home consumption if properly protected.

Mr. Cleveland's Native Town.

The following is an extract from a private letter written from Clinton, N. Y.:

"We are deep in political work here. This hall, which had only one vote for Blaine, does not give Cleveland more than one majority over election. There are hundreds of Irish voters in this town who are Republicans and they are all working for Harrison. * * A large manufacturer in this town was always a red hot Democrat, he is now president of a Republican club at Hudson. He wrote me: 'We had to leave the Democratic party and come over to protection or else we could not all we out to elect Harrison and Morton.' This action on his part turns about 30 votes in his ward and has influence in favor in the city. The Democrats of this town have fallen off so fast that they could not get enough to attend their meeting to call the roll, so they were obliged to get a boy to do it. Cleveland would not address so small a crowd. Mr. Smyth, the delegate to the St. Louis convention, was so disgusted with the platform that he will not take any part in the work, and a great many agree that he will vote for Harrison, but it will not be known positively. The claim was made that Onondaga county gave support for that nomination, but the stream is said to be impregnated with that common article, chloride of sodium—salt —when by copious draughts of water he may lose some of his fluid in his tears and still live. At any rate the people—not even excepting the Mugwumps—of Oneida county do not propose to vote any free wool pulled over their eyes. Our last meeting was addressed by a Mugwump, a professor of Hamilton college, on the hill in this town. He said the real issue was free trade, and he stood for voting for Cleveland. He did so because he believed the man meant what he said in his letter of acceptance, and he went to school with him. This is Cleveland's native town."

A "Safe" Man Now Threatens War.

Four years ago Cleveland begged for the support of the business men on the ground that he was pre-eminently a safe person. Blaine was called a demagogue, a dangerous and a jingo candidate. It was asserted that Cleveland was cautious and conservative, and that he must be elected so that our relations with foreign countries might not be disturbed.

The "safe man" was elected, and what has been the result? He has been a failure as a diplomat. When daily tidings came of outrages inflicted by Canadians on American fishermen he was very "safe" that he invited Mr. Chamberlain over here and that we should sacrifice our commercial interests to obtain as a concession from Canada that which he now claims as our own indisputable right.

The "safe man" wanted a renomination, and to conciliate Southern free traders who controlled Democratic conventions he aimed his blow at the protection of our industries, which is paralyzing business in half the states in this country. But this alleged "safe man" knew little about business as about politics, and no person was ever misjudged than himself at the effect of his free trade blow.

A Sound Argument.

Said a Democratic workingman in New York the other day: "I would rather pay one cent more for a dinner pail and establish an industry worth $80,000,000 annually to this nation than continue to support 100,000 Englishmen in nasty pot houses, when that number of Americans want employment." The argument is sound. It is sound from the workingman's standpoint especially, and it is sound from the standpoint of every intelligent American citizen.

Let Us All Harrass for Him.

JOTTINGS.

—"We are coming, Father Abraham!"

—There will be a new orchestra at Music Hall to night.

—If you have voted the Free Trade ticket don't tell your wife.

—The W. C. T. U. rooms are open to-day, and coffee is being furnished free. This afternoon and evening the W. T. A. S. will give away coffee and sandwiches at Reform Hall.

—The Postmaster at Plainfield has been instructed to appoint another letter carrier. Mr. Garret Eick, of West Second street, a U. A. R. man who now acts as a substitute in the office, is said to be fully worthy of the advance the new position would give him; but rumor saith that Mr. Price will pass over the man who fought for liberty and the United States of America and that he will appoint a young man whose only battles have been in the interest of Ward politicians. It is thus that Democratic "heelers" get the reward properly due old soldiers and worthier citizens.

PERSONAL.

Miss Graff, of Newark, is the guest of Miss Florence Honeger, of Carleton avenue.

Archdeacon Kedman, rector of Grace church, Plainfield, preached in Christ church Elizabeth, Sunday night.

Mr. W. C. Rhodes, of New York, is spending a few days with his friend, Mr. Charles Schenck, of Putnam street.

Mr. Frank Reyniger, of Grant avenue, has resigned his position in Colorado and is again in the Colora lo-of-the-East.

Mr. Wm. D. Craig, of Pearl street, who has been traveling in the South and West, returned home last Wednesday.

Miss Florence Honeger, of Carleton avenue, returned home Saturday from Newark, where she has been visiting friends the past week.

Mr. John Smith, of New York city, and Miss Jennie H. Warden, of Jersey City, were married by the Rev. J. H. Parks, at the residence of Mrs. M. H. Quick on East Fifth street, Wednesday, Oct. 24th.

Messrs. P. P. VanArsdale, B. A. Hegeman, and A. Willett were installed as Elders and Messrs. G. W. Dunham, D. VanPelt and H. E. Gayle as Deacons of the Trinity Reformed church Sunday, the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, officiating.

It was refreshing to see the familiar form of Mr. John H. French again in the President's chair at the Reform Club meeting Monday night. President French came all the way from his business in Malone, N. Y., in order to cast his ballot in Plainfield for Harrison, Morton and Protection.

WAS HE PUSHED OFF THE TRAIN?

A Serious Charge About the Death of James Quinn.

Undertakers F. Casey & Son, of this city, went by the 9:15 train to Philadelphia, this morning, to remains of Mr. James Quinn, who was killed by a fall from a passenger train between Grant and Plainfield avenues Saturday night.

It is said that a man who was on the occasion and who came to this city Sunday claims to be say the accident and that Mr. Quinn was pushed from the train.

Mr. Quinn was a member of the Knights of Labor of Philadelphia, and while his remains were being shipped to that city Knights did all in their power to establish his identity.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

THE SIXTEENTH MEETING BRINGS UP IMPORTANT BUSINESS.

Leo Daft Wants to Build an Electric Street Railway.—Others Bid for an Un-Named Motor Road, Probably a Belt Line.

The sixteenth meeting of the Plainfield Common Council was held last evening.

The meeting was called to order by President P. E. Marsh at 8:12. Councilmen Bowers, Clark, Dunham, Dumont, Erickson, Ginna, Marsh, Squires and Watson were present. Councilmen Moffett and Wilbur were absent.

The reading of the minutes of the last meeting was dispensed with.

Petitions from property-owners asking for additional electric lights on East Fourth street, Belvidere, Woodland and Clinton avenues were referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps with power to furnish the number of lamps required. One other, asking for more light on South Second street near the Pond Tool Works, was referred without power.

A communication from Mr. Wm. H. Moore, Manager of the Plainfield Electric Light Company, suggesting that the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps be given more latitude in regard to distributing street lamps, in order that more uniform service may be procured, was filed.

Petitions for licenses from W. F. Traynor, R. Gaddis and Wm. Garry, peddlers, F. Day, hackman, and J. Donohue and W. H. Manning, cartmen, were referred to the Committee on Licenses, and later on were granted.

WANTS MONEY FOR SEWER DAMAGE.

Mr. H. A. Weber, of Liberty street, presented a bill of $107 for goods alleged to be damaged by the overflow of a sewer. Mr. Weber intimated that though he had repeatedly called Council's attention to this matter to heed had been paid, and now he wanted to be reimbursed for property injured, including rag-tables perished with rot. He held the infracting sewer also liable for loss of health. The communication was referred to the Committee on Streets and Public Health.

Father P. E. Smyth and others petitioned for a flagged crosswalk at the corner of Liberty and Sixth streets, near St. Mary's parochial school. The Committee on Streets was given power to grant the petition and to them was also referred the petition of Third Ward taxpayers for a stone crossing at the junction of Fifth and Liberty streets, contiguous a church and two schools.

THE INJURY TO JUDGE SUYDAM'S HORSE.

City Judge George P. Suydam presented a communication asking for compensation or arbitration be appointed to adjust damages on his horse, which was seriously hurt in the legs by breaking through a culvert on South avenue last Wednesday. The horse cost $675, and he would not sell it for $800; it was injured for life.

Mr. Dumont suggested that as the city never builds culverts the claim for damages ought to go before the Board of Freeholders. He moved that the matter be referred to the Committee on Laws and Ordinances. The motion was carried.

THE STREET RAILWAY ROBS UP.

Leo Daft, electrician, in a brief letter recognized the need of immediate rapid transit through Plainfield's thoroughfares and asked that Council examine the operation of a car operated by electricity—to be exhibited at an early date on private property in this city. He proposed to operate a line of these cars on a simple track. The Committee on Streets was instructed to give audience to Mr. Daft as soon as possible. The Committee was also given authority to examine the system projected by Mr. Henry Stowe, President of the Eleventh National Ward Bank of New York, Mr. R. D. Munsell, President of a large metropolitan business concern, ex-Mayor George W. Rockefellow and Mr. Edward L. Sutton, of Plainfield. This quartette petitioned for a franchise to build and operate a suitable street railway to be governed by a safe and efficient motor other than horses or electricity. Their plans will be given a hearing soon.

The following bills went through the usual course and were ordered paid:

SALARIES—Assessor J. R. Hubbard, $8 12.50; C. A. Marsh, 87.50; G. M. Angleman, 50; O. B. Leonard, 50.

MISCELLANEOUS—J. Clark $105; D. A. Rogers, 68.75; Plainfield Electric Light Company $63.22; Plainfield Gas Light Co., 3.38; Benton M'f'g Co., 14.00; T. W. Morrison, 12.70; Times P'tg and Pub. Co., 39.10; J. Johnson, 15.70, 43.65; F. A. Dunham, 18.66, 5.70; R. M. Titsworth, 182; F. A. Dunham, 10, 45.50; Jones & Co., 80; G. M. Angleman, $17.84, 160; Johnson Bros., 180.00; J. H. Wilson, $10.60; Jos. T. Vail, 185.94; Louis F. Wadsworth 12.

POLICE—T. J. Carey, $75; Chas. Giese, 50; Patrick Lynch, 50; G. W. Grant, 50; T. Mc Cue, 50; Frank Fine, 50; W. S. Slitter, 30.

FIRE DEPARTMENT—S. O. Doane, $94.41; H. M. Sherrill, 37.15; Plainfield Gas Light Co., 26.55; I. L. McVoy, 22; W. S. Slitter, 10; W. F. Adams, 31.40. D. E. Scheidecker, 3 80; Jos. Cooney, 10.08; G. M. Angleman, 33.75; T. O. Doane, 50.40.

Poor—Sundry small claims amounting to $285.34.

THAT SMALL-POX JONAH AGAIN.

The bill of Dr. Joseph Hall Platt for fumigating the Schorb house at the time of the Schallbeis small-pox case was refused payment.

The October report of Tax Collector John Johnson—Ring, a total collection of $8,026.21, with 2,300.31 deposited in the hands of the Treasurer of the Board of Education—was placed on file.

City Treasurer Alex. Titsworth's report for the month—giving a balance-on-hand of $7, 210.94—was also filed, as was the quarterly statement of the City Physician.

CHIEF DOANE STRIKES OIL.

A communication from Chief Engineer T. O. Doane recommended the passage of a Fire Department ordinance regulating the storing of kerosene and prohibiting the carrying of lights into rooms where oil is stored. The Chief also recommended the placing of an incandescent electric lamp in front of each engine house. The communication was referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

NEW HOOK AND LADDER MEN.

The Board of Engineers presented the name of Edward T. Grover, J. B. Sharp, Thos. D. Dougherty and C. D. Erwin, newly-elected members to Zephyr Hook and Ladder Co., No. 1, and B. A. Mumford, elected to membership with both Hook and Ladder Co. and Gamelle Engine Co., No. 1. The elections were confirmed.

Mr. Bowers presented a resolution that whereas the point in the contest over the property-line on East Fourth street has been conceded by the contestants and the property fenced in has been surrendered to the city, judgment be entered to make a permanent record and the defendants be released without paying costs. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Erickson moved that fourteen lights be placed on South avenue and others on Plainfield avenue, Washington street, Division street, Park avenue, LaGrande avenue, Spooner avenue, Webster place, Ninth avenue, East Third street and East Second street. A resolution compelling this work was adopted.

RENEWING THE ELECTRIC LIGHT CONTRACT.

On motion of Mr. Erickson the existing contract with the Plainfield Electric Light Company was re-adopted for another year.

MR. MARTINE SUCCUMBS.

Mr. Erickson reported that the opinion of Corporation Counsel regarding the matter of placing electric lights in front of Mr. Martine's property on Park place would not be needed, as Mr. Martine had withdrawn his objections, and the poles, wires and lights, would be put in position.

Money in the Collector's hands contributed for crushed stone was ordered transferred to the general fund.

A crosswalk was ordered for West Front street extending from the terminus of the Park avenue sidewalk on the westerly side of the avenue.

REGULATING KEROSENE STORAGE.

Mr. Erickson presented an ordinance providing that no dealer in petroleum shall have on hand at one time over 225 barrels of oil, nor over five barrels unless the building is only one story high and fireproof, violation of this to be made punishable by a fine of $100 or by 60 days' imprisonment. The ordinance with the amendment that no more than two empty oil-barrels shall be stored or kept standing on sidewalks, under penalty of $50 with the additional proviso that each collected party be served by the Chief Engineer with a notice to remove all oil stored in violation of the ordinance under further penalty of $100 fine or 60 days' imprisonment or both.

Suggestions for revision were made, and the ordinance was laid on the table.

The ordinance compelling hackmen to display their numbers in figure at least one inch by half long was passed on its third reading.

Adjourned at 9:45.

Owing to the reports that laundryman Sam Sing, of Harrison, was poisoned with lye-water nearly all the laundries in that place have been injured. Sam King, of No. 49 Harrison avenue, who made a specialty of fine work, has retired from business and will go back to China.

The cars on the New Brunswick street railroad tracks will be run by electricity on the storage battery system, instead of being driven by horses. The improved system was tested for the first time yesterday. Other mechanical arrangements can be made, and Superintendent Sebolt has already been instructed to get the engine for generating the electricity.

THE BATTLE OF BALLOTS

SCENES AND INCIDENTS AT THE POLLS TO-DAY.

Everybody Excited Over the Contest Between Protection and Free Trade.—Both Parties Confidently Discuss the Situation.

The News to-day is issued in the midst of the great political battle, and citizens are now determining by their ballots whether Protection or Free Trade shall rule. There is a great deal of warm discussion on all sides, and the voters of both parties seem sanguine of success.

Last night there was great excitement on the streets. Party feeling ran high. There were cheers for Harrison and Morton, and cheers for Cleveland and Thurman; and each man argued hotly that his candidate would win. A Democrat, being asked the reason for his faith in success, said "We can't lose. We have the saloons in our favor, the solid South with us, and England at our backs." Republicans rested confident in the patriotism of the American people.

TRYING TO JAIL REPUBLICANS.

A Democratic Scheme for Hurting Protection's Party.

The first man on whom the local Democrats have attempted to fasten their clutches by locking him up over Election Day is Mr. Wm. T. Claassen, barber, of West Front street, who was arrested last night for perjury. The charge—made by Mr. William Pangborn—is that Mr. Claassen, at the naturalization of a fellow-German at Somerville, swore falsely that he had known him over five years. It is claimed that two years was the extent of the acquaintanceship. Mr. Claassen was arrested by Constable Sebring, of Bound Brook, and was taken before Justice Wads worth, who, recognizing a Republican in the toils, fixed the bail at the exorbitant sum of $2,000, thereby hoping to keep him confined and from working at the polls to-day. Much to the chagrin of the Democrats, the bail was furnished by ex-Postmaster Elias R. Pope and Justice Vincent W. Nash, and Mr. Claassen was freed.

A North Plainfield official was arrested on a similar charge. He furnished $50 bail before Justice Crosby and was liberated. He will prove his innocence at the proper time, which is to a certain extent already acknowledged by the complainant.

Challenges Plentiful.

There is considerable challenging on both sides, more in the First Ward than in any other. In the cases of native-born citizens the challenged ones swear in their votes, but it is reported that several foreigners who tried to vote the Democratic ticket, unable, when challenged, to produce their papers, were barred out.

A Woman at the Polls.

For probably the first time in Plainfield's history a woman is working at the polls. This is Mrs. W. W. Harger, who is enthusiastically distributing Prohibition tickets in the First Ward. Her conduct is generally condemned by both parties.

Voting in a Tin Pail.

There was something the matter with the Fourth Ward ballot box early this morning, and as it wouldn't work the ballots at first had to be cast in a tin pail, which by 6:30 held seventy tickets. The box was made to work later.

The Local Vote Will be Big.

At noon it is said that nearly 500 of the 776 registered in the Fourth Ward had voted, thus casting aside all fears that many citizens would be unable to vote, even at the rate of one a minute. The balloting at all the polls is large.

Where to Hear the News.

In order that anxious hearts may hear the best—or worst—at the earliest possible moment, arrangements have been made to receive and announce election returns at the places designated below:

At Republican Headquarters, over the City National Bank, East Front street.

At the Independent Democratic Tariff Reform Club rooms, East Fifth street.

At Reform Hall, where coffee and sandwiches will be furnished by the Women's Temperance Aid Society, day and evening.

At Stillman Music Hall, where Neil Burgess will appear in "The County Fair," furnishing both amusement and vitally interesting facts.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

HAYTI LAYING UP TROUBLE.

Another American Vessel Detained—The Kearsarge Will Not Hurry.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—The brig Richard T. Greene, Capt. Patrick, arrived from the Gonaives, Hayti. She reports that on Oct. 15, when off St. Marc, she was ordered to leave to by a Haytian man of war, whose armed officers and men came on board three different times, taking away the ship's register and all her papers, and threatening to take her to Port au Prince as a prize. After detaining the vessel some time the papers were returned and the vessel allowed to proceed.

Since the revolution in Hayti was begun two vessels have been seized by a Haytian man of war and taken into a Haytian port as prizes. The first one was the steamer Haytian Republic, which was confiscated for attempting to force a blockade of the port of St. Marc. The other seizure was that of a British vessel. The United States government has sent the cruiser Boston to Port au Prince to protect American interests there.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 6.—The orders directing the United States steamer Kearsarge, recently put out of service, to be ready for sea by next Saturday and to proceed to Hayti to protect American interests there, have been countermanded, and she will remain at the yard five or six weeks.

Yellow Fever Record.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 6.—There were thirty-nine new cases reported and two deaths—Eloy Tousey and William Benemer. Sixteen of the new cases are whites. The first sign of life and gaiety in Fernandina for months was furnished by the parading of a company of about 100 colored Republicans with a band of music last evening.

Striking the Sugar Trust.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—The attorney general of California has begun suit to annul the charter of the American sugar refinery, on the ground that it has joined the "Sugar Refineries company" or trust, which is an unlawful combination in restraint of trade and for the enhancement of prices by limiting supply.

A Shortage Becoming Larger.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 6.—An investigation of the books of the County Treasurer Wolff, who disappeared in September last, from Yellville, Ark., already shows a shortage of $1,000, and it will probably reach a greater sum. Robert Wolff, his son, was taken ill, and died, while searching for his father.

The Rand-Avery Failure.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—The Rand-Avery company have been in the printing and lithographing business.

Arrested for Alleged Fraud.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 6.—Ex-Supervisor E. L. Morrison was arrested last night and held in $5,000 bail to answer a charge of fraud in registration. His co-clerk, an ex-convict named Drake, who, on being arrested for false registration, claimed to have been acting under Morrison's advice.

Easy to Even a School-Girl.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—In looking over Saturday's Press I find the following:

"We still ask an answer to this question: If high tariff means high wages, why is it that China, that has had a very high tariff for 200 years, pays common laborers every cents per day and skilled laborers 30 cents? Will somebody explain?"

This question can easily be answered. The United States has 3,600,000 square miles, while China has 2,000,000 square miles, and the inhabitants of the United States number 60,000,000, while the population of China comprises 400,000,000. Many Chinese are compelled to live on the water, in boats, as the population is so numerous; and the supply of labor is greater than the demand. I am ONLY A SCHOOL-GIRL.

THURSDAY NEWS

THE CAPITAL DESERTED.

All the Politicians Have Gone Home to Vote.

SOME HAPPENINGS OF INTEREST.

Representative Foran's Remarks—Noted Catholics at the Tabernacle Quarterly Meeting—How the Aqueduct is Built. A Noteworthy Dramatic "First Night."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The capital is deserted by the politicians to-day. They have all gone home or to New York to take a closer view of the canvass.

Maj. Robert A. Parke, the passenger agent of the southwestern district of the Pennsylvania railroad, said that he thought at least 25 per cent more have gone from the city than at the last election. The Pennsylvania shore line alone will have been running heavy excursions Sunday and Monday many Pennsylvania, New York and Indiana voters went home. Those leaving yesterday were chiefly Maryland and Virginia men.

There is a special wire in the White House at all times, and to-night the operator will have instructions to receive the press reports and such private dispatches as may be sent to the president from Biltes and others.

Representative Foran happened in the city to-day in his railroading connection on his way home from New York. He has been stumping in New York state and Pennsylvania for Cleveland. He said to a reporter: "I think Cleveland is going to be elected, but by the Lord Harry, we are not so far out of the woods that we can't shout much. It will be fully curious election. Nothing can surprise me in it. You can't tell much from the opinion of a politician, however, for he may be for Ball for ways he ought to be colored by his desires. Now I think we are going to carry Indiana for Cleveland. Republicans, I hear, say their organization in that state is better than ours. If that is so, they may beat us. I should not be surprised if we carried Ohio; no would I be surprised if we were under. I think we shall bound to make a great reduction in the Republican majority there. I think we are going to carry New York."

MEETING OF THE TABERNACLE SOCIETY.

The quarterly meeting of the Tabernacle society was held here. The presence of Bishop Keane and Lady Herbert, of Eng land, gave additional interest to the meeting. The society provides poor churches throughout the country with vestments and the necessaries for the celebration of the Catholic church service.

The president is Mrs. Vance, wife of Senator Vance. The ladies arose and remained standing when Bishop Keane entered the hall. As Lady Herbert was standing near the door she was almost the first to greet the distinguished divine, sinking on her knees and pressing her lips to the ring which he wore on the second finger of the right hand. The other ladies as they greeted the bishop saluted the ring.

A letter was also read from Cardinal Simeoni expressing the appreciation of the pope for the work of the society.

Bishop Keane made an address in which he spoke of the condescension of the lord in leaving the throne of heaven to come down and dwell in the surroundings provided for him in the poverty of human means.

In succeeding the bishop spoke of the presence of Lady Herbert and said that she was one of the leaders in the movement which he believed would eventually result in the reconversion of England to the faith of the Catholic church.

Lady Herbert responded briefly, giving some account of the work in which she is engaged in England.

THE GO-BEHIND FRAUD.

The initial report of inquiry to investigate the fining of the go-behind aqueduct has resumed its sittings. Several witnesses testified as to the character of the packages.

Dennis Wren, a laborer, said in reply to a question: "I tried to fill all the spaces until the inspectors told us that that was enough."

In speaking of the inspection of Lucas, Wren remarked that some days the packing was done carefully and at other times the inspection was overlooked entirely. Lucas occupied the time of a dozen witnesses who were called to testify to the character of the packing.

About the Arctic Ocean.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Nov. 6.—Capt. Healy, of the steam revenue cutter Bear, has reached port with dispatches. The board of trade rooms yesterday. He gave valuable information with respect to the Arctic ocean. Its winds, currents, ice packs and many matters of living opened to be studied crews who might escape to the shore. He said that when the alarming reports were received from the Jeannette in Siberia he had been asked to the 1st of September he gave them no credence whatever, and that the statement with respect to expeditions being sent out by the Russian Islands and at San Francisco for their relief were purely imaginative.

Either a Pauper or Millionaire Now.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 6.—If R. C. Kerens, of St. Louis, is to be believed, Chairman Quay will either be a millionaire or a pauper after to-day. Kerens has $10,000 on Harrison, the money being placed by Quay in New York. Kerens says that Quay has disposed of over $250,000 of his Pennsylvania property, with which he has backed Harrison, so sure does he feel of Republican success. Kerens says that Quay has a big deal on in the lumber manufacturer, has backed Harrison for something like half a million. Saturday Kerens, in partnership with Quay, bet $10,000 against like amount on Harrison, and wagered $5,000 even with a local Democrat.

Another Queer Election Bet.

BUFFALO, Nov. 5.—Ethel Wilson, who lives with her father on a farm in Cheektowaga, near the city line, made a peculiar bet with her affianced husband, a railroad man named Oesthofer. If Cleveland was elected she will ride her father's milk white mare bareback from Buffalo to Niagara Falls, a distance of twenty-two miles, under the toll road, and if a good horsewoman. Gothofer agrees to swim the Niagara river at Blackrock if Harrison is elected. The loser must perform the feat before Dec. 1. Miss Wilson has the best of the bargain in case of losing, for her lover does not know how to swim.

Explosion of Corn Starch Dust.

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—An explosion of corn starch dust last evening damaged the fire proof building used as a store house for the big sugar refinery near the Twelfth street viaduct to the extent of $10,000. Magnus Hammel, a laborer, was dangerously burned about the face and hands, and his fellow workmen nearly destroyed by hot air. Several other laborers were stunned by the explosion, but not seriously hurt.

Gratitude of the Czar for His Escape.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 6.—The czar has issued a manifesto stating that he shares with the people their thanks to God for his miraculous escape from death in last Monday's railroad accident. He says: "May the providence who protected our life and consecrated it to the country's welfare strengthen us to faithfully discharge the great vocation that to will has laid upon us."

MORE SHOOTING IN COURT.

An Outraged Father Attempts to Take Justice Into His Own Hands.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 6.—At Webster Groves, a suburb of St. Louis, three negroes—Grant Boyd, Will Stinger and Coon Rhodes—tried to assault Alice and Emma, daughters of Lawyer Gaither. They threw a cloth over Alice's face and bore her to the ground. Emma, the younger sister, was treated in like manner, but she struggled with her assailants until the fiend herself sufficiently to cry out for help. Her piercing screams brought aid and the negroes fled. When carried into the house Emma went into convulsions and her life was despaired of. Alice soon recovered and gave a description of the negroes.

Grant Boyd and Coon Rhodes were captured. They were taken before Judge Coffey for a preliminary hearing, before an immense crowd. Alice Baker was there, aided by her father, but Emma was unable to appear. Alice was called on by the judge to identify her assailants. Pointing at Rhodes, she said: "There is the man who threw me down."

She had scarcely ceased speaking when her father sprang to his feet and, drawing a revolver, fired point blank at Rhodes, the bullet grazing his head. The father was seized and prevented from doing further harm. The negroes fell on their knees and began to pray piteously for mercy. Two revolvers were found on Mr. Baker, and he evidently intended to kill both of the negroes. Rhodes and Boyd were bound over and taken to the county jail at Clayton.

HIS LAST SLEEP.

A Tramp Attempts to Enter a Dynamite Store House for Lodging, and Explodes Three Tons of It with Awful Effect;

PITTSBURG, Nov. 6.—A terrific explosion of three tons of nitro-glycerine startled the residents of the Ohio valley for ten miles on all sides of Shannopin at 4:30 yesterday morning.

The magazine was located on a hill west of Shannopin. It was a frame building which had been used for many years for the storage of explosive for two or three years. There were several houses adjacent, the nearest of which, owned by a family named McCoy, suffered severely by the concussion. The shock threw all of the inmates out of their beds, broke the windows, burst open the doors and generally made things lively. The next house, owned by Joseph Leech, was almost as badly used up, and Joseph Now's cottage had a somewhat similar experience.

A grove of lofty trees encircled the magazine. Tall oaks were torn from their roots, and some of them were split into splinters. There are not a dozen trees standing but they feel deep under the place where the explosive was stored.

The theory of the explosion is that a tramp tried to enter the store room to sleep there, and that in some way he ignited the nitro-glycerine, perhaps by hammering at the door and striking a match to light a pipe which he was on the second finger of the right hand. The other ladies as they greeted the bishop saluted the ring.

A letter was also read from Cardinal Simeoni expressing the appreciation of the pope for the work of the society.

Bishop Keane made an address in which he spoke of the condescension of the lord in leaving the throne of heaven to come down and dwell in the surroundings provided for him in the poverty of human means.

IT MAY END PEACEFULLY

Trying to Effect a Compromise Between the Rawsons.

CHICAGO'S CELEBRATED CASE.

It Has Thus Far Led to Two Nearly Successful Attempts at Murder and Endless Legal Complications—Judge Jamieson's Effort.

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—It is announced that the notorious Rawson divorce case, which has had so many strange and startling phases during the two years it has been in the courts, is almost at an end. It is understood among the lawyers that a compromise has been made between the banker and his wife, and Judge Jamieson, before whom some of the issues of this extraordinary suit have been tried, is the reported master. The terms of settlement are these: Mr. Rawson agrees to give his wife $40,000, and her divorce suit on the ground of desertion will be allowed to go by default. All other suits—when any appear—will be dropped. Mr. Rawson retracts his charges against his wife's character, and the criminal prosecution against her for shooting Col. Whitney will be dismissed.

The history of the troubles of the Rawsons would fill a book. Stephen W. Rawson is one of the wealthiest men in Chicago, and is about 60 years old. Four years ago he married Miss America L. Lee, a remarkably handsome woman, more than twenty years his junior. She had been twice married, was once a cashier clerk at Washington, and before that something of a watering place belle. Mr. Rawson lived with his bride in a magnificent marble front residence on the west side, but in a few months it was common talk that the couple did not get on well together, and in the fall of 1887 Mr. Rawson applied for divorce on the ground of unfaithfulness.

The only witness he had was a sleeping car porter, and his testimony was confessedly that he had sworn falsely, and the case was thrown out of court. Since then Mr. Rawson has filed amended bills, his wife has filed cross bills, depositions have been taken and sur-rejoinders, affidavits, depositions and traverses, until the accumulation is far beyond any precedent in the annals of divorce case. Both parties to the suit have had detectives watching each other, and whenever a detective saw a chance for an affidavit one was instantly added to the pile.

Mrs. Rawson had a son, Ralph Lee, and he was the cause of a good deal of the trouble between the banker and his wife. On Sunday, Oct. 15 of last year, young Lee crept up behind Mr. Rawson as he was having church and shot him in the back. The wound was supposed to be fatal, but Mr. Rawson got well and young Rawson was sent to prison for a year. His mother was indicted for complicity, but the trial was postponed several times and finally the case was dropped. June 1 Mrs. Rawson's lawyers went before Judge Jamieson to urge a speedy hearing of the suit. Col. H. L. Whitney was sitting against them when Mrs. Rawson dashed into the room and shot him twice. His wounds were also supposed to be mortal, but he is alive, though very feeble. Mrs. Rawson was indicted, but has not yet been tried. Last week she filed a new bill of divorce for desertion.

Kettle Creek Mine Horror.

RENOVO, Pa., Nov. 6.—The coroner held an inquest on the victims of the Kettle Creek mine horror yesterday, but the jury has not rendered a verdict yet. The cause of the explosion is still a mystery. The bodies of the dead were buried to-day. Of the sixteen dead, thirteen have no relatives in this country, and they were buried in the cemetery here. Of the others, Anthony Lenox was buried in Snowshed and Wellsville, N. Y. When the bodies were discovered after the explosion they were mostly found many feet away from where they had been killed. One man, that of a boy 19 years old was in a sitting posture against the side of the mine. His right hand held his left foot in a firm grip, and it was a difficulty that the fingers were opened. The body of Michal Curren, which was blown 150 feet beyond the mine, was lodged between two logs, and in his right hand clutched the handle of the shovel with which he was working when the explosion occurred.

Fatal Jealousy.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 6.—At 6 o'clock in the morning the dead bodies of Anderson Taylor and her husband, Allen Taylor, both colored, were found in the basement of Edgefield baptist church parsonage, where Anderson Taylor had been living. The woman lay on the floor and the man on the bed. The throat of each was cut, and the woman's head bore the mark of a severe blow with a hatchet, and in the bedside of the shovel with which he was working when the explosion occurred.

CONDENSED NEWS.

In Elmer county, Ala., John Ray and W. T. Wilkinson quarreled and fought over a large tract of land which they had just purchased. Ray was shot dead and Wilkinson received 100 shots, which failed to kill the latter.

The clothing store of Beard & McCartney, in Haverhill, Mass., was robbed Sunday night. The firm carry a large stock, most of which was overwhelmed by the flood. About $300 worth of jewelry was also stolen.

Paguet's planing mills in Montreal were destroyed by fire. Loss, $80,000. No insurance.

Frank Day, a young Canadian, was stabbed and killed during a political quarrel in Chicago.

The Buchanan (Mich.) manufacturing furniture factory burned early Monday, also half of the company's lumber yard. The loss is from $30,000 to $60,000. The concern employed 100 men.

Fritz Graves, a wealthy farmer of the town of Oak Creek, Wis., died Sunday, and his son August is held on the charge of murdering his father. The elder Graves was 70 years old, and his son 37.

Buck & Trasler, general merchants of Crawfordsville, Ark., have failed. The liabilities are $150,000; assets $90,000, principally in accounts.

A Chicago paper thinks that wheat will go higher because of a shortage of the stock in store by farmers.

AN INHUMAN SEA CAPTAIN.

Sailors Fed on Rotten Meat and Tortured in Various Ways.

TACOMA, W. T., Nov. 6.—Sixteen sailors of the ship Rocks, which arrived here loaded with wheat for Great Britain, entered suit in the district court against Capt. Snow, of that vessel, for cruelty. They allege that the Rocks started for Cardiff, Wales, with a crew of sixteen men. After she had been out but a short time the captain began feeding his men on rotten meat and potatoes, which were not fit to eat, and both Capt. Snow and his mate shamefully abused the sailors. While near Cape Horn Capt. Snow attacked the carpenter, breaking his jaw and knocking out many teeth. A few days later he nearly killed one of the men.

When dissatisfied by the poor food they were unable to work and were at times put in the hole and tied up forty-eight hours. One of the men was tied to a stanchion four days without food. During this time his scanty rations were placed within sight, but out of reach. When the Rocks reached Arapulco the men were weak from ill treatment and insufficient food. They were cast into a dungeon and kept confined until the vessel was ready to sail. They then applied to the United States consul at Acapuco, but were unable to obtain any assistance from that quarter.

Three Blocks Burned.

GARY, Ind., Nov. 6.—An incendiary fire wiped out three of the largest business blocks in town. The fire was discovered in Ends & Bartlett's hardware store, and every effort was made to save the building property. The only means of fighting the fire was by buckets. Several families living in the upper stories escaped in their night clothes. Many poor families are entirely destitute. The heaviest loser is E. N. Fyten, who lost $16,000 on stock and building.

Two Men Fatally Injured.

PORTLAND, Me., Nov. 6.—The powder mills at Ganbo, belonging to the Oriental Powder company, and consisting of four frame buildings, blew up, fatally injuring Walter Childs and Edward Williams, the only two men on the mills at the time. Both were fearfully burnt by the flying fragments and cannot live. Childs, who is 40 years of age, has a wife and child. The buildings were not worth much, and are a total loss.

A Boy's Head Blown Off.

CARLISLE, Pa., Nov. 6.—Two boys, one a son of David Hoffman and the other a son of Wesley Rudolph, both of Mount Holly, went gunning near this place. Becoming tired, they laid down in the brush to rest. While in that position McClymond drew his rifle toward him; the hammer caught in the brush and the gun was discharged into his head, almost tearing it from his body.

Run Down By Drunken Equestrians.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—At College Point a regular market gardener named Joseph Kruger was wantonly run down in the street, trampled and killed by a half dozen drunken fellows mounted on mustangs, who were riding recklessly through the town. The men have been traced to a riding school in Brooklyn, but their identity is not yet established.

Terrible Accusations.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 6.—Madison Steinecke, of Hancock and Cumberland streets, was held in $1,500 bail, charged with a serious crime. The prisoner keeps a candy store in the rear of his place, which is opposite a public school. He is accused of assaulting four little girls whose ages range from 6 to 13 years, who are pupils at the school.

Heavy Election Bets.

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—Frank Shaw, the St. Paul pool room proprietor, came to town with $10,000 to wager at even money on Harrison's success in New York and Jason A. Murphy, the commission man, who has $25,000 wagered on Democratic chances, covered the bet. The $10,000 was deposited in the First National bank.

Suicide of a Vagrant.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 6.—A young man named Charles Cooper, who was committed to the jail in this city on Oct. 29 under the name of John Whyian, hanged himself in his cell early in the morning. He is said to be an arrested with him that the real name was John Harrigan, and that his parents lived at Salem.

Rev. Mr. Williamson Will Accept.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—A special has been received here from Rev. George Williamson Smith, D. D., of Grace M. E. church, leaving no doubt that he will accept the assistant bishopric of the Northern Ohio Episcopal diocese. This will end a long and somewhat bitter fight over the Protestant Episcopal church of this section.

Fatal Explosion.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—Sixteen sailors of the ship Rocks, which arrived here loaded with wheat for Great Britain, entered suit in the district court against Capt. Snow, of that vessel, for cruelty. They allege that the Rocks started for Cardiff, Wales, with a crew of sixteen men. After she had been out but a short time the captain began feeding his men on rotten meat and potatoes, which were not fit to eat, and both Capt. Snow and his mate shamefully abused the sailors. While near Cape Horn Capt. Snow attacked the carpenter, breaking his jaw and knocking out many teeth. A few days later he nearly killed one of the men.

When dissatisfied by the poor food they were unable to work and were at times put in the hole and tied up forty-eight hours. One of the men was tied to a stanchion four days without food. During this time his scanty rations were placed within sight, but out of reach. When the Rocks reached Arapulco the men were weak from ill treatment and insufficient food. They were cast into a dungeon and kept confined until the vessel was ready to sail. They then applied to the United States consul at Acapuco, but were unable to obtain any assistance from that quarter.

GOSSIP OF ALL EUROPE.

England's Cabinet Discussing the Sackville Affair.

WHAT WILL THEY DO ABOUT IT?

LONDON, Nov. 6.—It is undeniably a fact that the cabinet devoted the most of the time consumed by its meeting to discussion of the Sackville incident, despite the persistent denials of the attaches of the foreign office that the affair was even mentioned. Previous to the meeting, it is learned, Lord Salisbury conferred with prominent officials and experts in the various departments with a view of obtaining data of the most important precedents touching the case of the dismissed minister, and he also received dispatches by special messenger from the minister in attendance upon the queen at Balmoral with reference to the matter. Later in the afternoon there were persistent rumors in the neighborhood of the foreign office that the cabinet had decided to leave the Washington legation in the hands of a charge d'affaires for at least a year, but none of the reports could be traced to any reliable authority. It is more than likely, however, that a new minister will be appointed shortly after the reassembling of parliament.

Mr. Gladstone's references to the Sackville affair, in his speech at Birmingham yesterday, were wholly unexpected, and although they were received with cheers, the opinion would have prefegred that he should not have made them. His remarks will possibly be misrepresented or misinterpreted in America and the government will have to complain that the ex-premier has endeavored to embarrass the government in foreign negotiations of the most delicate nature.

Mr. Buckle, the editor of The Times, had a protracted interview with Lord Salisbury, presumably on the subject, and the proceedings before the Parnell commiss on, and it is whispered that the premier expressed his disgust at the weakness of The Times' case as presented in the Parnell commission and as revealed by the subsequent testimony.

What Mr. Gladstone Said.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—Mr. Gladstone arrived at Birmingham yesterday, where he will remain until Friday. He was received with great enthusiasm. He was driven to the town hall in a carriage drawn by four horses. A great crowd met him and numerous deputations presented him with speeches. Mr. Gladstone said in addition that the addresses recognized the fact that the Irish question was really the English, Scotch and Welsh question, and until that question was settled the country could expect that there neither peace nor progress. He said that efforts to solve the fisheries question with the United States had, unfortunately, proved a failure. The Liberals did not wish to increase the difficulties of a settlement, but they were desirous that by a judicious choice of persons, and by the consideration of measures the question should be settled in a manner tending to draw both countries in closer relations. The Sackville matter, he said, was unfortunate. It resulted in the withdrawal of a serious character, and if a search were made it would be found that the addresses recognized the fact that the Irish question was really the English, Scotch and Welsh question, and until that question was settled that

BURDETTE'S PHILOSOPHY.

YET THEY SAY NOTHING IS LOST.

An eminent cook (not Joseph) says that beef loses one-third of its weight in baking. It loses about three times that much when so be that a tramp or the neighbor's dog gets into the kitchen.

GETTING DOWN TO THE LEVEL.

"Is the country out your way settling very rapidly?" wrote an Indiana man to a friend in Oregon. "So fast it would make your head swim," the friend wrote back; "a land slide last week took my farm of 500 acres from the mountain side and dumped it into the valley in twenty-seven minutes."

A CLEAR DIRECTION.

A letter was mailed in Pittsburg recently addressed to "The Secretary of the Knavy Department," and the intelligent postal clerk sent it to the warden of the state penitentiary.

WARMED HIM UP.

"I believe" said the traveler, "that I would have frozen to death one night last winter, while crossing a spur of the Rocky mountains, but for a highwayman. I had no blanket and no buffalo robe, and was at the point of freezing when the stage was stopped and the kind hearted robber, seeing my condition, covered me with a revolver."—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

Appearances Are Deceitful.

Don't judge a man by appearances wholly, unless you are prepared for surprises. Two men who started out from Fort Fairfield a while ago in search of oats were set back. After going about a dozen miles they found a log-house, whose owner, in reply to questions, stated that he had required 150 bushels to sell. When the purchasers got ready to pay for the oats they could show only $60 in change and a $500 bill. "Now, see here, Pat," they said, "we're in a fix. What will you do; take the $40 and trust us for the balance, or take back the oats?" "I'll do neither," said Pat, "I'll change the bill" which he did.—Lewiston Journal.

Percy—My trousers! They are the tightest on the street! I am a mortal behind the style. Quick, or I shall faint with shame!—Life.

Both from the Same Place.

Here is a slight contribution to that amusing collection of things which one "would rather have left unsaid." Gossip assigns the authorship to the wife of one of the most prominent citizens in the house of representatives. She was entertaining a number of friends at her house, the other day, when a gentleman entered the room, closely followed by another, whom he led up to where the lady of the house was standing, with the words:

"Mrs. C—, permit me to present to you a particular friend of mine, Mr. ——, of Demerara."

"So glad to see you, Mr. ——," replied Mrs. C— promptly, "so glad to see you!" and with an evident desire to say something graceful and at the same time something that would make her new acquaintance feel thoroughly at home, she added:

"I have a parrot that comes from Demerara."

Imagine the startling effect of such a speech upon an unsuspecting stranger!—New York Tribune.

A Man of Sin.

Magistrate (to Uncle Rastus)—This policeman, Uncle Rastus, says he caught you stealing chickens last night.

Uncle Rastus—Yes, sah, an' I tole de gemman when he 'rested me dat de minister was comin' for dinner de nex' day, an' I hadn't a scrap to meet in de house. Yo' see, sah, it was a matter of religyun wif me. It wouldn't do ter disappint one ob de Lawd's elect.

Magistrate—And what did the policeman say?

Uncle Rastus—He said "Rats," sah. Now, yer honah, dat man hain't got 'nuff respec' for de religius side ob life ter be ev'n remotely connected wif de majesty ob de law.—New York Sun.

Suspected a Trap.

"Here's an article headed 'Marvelous Escape of a Distinguished Citizen from a Horrible Death,'" said the dutiful daughter, who was reading the morning paper to her invalid father. "The friends of Mr. J. Alpheus Bramble were shocked on learning a few mornings ago that"——

"Jane," interrupted the irritable parent, "before you read any more of that you will oblige me if you'll look about half way down to the bottom of the article and see whose patent medicine it's advertising."—Chicago Tribune.

Esthetic Movings.

Furniture Mover—What did you do with those kitchen utensils, washtubs and odds and ends?

Professor (dryly)—Yes, it will show that you have received a college education.—Philadelphia Record.

Illustrating His Idea.

A Boston boy was telling his father one day of a schoolmate's attempt to sing. "And time," said the 10-year-old, in deep disgust; "why he didn't keep any better time than a cow when a dog's running after her."—Christian Advocate.

The Leveling Process.

"I washed Willie's pants t'odder day, and dey shrunk so dat de po' chile kin ha'dly walk in um. Won'er how I gwan fix um?" "Try washin' de chile. Maybe he shrink, too."—Harper's Young People.

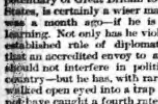
THE BRITISH MINISTER.

LORD SACKVILLE, ERSTWHILE SIR LIONEL SACKVILLE WEST.

Something About the Man Who Has Managed to Put His Foot in It So Nicely—His Record and His Interesting Family of Daughters.

Lord Sackville, ex-while the Hon. Sir Lionel S. Sackville West, K. C. M. G., envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Great Britain to the United States, is certainly a wiser man than he was a month ago—if he is capable of learning. Not only has he violated a long established rule of diplomatic usage—that an accredited envoy to any country should not interfere in politics of that country—but he has, with rare stupidity, walked open eyed into a trap that would not have caught a fourth rate American politician. A letter is received by him purporting to come from an Englishman naturalized in America, and asking how that Anglo-American ought to vote at this election, and the minister answers it in a letter of feeble platitudes that can only be understood by reference to the letter of inquiry.



LORD SACKVILLE. FLORA SACKVILLE.

The Scripture tells us that the net is spread in vain in the sight of any bird, but this is an exception. And Lord Sackville is a very "old bird" indeed, for he has been in the diplomatic and other public service for forty-one years, and much of that time a man of much social prominence. He has been at Washington the social capital of the national capital; his annual balls to the diplomatic corps, officials of the state department and other dignitaries were the great events of the season, and his three lovely daughters were admired and courted by all the young diplomats. The marriage last June of his daughter, Miss Flora, to Monsieur Gabriel Salanson, of the French legation, was thought to be an affair of international interest, and many columns of description were telegraphed from Paris. His house in Washington was the standard for all that is elegant, and though the British government allowed him $30,000 a year for entertaining, his expenses went far beyond that. It may safely be said that the belles and beaux of Washington will mourn his departure—for go he must—as much as the politicians will, presumably, rejoice.

Lord Sackville is a son of the fifth Earl of Warr, and was born July 19, 1827. He was tred to diplomacy and other public business, and at the age of 20 was made attache to the British legation at Lisbon. In 1851 he was made first attache at Berlin; in 1858 secretary of legation at Turin, then the capital of Victor Emmanuel, who subsequently united Italy in one kingdom. He was soon promoted to charge d'affaires, and served in that capacity till 1863, when he was transferred to Madrid; in 1867 he was promoted to be secretary of embassy at Berlin, and finally reached the top rank as minister plenipotentiary at Paris in 1868 and 1869. After a brief interval in London he again served as minister at Paris in 1871 and 1872. In September of the latter year he was made minister to the Argentine Republic; was transferred to Spain in 1878 and to the United States in 1881.

One would naturally suppose that such an experience would have developed his bump of caution till it stuck out like a door knob, especially his work in Paris in the days of intrigue in 1871; and now, to be taken in by an unknown American, is certainly humiliating to him and exasperating to his government. The name of Sir Lionel's father is better known in America as Delaware, the "De la" meaning "of the," so it is given above in the old peerage style as "Warr." He is a descendant of that Sir Thomas West who was governor general of Virginia early in the seventeenth century, and from whom the Delaware river is named. Early in life he married the Lady Elizabeth, daughter of the Duke of Dorset, of a family ennobled by William the Conqueror, and as the ladies of both families have long been noted for their beauty, it is not a matter of surprise that the three daughters of Minister West are among the noted beauties of the age. Lady Mildred Sackville West was quite noted in her time, both for beauty and social grace. As she died before he came to America, his eldest daughter, Victoria, has always been the presiding lady of the legation. All the daughters were born and reared in France, French is their mother tongue; so they learned English by the same lingual gymnastics and mental wrestles with orthographical anomalies and conjugational intricacies as bother other foreigners. The second daughter, Amelia, completed the language in the United States and speaks it with a piquant French accent. Miss Victoria, still unmarried and owning to twenty-four years, is a lady of many accomplishments and a prime favorite in Washington. Miss Flora, now Mme. Salanson, married in Paris on the 16th of June last, is tall and classical looking, with a fine Grecian profile. Miss Amelie, the youngest, is more petite and a demure beauty.

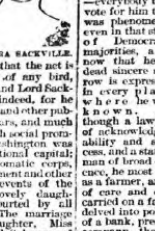
The British minister's house at Washington is owned by the British government, and luxuriously furnished throughout; it is among the largest residences in the city, has as much interior space and more social conveniences than the presidential mansion. For many years the British legation at Washington has been noted for the beauty of its ladies, and among the wives of attaches are several noted beauties.

The British nobility is so connected by marriage that it is no surprise to learn that Minister West's sister was the second wife of the late Marquis of Salisbury, and therefore stepmother to the present Lord Salisbury, premier of England, and ex-official chief of the department of foreign affairs. Since the death of the marquis she has married the earl of Derby. It is not at all uncommon a thing to dismiss foreign ministers as might be supposed, from the fact that it has not happened for many years in this country. Washington requested the recall of the French Genet; Taylor peremptorily ordered Poussin, also French, to withdraw from Washington, and Grant refused recognition to Catacazy, the Russian minister, whose government recalled him. Three times in three-quarters of a century is not very often, but Minister West should have known better on general principles.

EX-GOVERNOR HAMILTON.

His Death Occurred Recently at His Home in Hagerstown, Md.

Ex-Governor William T. Hamilton, whose death was recently chronicled, after an illness of three weeks, at his home in Hagerstown, Md., was the most picturesque figure in Maryland politics, as well as one of the strongest and most popular men in that state. He was a rugged character. His manners were sometimes brusque, and his language was always emphatic, but beneath it all was an earnest zeal that made him universally respected. In fact, among the farmers of the state he has always been something of an idol, and when he last ran for chief executive governorship in 1879 everybody turned out and rolled up a vote for him that was phenomenal in that state of Democratic majorities, and could that he is dead sincere sorrow is expressed in every place where he was known. Although a lawyer of acknowledged ability and success, and a statesman of broad capacity and long experience, he most delighted in being known as a farmer, and his estate was a model of care and cultivation. He not only carried on a farm and practiced law and delved into politics, but he was president of a bank, president of a manufacturing company, the proprietor of the handsomest hotel in western Maryland, and the leading spirit in most of the public enterprises in Hagerstown. Then, too, he was the richest man in his county, worth in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. He was 68 years old. He was born in Maryland. In 1843 he was admitted to the bar. Three years afterward he was elected to the Maryland legislature. In 1848 he was an elector on the Cass presidential ticket. In 1849, although almost buried in appearance, he defeated a noted general for congress, and he was twice re-elected. In 1868 he was elected United States senator, and in 1879 he was elected governor of Maryland. In politics he was always a strong fighter, and his aggressiveness never grew discouraged. He first made his mark as an orator then he went ahead without fear or favor. His death is a distinct loss to the state, and it is regretted by all parties alike.



WILLIAM T. HAMILTON.

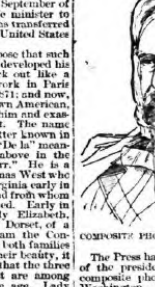
A Composite Photograph.

The New York Press has published a cut made from a composite photograph of all the presidents of the United States, from Washington to Arthur. It is here reproduced, reduced to half the size as given in The Press:



COMPOSITE PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

The Press has learned that the pictures of the presidents used in making the composite photograph were as follows: Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Harrison, Tyler, Taylor and Filmore, engravings by Pierce, engravings by Chappel; John Adams, portrait on stone by A. Newsam, P. S. Duval, lithographer, Philadelphia; John Quincy Adams, engraving by V. Balch from a painting by Durand; Jackson, engraving by G. Kruell from the lithograph by E. Jones, copyrighted by Knoedler & Co.; Van Buren, engraving from Brady's imperial photograph by Ritchie; Polk, engraving by V. Balch from a daguerreotype; Pierce, engraving by H. B. Hall, New York, from a painting by Healy; Buchanan, portrait on steel by John Sartain, Philadelphia; Lincoln, engraving from the original painting by Nast; Johnson, engraving from a painting by Chappel, Buchanan from a photograph from life, copyrighted by G. Kruell, from a photograph in possession of Mrs. Thomas Nast; Hayes, engraving by J. C. Buttre from a photograph; Garfield, J. A. J. Wilcox, Sc., Boston, copyrighted by J. F. Ryder, Cleveland; Arthur, selected.

The Nervous Patient.

In the old days the nervous patient was one who met with but little forbearance from others. He was universally conceded to be a matter of the gallery's own will; she could be different if she would, and only the more charitable would say that she "could not always." It is commonly admitted that the nervous patient is irresponsible—that scolding and reproaching are more than useless, inasmuch as they are cruel and wicked, and that the only cure for the trouble is complete indulgence and rest. For it has at last been recognized as a trouble, a real trouble, and not a voluntary matter within the patient's control; a case not of illness, but of tired nerves, and the treatment is as different as day from the old. Instead of being scolded and ordained and clothed and fed made whole again.—Harper's Bazar.

RAISING THE ATLAS.

DIVERS WILL BRING TO THE SURFACE THE STEAMER RECENTLY SUNK.

Some Account of the Methods Employed in Raising Ships from the Bottom of the Water—The Diving Bells of Earlier Days.

Passengers on the New Jersey ferries entering New York, down town, pass the sunken steamer Atlas, lying near the foot of Barclay street in the North river. Boats entering the Barclay street slip are obliged to go around the sunken vessel.

THE SUNKEN ATLAS.

Whose masts alone are visible, suggestive of casualty by water, and bringing home to the traveler a sudden appreciation of what a thin shell lies between him and destruction.

The Atlas it will be remembered was run into by a ferryboat not long ago and sunk in a few minutes. She is a constant nuisance to vessels where she lies, and it is desirable that she be speedily raised. This will not require the long time taken to raise the steamer Wells City, sunk in the North river about a year ago, and some two miles above where the Atlas lies, for the former was loaded with tin and it was necessary to remove her cargo before removing the vessel. As the Atlas is laden with coffee and fruits, the case is quite different.

The method usual in raising sunken vessels, is to first get chains under her keel fore and aft, and indeed at as many points as necessary. Floats are then arranged on either side to which the ends of the chains are attached. These floats are sunken by being filled with water, the chains being made taut when they are at the lowest. The water is then pumped out, and as the pumping goes on, the floats rise bringing the vessel to the surface with them. When she is raised to a sufficient height to float readily she is towed away from the place of disaster to a point where she can be worked upon more readily.

DIVER AT WORK.

This is the method that was used in the case of the Wells City, and doubtless it will be repeated in the case of the Atlas. The first and most difficult matter is the placing of the chains. For this purpose divers are employed, who go down and work the chains under the vessel. The diver's occupation is certainly a hazardous one. He wears a curious sort of armor on his submarine trips, and the air he breathes is pumped down to him. Of course, any failure of the air current means death, unless the diver is removed immediately. There is a strong rope tied around his waist, which he holds with one hand while descending, and by jerking on this he may readily give a signal. In the helmet are thick glass windows, through which he may look. The helmet is of copper, the suit of rubber.

When the water is clear the diver may readily see objects horizontally, though overhead there is a glare. In the North river the water is so muddy that it is not probable the diver can see so far. The electric light is now used, which makes things very light near by, and the diver can see much further with it, but it makes the surrounding darkness darker.

A diver in a river flowing by a large city sees some singular sights. The bottom of the North river is covered with mud and slime deep into which the diver sinks sometimes to his knees, or his waist, or even over his head. There are telegraph and telephone cables, many of them broken; pipes for conducting oil, lost anchors and parts of vessels and boats. The electric light usually attracts fish which examine the diver in evident curiosity.

Divers in the North river have reported stumbling on the holes which were made some four years ago by the caving in of the tunnel which engineers attempted to construct. It will be remembered that this tunnel was started to carry passengers from the New Jersey shore to New York, but when it had been carried in and out some distance a flow near the center was struck which drove them all out and filled the tunnel with mud. Efforts were made to pump out the tunnel, but when it was found that the flow could not be overcome the work was abandoned. Divers say that the most disagreeable feature of their work is stumbling across a dead body. These bodies usually float a few days after death, but there are cases where they become entangled, as in the case of suicides, are sometimes loaded with weights. It is dismal enough to be at the bottom of a muddy river, without stumbling against a dead face with the swollen body of a fellow being. Divers have a superstition that it is bad luck to touch these bodies, and they never do so if they can avoid it.

The diving bell was the first contrivance used to explore places covered by water. Any one can see the working of a diving bell by taking a glass tumbler inverted and pressing it down in a bowl of water. It will be seen that the water does not enter the tumbler, for the reason that two substances cannot be in the same place at the same time. So in the diving bell the water does not enter the vessel, though it presses upon the air contained in the bell, compressing it somewhat, but cannot fill the bell. If the vessel were let down to a depth of thirty-three feet this compression would be so great as to half fill the bell. Within the bell, at a sufficient distance above where the water comes, supports are placed on which the diver sits. Diving bells are still used when they can be let down directly over a place where work is to be done, but for moving about or prying into dark corners the armor is alone effective, and has largely supplanted the bell.

In order to keep as much water as possible out of the diving bell compressed air is used. This affects some people very disagreeably. Usually there is a pain on the drum of the ear, which comes from the pressure without the ear being greater than that within, and there not being a perfect equilibrium.

There has been no special improvement in diving apparatus for a number of years. The diving bell was known in the time of Aristotle, and diving armor has now been in use many years. The methods of the use of both have doubtless been improved upon considerably during the past half century.

A VERY HIGH CHIMNEY.

Only One Structure in America of Greater Altitude.

The Washington monument is the only structure on this continent which is taller than the great chimney lately built at Kearney, N. J., to serve the twenty big boilers of a thread manufacturing company. It is a king among chimneys, as there are but three taller ones in the world, and none of those were built for boiler furnaces, but for carrying off the products of chemical processes, and distributing the gases thus produced.

The Kearney chimney besides being a triumph of the builder's art as regards stability and beauty, is a model chimney shaft. It is circular, and rises with a perfectly uniform batter from the bottom to the top. The diameter at the base is 28 feet 6 inches, and at the top the neck is 14 feet. This gives a batter of 7 feet 3 inches, or 2.83 inches for every ten feet. The shaft is 5 feet 3 inches in thickness, and inside of this is a second wall 20 inches thick and spaced off about 20 inches from each wall, and, of course, concentric with it. From the interior surface of the main wall eight buttresses are carried, nearly touching this inner or main flue wall, in order to keep it in line should it sag. The interior wall, starting with the thickness described, is gradually reduced until a height of about ninety feet is reached, when it is diminished to 12 inches. At 165 feet it ceases, and the rest of the chimney is without lining; no fire bricks are used in the lining.

The chimney receives two horizontal flues, in which it is proposed to place feed water heaters for the boilers. About one thousand pipes will be included in them. It is believed that much more of the waste heat can thus be economized than is usual, as, owing to the great height of the chimney a comparatively slight heat in the products of combustion will generate ample draught. The advantage in an engineering sense of so large a chimney will be derived from this factor of economy.

A remarkable feature of this piece of work is that it was built in 150 days of nine hours each. In the erection of the three taller chimneys much more time was spent. Tompkinsville chimneys at Glasgow, Scotland, is 454 feet high, and was more than three years building; Tennant & Co.'s chimney, Glasgow, Scotland, is 435 feet 6 inches high, and was built in a year, as was Dobson & Barlow's chimney at Bolton, England, which is 360 feet 6 inches high.

The total weight of the new chimney is 10,091,899 pounds; the total number of bricks in the stack is 1,097,231, and its cost was $50,000.

No way to ascend the shaft, after the elevator used in its construction was taken away, has been provided. If it should be necessary to do so, a balloon will be sent up the central flue and allowed to lose its gas and descend on the outside, providing means for drawing up a line of sufficient size for a man to climb. It is estimated that during a high wind the chimney will sway about six inches.

According to figures, a mathematician says, France will, in about fifty years, have fallen below Italy and Spain in size and will have become a second rate power. A Paris paper, in commenting on this, says that the Anglo-Saxon race, which was much inferior in point of number to the French race, is now two or three times as numerous. Each one

HARRISON IS THE MAN.

VICTORY FOR THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN TICKET.

A Furore of Enthusiasm Follows the Result. — Plainfield Alive All Night With Shouting Parades—Voorhees, Rep., and Geisenhainer, Dem., Elected to Congress; with Ulrich, Rep., and Klotz, Dem., to Assembly.

The people of Plainfield who were kept awake nearly all night by the noise of drums and the shouts of men don't need to be told that Harrison was yesterday elected President of these United States. The success of the Republican leader was indicated in every way.

While the citizens were bringing about this foregone conclusion THE NEWS was again distinguishing itself. Its force toiled all through the morning to give an early Election Day edition and on through the night to give with the dawn of to-day the glorious tidings of the Republicans' national triumph.

From dawn of yesterday till near daylight this morning the streets of the city were thronged with earnest men of both parties.

At Music Hall during the early part of the evening the laughable play of "The Country Fair" was in progress, with Nell Burgess as "Abigail True", and between the acts the returns were read as received. It was quite evident by the applause that the audience was largely in favor of Protection.

Both Republican and Democratic headquarters were crowded at night with anxious citizens, but as the returns continued to arrive it was evident that the Democrats were becoming more and more wearied. To say that they were melancholy but faintly describes it. Occasionally there would be a rattling of old bones, and the words of the poet were suggested.

But at Republican headquarters—well, everyone ought to have seen the enthusiasm. In our brief space we cannot adequately describe it. Suffice it to say that the Republicans were as hilarious with joy as a lot of school-boys at recess. They cheered themselves hoarse, standing on the chairs, dancing about the floor and feeling jolly generally. They also sang campaign songs, some one playing a harmonium to get them started, and all were fairly wild.

When word came that Harrison had carried New York State by nearly 20,000 the men could stand it no longer. They got a drum, formed into line in front of Headquarters, and marched through the streets, shouting for joy. Windows went up, and nightcapped heads protruded. When it was thoroughly understood that the parade was in honor of Harrison's election waving hands and responding voices indicated that the disturbed sleepers were happy.

The parade was constantly augmented by men with strong lungs, and at one time it seemed as though there must be a thousand men in line. These passed THE NEWS office, cheering, singing and shouting as, and kept up the march far into the morning.

As the procession went onward "Gen. Glee" joined in with a hand lamp and marched proudly ahead. At half-past three the marchers had invaded the Dunellen road.

The intensely excited condition of the public mind as shown in Plainfield is but the counterpart of what it appears to have been all over the United States wherever there was an honest election and a fair count.

THE RETURNS AT MIDNIGHT.

The First News from Various Near-By Quarters.

Among the reports of neighboring localities received in Plainfield at midnight was that Westfield gave Harrison a plurality of 40, against 18 in '84 for Blaine.

Fanwood came to the front with a balance of 10 for Harrison, a gain of 6.

Cranford tied—171 to 171.

Warren township gave a total vote of 257, with 88 Republican, 155 Democratic, and 14 Prohibition. This is a Republican gain of 16.

From Somerville came the news that Voorhees was elected Congressman by from 1,000 to 1,200 plurality, while Klotz for Assembly has claimed a victory by 150.

New Brunswick reported two Republican Assemblymen in Middlesex—a gain of one, with Adrain, Dem., elected Senator through Miss Ross's talon-corruption-fund.

Geisenhainer was credited with beating Kean for Congress by 1,000. Elizabeth was said to go 600 against Geisenhainer.

New York Figures at 9:30.

Dispatches at 9:30 a. m. from New York indicate that Grant is elected Mayor of New York city by a plurality of 34,000 over Edson.

The Tribune's bulletin estimates that the next House of Representatives will be Republican from 30 to 35.

New York State at this hour gives Harrison a plurality, with Connecticut, Indiana and West Virginia in doubt.

The Tribune says that Hill is probably elected Governor by a small plurality.

PLAINFIELD AHEAD.

First Congratulations to President Harrison.

The first congratulatory dispatch to President-elect Benjamin Harrison was sent from Plainfield at about three o'clock yesterday afternoon. It read as follows:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov. 6, 1888.

To Gen. Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Ind.—In behalf of Plainfield, Queen City of New Jersey, I extend you my heartfelt congratulations. The grace of God and the will of the American people. The Irish in New York have gone solidly for you, and the Irish are loyal friends to have. THE EVENING NEWS.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

Harrison's Majority in New York 12,000 to 14,000.

NEW YORK, 7.30 a. m.—It is certain that Harrison is elected. Reports from this State show that it is Republican by a majority of from 12,000 to 14,000.

Both parties are claiming Connecticut, with the chances in favor of the Democrats. They claim 584 majority.

Indiana Republican.

The returns from Indiana at eight a. m. are meagre, but the Republicans are gaining and without doubt carry the State.

Gains in New Jersey.

New Jersey has gone Democratic, but the Republicans gained largely over the last Presidental vote.

NEW JERSEY UNUSUALLY CLOSE.

A Probable Democratic Victory —Meagre Returns.

The latest advices from New Jersey indicate that Cleveland has probably carried the State by a large majority. Many of the counties have as yet not been heard from, especially the counties in the southern part of the State. Among the counties which have declared for the Republican National candidates are Ocean, Mercer, Essex, Burlington, Camden, Gloucester, Cape May and Salem. The Democrats have carried Somerset, Hudson, Middlesex, Monmouth and Union.

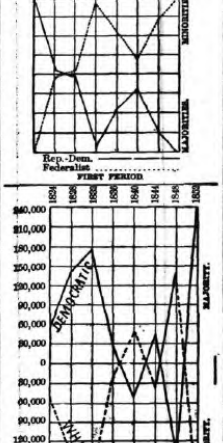
Of the Congressional candidates, the Republicans have elected Bergen, of the 1st District; Buchanan, of the 3d, and Lehlbach, of the 6th. The fight in the 3d District between Kean (Rep.) and Geisenhainer (Dem.) was close, but the Democrats won.

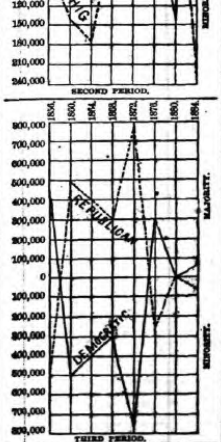
The Senate is still in doubt, as only meagre returns have been received. Carter, (Rep.) is elected from Burlington County, and Adrian (Dem.) from Middlesex.

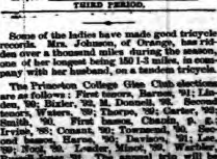
Eighteen Republican Assemblymen have been elected, and sixteen Democratic members, with several districts yet to be heard from. The fight is exceedingly close.

PARTIES' RISE AND FALL.

THEIR STORY TOLD FROM 1790 TO THE PRESENT TIME.







House of the ladies have made good tricycle records. Mrs. Johnson, of Orange, has ridden over a thousand miles during the season, one of her longest being 150 1-3 miles, in company with her husband, on a tandem tricycle.

The Princeton College Glee Club elections are as follows: First tenors, Barnes, '91; Linden, '90; Bixler, '90, R. Dorsett, '90. Second tenors, Middleton, '90; Thorne, '90; Carter, '90; Smith, '90. First basses, Chanlis, '90, S. Irvine, '88; Conant, '90; Townsend, '91; Lee, '90; Ford, '90. Second basses, Denson, '91; Lee, '90; Ford, '90, Lawler, Minor, '90, Wurts, '90. Bixler, Dorsett, Townsend and Irvine will be made in the Easter vacation, and will extend as far west as Chicago. Several concerts will be given this season, among them a joint concert with the Rutgers College Glee.

BEN HARRISON!

The Man Who Will Live in the House Uncle Sam Built.

This is the house Uncle Sam built.

This is the man who will live in the house Uncle Sam built.

This very fat fellow has suffered a rout,
And much to his sorrow will have to get out
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

This is the bill that encompassed the rout
Of the very fat man who will have to get out
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

The dad of the bill that accomplished the rout
Of the man so obese who is now going out
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

Here is a man which his name is Col Rube,

And he painted a rainbow that looked mighty nice,
But for all that the campaign wound up in the rout
Of the Buffalo fat man who now will go out
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

This is the fellow from over the sea
Who figured as hard as ever could be
For success for the fat man who suffered the rout,
And is now getting ready to take himself out,
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

This is the editor, smiling so grim,
Who declared that G. Cleveland would never suit him,
And helped in his own way to bring on the rout
Of the very fat man who will soon toddle out
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

Three leading mugwumps, shivering cold,
Who realize sadly that they have been sold,
For they worked very hard to prevent the great rout
Of the corpulent man about to get out
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

Paralyzed Democrats, journalists all,
Hopes they have cherished have taken a fall.
They tried very hard, but they couldn't make out;
The fat man was routed—he's got to get out
To make room for the man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

This is "our Dan!" conveying the word
The noblest his people has recently heard—

To the news of defeat, of a terrible rout,
And it seems that the Buffalo man must get out,
Just as soon as His Fatness conveniently can,
To make room for a more intellectual man—
For the man that the voters have said shall reside
In the White House so spacious, with portals so wide,
Uncle Sam built.

Something Has Dropped.

G. C.—Daniel, did you hear anything drop
D. L.—Yes, sire.
G. C.—And what was it, do you think?
D. L.—I fear, sire, that it was grandfather's hat.

Uncle Sam and his nephews that won in the race.
That the old man is happy is shown by his face,
G. Cleveland is packing his goods to get out.
Protection has triumphed—it was a great rout.
Hurrah! hip! hurrah! and hurrah once again,
The country is safe in the hands of our Ben,
The man who will live in the house
Uncle Sam built.

Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man: To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
And when he thinks, good, easy man, full surely
He's good for four years more, the campaign ends,
And then he falls, as I do.

Daniel, I change this thing away ambition,
By that sin fell the angels; how can man then,
The image of his Maker, hope, to win by it?
Love thyself last, cherish those hearts that hate thee,
Corruption wins not more than honesty.

The Empire State.

The modern political history of New York may be said to begin in 1856, when the state astonished the nation by giving an enormous majority for Fremont, though he was opposed by every prominent paper in New York except The Tribune. The rapid growth of the Republican party in New York for a few years thereafter did not keep pace with that of other northern states; and after being given twice for Lincoln, the electoral vote was given to Seymour in 1868. The subsequent votes of New York for president or the leading official in "off years" is as follows:

	Democrat.	Republican.	Majority.
1872	387,279	440,080	52,802 R.
1874	341,001	321,139	9,862 D.
1876	416,991	366,074	50,917 D.
1878	388,744	373,402	14,342 D.
1880	392,048	469,226	32,381 R.
1882	383,059	371,798	11,264 D.
1884	563,154	562,113	54,061 D.
1886	420,261	367,820	12,441 D.

New Jersey Figures.

New Jersey has had a brilliant record as a doubtful state. She has given Cleveland and went Federal three times and Dumo-Republican five; on the second, Whig five times and Democratic twice, and on the third four good Republican votes, incorporate six times and divided once—in 1880. Her vote in recent years, on presidential or leading state candidate, is as follows:

	Dem.	Rep.	Maj.
1872	70,601	81,031	10,410 R.
1873	120,555	108,611	11,944 D.
1875	118,668	108,611	10,046 D.
1877	97,440	88,394	9,046 D.
1878	101,474	92,425	9,049 D.
1880	120,555	97,097	8,029 D.
1881	109,301	97,097	8,029 D.
1883	107,135	97,097	8,029 D.
1884	127,301	127,301	4,258 D.
1886	127,301	127,301	4,258 D.

In 1880 the Prohibition vote was 121; in 1881, 4,130; in 1884, 4,136, and 20,382 for Gen. Fisk for governor in 1886.

PROTECTION HUSTLING FREE TRADE

The Wail of Woe.

A Free Trade shirt it was southern orchard grew.
Listen to my tale of woe.
A Free Trade chain of English hue,
Warmed by the democrats through and through.
It grew; it grew.
Listen to my tale of woe.

Grover Cleveland, on a Thursday, too—
Listen to my tale of woe.
Put on the shirt of English hue
That was warmed by the democrats through and through.
It grew, it grew.
(Listen to my tale of woe.)

Now Cleveland, on a Thursday, too—
Listen to my tale of woe.
Who sanctioned the origin of Free Trade hue
That was warmed by the democrats through and through.
The grew, that grew.
(Listen to my tale of woe.)
Are buried forever from sight
And on their graves Republican roosters crow.
Listen to my tale of woe.

JOTTINGS.

—Local bicyclists talk about having a race and hounds chase across country this Fall.

—The Madame Fry Concert Company is to entertain the public at the M. E church Thursday night.

—For sale.—A wigwam and a number of empty demijohns. As the owners have gone on a protracted tour up Salt River they have no further use for the property.

—The section of the members of the Ladies' Temperance Aid Society and the Women's Christian Temperance Union in furnishing free coffee and sandwiches yesterday was greatly appreciated by those who partook of their hospitality.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Arthur Swartout, of Paterson, is visiting his aunt, Mrs. Lewis, of Somerset street, North Plainfield.

Dr. Thiers loses his mustache and will have to ride Mr. H. C. Compton's broncho, by Cleveland's defeat.

Dr. Wm. C. Boone, of West Front street, has returned from a three weeks' hunting trip in the Shenandoah Valley, Va.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Rev. H. J. Baker were held at the First Baptist church yesterday, the Rev. Dr. Yerkes officiating. The interment was at Clinton, N. J.

Injured at Foot-Ball.

At a game of foot-ball between two picked teams yesterday afternoon Fred Sandford, of West Seventh street, was knocked insensible while playing and had to be taken home in a carriage. The extent of his injuries has not been ascertained, but it is hoped that they will not be serious.

UNION COUNTY TEACHERS.

The Institute to be Held at Elizabeth This Week.

The Union county Teachers' Institute will be held in School No. 4, Elizabeth, this Friday and Saturday, Nov. 9th and 10th, and will be of great interest. The lectures in the evening will be of special interest.—Friday evening in the Park M. E. church, and Saturday evening in St. John's lecture room. The programme will be as follows:

Friday evening, 8 o'clock. Lecture: "Possibilities of Leisure," Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, D.D.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The Teachers' Institute of Monmouth and Ocean counties will be held at Educational hall, Asbury Park, Thursday and Friday.

Ex-Governor Abbett, as counsel for the Jersey City Liquor Dealers' Association, appeared before the Board of Excise Saturday to have all complaints now pending against saloon keepers for Sunday selling dismissed, the ground that the commissioners did not specify the kind of liquor sold and to whom it was sold. Decision was reserved.

Three weeks ago Charles Andigah, a Pole, who fought with a fellow countryman, was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary. His wife was in the court when the sentence was pronounced and was overcome. She became sick after returning home, and went so rapidly that she was removed to St. Francis hospital, where she died Saturday night.

The curious spectacle of two big bald eagles engaged in a deadly conflict was witnessed by Richard Hoffman, of Osage View, Cape May county, Friday. The birds were perched on a dead branch of a tree, and were seen to fight with fierce fearlessness. Hoffman interfered, and one of the birds promptly settled the matter by flying off after a severe struggle. The other bird escaped.

THE ELECTION.

Harrison Claims the State of New York.

REPORTS ARE CONFLICTING.

Hill Wins on the Gubernatorial Ticket.

GRANT MAYOR OF NEW YORK.

Hot Contests Reported from Several Western States.

Hills is Re-Elected to Congress by a Small Majority—Carlisle Reported Returned—Nearly the Entire Tammany Ticket in the City of New York Elected—Estimated Pluralities by Counties in New York State—Details from New Jersey—Meager Returns from Many Other States—How President Cleveland Received the News—Gen. Harrison Voted Quietly—His Assistant Private Secretary Fatally Assaulted.

NEW YORK.

The Star holds that there is still good reason to hope for New York. It claims all the heavy Republican districts are in and heavy Democratic districts yet to hear from may change the apparent aspect and possibly show a small majority for Cleveland.

New York, Nov. 7.—The Times says the result of the election is in doubt, and so does The Herald. The Tribune claims the election of Harrison and Morton beyond a doubt, as also the Sun and The Press. The World says that Hill and Grant win the Republican ticket is probably elected.

Roger Q. Mills is reported elected by a small plurality and so is Judge Carlisle. The returns from many states are conflicting and unsatisfactory.

New York city's total vote for president is as follows: Harrison, 104,926; Cleveland, 101,646; Fisk, 1,249; Cowdrey, 1,722. Cleveland's plurality, 50,729.

New York city's vote for governor is: Miller, 99,580; Hill, 105,728; Jones (Pro.), 914. Hill's plurality, 63,289.

Grant is elected mayor by a plurality of 5,000 over Hewitt, 10,000 over Nicholl. The total vote was 202,857. Grant received 107,857; Hewitt, 98,134; Erhardt, 67,721, and Cogan, 9,469.

Grant is elected sheriff; Reilly, county clerk, and George H. Forster president of the board of aldermen.

NEW JERSEY.

This state is undoubtedly Democratic. The majority for Cleveland appears larger than in 1884. The legislature is also Democratic in both branches.

The Democrats have also gained the Third congressional district and may have retained the Fourth district, in which there were two Democratic candidates running, although the Republicans claim the election of Voorhees by a small majority. Cleveland made gains of about 4,400 in Essex, Hudson and Passaic counties. On the other hand the Republicans made great gains in the First congressional district.

The result in congress districts is as follows:

First District—Chris. A. Sexton (Rep.), 5,000 plurality over Malcolm Hoagland (Dem.) and Labor.

Second—James Buchanan (Rep.), 3,000 plurality over Chauncey H. Beasley (Dem.).

Third—James A. Grimshaw (Dem.), 2,500 plurality over John Kean, Jr. (Rep.); a Democratic gain.

Fourth—In doubt.

Fifth—Charles D. Beckwith (Rep.) 1,000 plurality over Mahlon Hoagland (Dem.).

Sixth—Hermann Lehlbach (Rep.) 4 plurality over Joseph Haines (Dem.).

Seventh—James McAdoo (Dem.) 804 plurality over Gilbert Collins (Rep.).

The latest returns give the following pluralities for president in the counties:

Jersey City, two precincts missing, gives Cleveland 3,878 plurality. McAdoo, 2,275. Hoboken—precincts missing, Cleveland, 2,300; McAdoo, 1,017. Bayonne, complete, Cleveland, 692; McAdoo, 512. North Hudson, estimated, Cleveland, 1,000; McAdoo, 1,400. Cleveland, in county, 7,743; McAdoo, 4,804.

In Jersey City Cleveland gets about 3,500 plurality, and 6,000 in Hudson county. McAdoo, Gov. Abbett's man, runs out in the lower section of the city, but he gets at least 500 majority in the county. In the assembly districts the Democrats are particularly successful, and gain four assembly men. In the First district, O'Neill, the Democrat who was so bitterly opposed by the anti-boss people, over-the-line elected by more than 800 plurality. McLaughlin, the Independent Democratic candidate, did not get 100 votes. In the Second district Norton, the regular Democrat, has about 2,500 majority, a thousand more than his opponent got votes.

Essex county elected great Democratic gains. Hermann Lehlbach (Rep.) was reelected to congress by 1,000 plurality. The Democrats gained three assemblymen in Newark, one of them in the Ninth district, which heretofore has been strongly Republican with but one exception. The county gives a Republican plurality of about 600 for president against 1,400 in 1884. In the close competition of the day was for the office of county register, both candidates receiving votes upon motives of personal friendship rather than party fealty. Hugo Fetzer (Rep.) was elected by 21 plurality over J. Hanning, Dem.

Cape May county, Grover Cleveland's birthplace, gave Harrison 39 plurality. Four years ago the same township gave Cleveland a plurality of 52.

Complete returns make the pluralities in Essex county as follows: Harrison, 2,93; a Democratic gain of 1,000; Lehlbach, (Rep.) for congress, 704; Cogan (Rep.), for register 79.

Harrison gets 600 plurality in Burlington county, and Carter (Rep.) is reelected sheriff by about 300. The Republicans reelect Hansell in the First assembly district and Doron in the Third. The Democrats elect Davis in the First, a gain. Buchanan (Rep.) for congress, has about 600 plurality in the county.

Cumberland county has gone Republican on the presidential vote by about 1,500 plurality, a Republican gain of 300. The Republicans also elect Neuchard in the First and Cheesman in the Second assembly districts by small majorities. Both are gains. Bergen, Rep., for congress, has about 1,250 plurality in the county. The vote was 7,450 for Bergen and 6,200 for Hudd.

Somerset county, Senator McPherson's home, gives Cleveland 175 plurality, a Republican gain of 14, and elects Jacob Klots (Dem.) to the assembly by 175. This is a Democratic gain. Voorhees (Rep.), for congress, carries the county by 950, running against Judge Reed.

Cape May county gives Harrison about 350 plurality. In 1884 it gave Blame 231. It elects Walter S. Leaing (Rep.) senator by about 300. Engene C. Ware (Rep.) to the assembly by about 50. Bergen (Rep.), for congress, carries the county by about 350. Congressman Phillips never polled in the county, and the Republicans gained in every precinct.

Harrison carries Mercer county by about 1,900 plurality, a Republican gain of 300. Buchanan (Rep.), for congress, gets 1,300. The Democrats elect Schroth to the assembly in the Third district, a gain. The Republicans elect Scudder in the First district and Chambers in the Second district by 684 plurality. It is calculated here that Cleveland will have 5,500 plurality in the state.

Senator Sewall announced that returns received by him showed that Harrison had received 5,500 plurality in the First congressional district, and that the Republicans had elected their whole ticket in every county.

Returns from all but five precincts, an estimate, gives Harrison a majority of 2,600 plurality in the county. This is a Republican gain of 600. The Democrats conceded the election at all three Republican candidates to the assembly.

The indications are that Warren county will give 1,000 plurality for Cleveland, 3 Republicans and 2 Democrats (Popular Dem.) or congress, has 1,000 plurality over Voorhees (Rep.), and 2,000 over Roe (Ind. Dem.). The Democrats have re-elected both assemblymen.

Secretary of State Henry C. Kelsey estimates the Democratic majority in the state at 6,000, concedes the senate to the Republicans, and claims the assembly for the Democrats by a vote of 35 to 28, giving a Democratic majority of five on joint ballot, and insuring the election of ex-Democratic senator for United States Senator John R. McPherson.

Gloucester county gives Harrison 885 plurality, a Republican gain of 250. Berger (R.p), for congress, has 850, and West (Rep.), for the assembly, 646 plurality.

Morris county gives Harrison 125 plurality, a Democratic gain of 250, and is nearly a tie on the vote for congressman. Carnet B. Meeker (Rep.), for assembly in the First district, has about 172 plurality, and John Morris (Rep.) in the Second district about 170. Naughton (Dem.) is elected in the Third district without opposition. Elias B. Maxfield (Rep.), for county clerk, receives about 175 plurality.

Elizabeth City gives Cleveland 1,100 plurality and the county about 700.

Monmouth county will turn up 600 plurality for Cleveland, the same as in 1884. Geisenhainer (Dem.), for congress, has probably a small plurality in the county, and Allen (Dem.), for assembly, 600. His election is conceded. The Republicans gain an assemblyman in the First district, electing Leggett. They also re-elect Herbert in the Third. The Democrats elect Kane in the Second district.

The returns, so far as received, indicate that Harrison will run over 1,000 plurality in Passaic county. This is a Democratic gain of 800 over 1884. The Democrats also elect John Mahon senator over Bridges, a Republican. The assembly delegation will be, as usual, three Republicans and one Democrat. The vote on senator is very close.

CONNECTICUT.

Hartford, Nov. 7.—President Cleveland's plurality in this city is 321, showing a falling off of 396 votes, as compared with four years ago. Cleveland's vote in Hartford by 39 majority. The legislature is Republican.

Forty-three towns give a gain of 1,004 for Bulkley (R.p.) for governor, and 615 Republican gain in the presidential vote. The Republicans secure Simonds (Rep.) in the First congressional district over Vance. Russell, (Rep.) in the Third, and probably Miles (Rep.) in the Fourth district.

The plurality of Bu keley (Rep.) for governor in Hartford is 58. For congress Vance (Dem.) has a plurality of 249. A Democratic state senator and two Democratic representatives are elected.

Republicans gain three senatorial districts in Hartford county. The legislature is probably Republican.

This state elected state officers, legislature and congressmen. The vote four years ago was: Cleveland, 67,182; Blaine, 65,396. Cleveland's majority, 1,284.

New Haven, Nov. 7.—Cleveland carries New Haven by 2,804, a loss of 700. Reports from thirty-two towns show a Democratic loss of 484. Bridgeport shows a Democratic gain of 340. Wilcox (Dem.) has apparently been chosen congressman from this district. Morris, for governor, ran largely ahead of Cleveland in this county.

Returns from nearly all probability gone Democratic. New Haven county will give Cleveland and Thurman a plurality of 3,104. In Meriden alone there was a Democratic gain of 341. This was due to Lines, the Republican candidate, swapping anything for a vote. Cleveland's gain over 1884 is 97. Wilcox, Democratic candidate for congress, is running ahead of Cleveland by a plurality of over Lines, the Republican, in this district. For governor, Morris (Dem.) has a plurality in this county of 3,500 over Bulkley.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Nov. 7.—The result in this state cannot be ascertained before this evening. Both parties are claiming it, and the result will not be close. Harrison's majority is the usual one-half of Blaine's vote in 1884. The Republican managers claim a plurality of about 5,000 for Harrison.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia, Nov. 7.—Returns from every county show increased majorities over the vote of 1884. The state will give a majority approximating 50,000 for Harrison.

Cleveland's plurality in Philadelphia give Harrison 1,843 majority. Patterson (Dem.) for register of wills in these wards has 1,118 majority over Gratz (Rep.). The vote is practically a full ticket.

Huntingdon county—Harrison, 1,300 plurality; Republican gain, 150.

Clarion county—Cleveland, 300 plurality; Democratic gain, 150.

Center county—Cleveland, 500 plurality; Democratic gain, 62.

Adams county—Cleveland's plurality probably slightly exceeds 300.

Warren county—Harrison, 1,000 plurality; Republican gain of 948.

Chester county gives a plurality of 4,000 for Harrison, a Republican gain of 217.

Lehigh county—Cleveland 2,000 plurality; a Democratic gain of 1,000.

Northampton county—Cleveland, 3,100 plurality; a Republican gain of 64.

The city of Reading, Pa., complete gives Cleveland a plurality of 1,426; Republican gain of 57.

Delaware county—3,300 plurality for Republicans; Republican gain, 196.

Northumberland county—Cleveland plurality, 500; Democratic gain, 393.

Berks county—Cleveland, 7,230 plurality; Democratic gain, 353.

Union county—Harrison, 700 plurality; Democratic gain, 114.

Cumberland county—Cleveland, 1,300

KENTUCKY.

Louisville, Nov. 7.—Cleveland carries the state. The congressional representation will be practically unchanged. The Democrats have almost certainly gained one congressman in this state, and will return only two Republicans. The Third and Ninth districts. Breckinridge, Democrat, defeats Republican, but Tenth and Eleventh will probably be lost. In the Eleventh district, Owens, Democrat, gains over his majority of 130 two years ago, and other counties report big gains, though Congressman Finley, Republican, will probably be elected. The Democratic state ticket is completely over to the Democrats, while the Tenth district reports large Democratic gains, over 1,300 this year, against 80 two years ago. In Louisville Congressman Caruth has largely increased his majority. Cleveland is receiving a large vote throughout the state, and will show a gain in the state. It has rained all day. The vote in Covington, Ky., shows a heavier majority for John C. Carlisle than he has ever had. The election is claimed as secure.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Wheeling, Nov. 6.—The vote on the state is uncertain, but the Democrats have probably carried it. The legislature may be carried by the Democrats. This state elected state officers, legislature and Congressmen and voted upon three proposed amendments to the state constitution. One amendments prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, relates to trials by jury and limit the sessions of the legislature to sixty days, unless extended by concurrent vote of two thirds of the members elected to each house. Four years ago the vote was: Cleveland, 67,317; Blaine, 52,246. Cleveland's majority, 4,231.

Wheeling, Nov. 7.—The chairmen of both the state committees claim the state. The vote in this city will not be counted until late to-day. The result in the state will probably not be known before Thursday.

IOWA.

Des Moines, Nov. 6.—The Republican state and electoral tickets are elected in Iowa by something like 20,000 plurality. The following congressmen are elected in Iowa beyond doubt: Seconl district—Walter I. Hayes (Dem.), by about 7,000 majority. Third district—David B. Henderson (Rep.), 1,500 majority. Fourth—J. K. Sweeney (Rep.), 1,000 majority. Fifth—David Kerr (Rep.), 1,500 majority. Seventh—Edwin H. Conger (Rep.), 2,000 majority. Ninth—J nathan P. Dolliver (Rep.), 4,300 majority. Eleventh—Isaac L. Struble (Rep.), 4,500 majority. Indications point to the election of John T. Seerley (Dem.) in the First district, James B. Weaver (Dem.) in the Sixth, and Albert R. Anderson (Dem.) in the Eighth district. The vote is close to these three districts.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond, Nov. 7.—Returns are coming in very slowly, especially from mountain districts. Both sides are claiming the state by 5,000 and 10,000. The city gives 1,600 for Cleveland. The estimated vote shows that the Democrats have lost 1,500 in eight counties.

This state elected congressmen and voted upon the question of holding a convention to revise the state constitution. Four years ago the vote was: Cleveland, 145,497; Blaine, 139,356; Cleveland's majority, 6,141.

In the Sixth congress district, Edmunds (Dem.) is elected. Norfolk gives Harrison a majority of 568. Bowden (Rep.) for congress, has 618 majority.

MICHIGAN.

Detroit, Nov. 7.—The returns are very slow coming in from the upper part of the state, but all this far received show general Republican gains over Blaine's vote of 1884.

Thirty-nine towns give Harrison 1,320 over Cleveland, a net gain of 1,105 over 1884.

Detroit, Nov. 7.—Michigan is undoubtedly Republican by more than 8,000. The Republicans hold their own in Detroit, and claim a gain of one in the Seventh district. The Democrats do not concede this, but claim no gains. Burt, Democratic candidate for congress, is running ahead of Cleveland to be elected, but Luce is probably victorious. The Prohibition vote goes down to less than 30,000. It was 18,000 in 1884 and 25,000 in 1886.

OHIO.

Cincinnati, Nov. 7.—In Hamilton county the Democrats make slight gains, but they were offset by the tremendous gains made by the Republicans in the interior. The Republican majorities will be at least 50,000.

Columbus, Nov. 7.—Judge Thurman was driven to Precinct A of the Sixteenth ward early yesterday morning, and voted there.

For Congress—In the First, Second and Seventh districts, Republican, Smith and Morey, all Republicans, were re-elected.

This state elected minor state officers and congressmen. Four years ago the vote was: Blaine, 407,092; Cleveland, 368,280. Blaine's majority, 31,760.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston, Nov. 7.—Election quiet. Returns indicate the election of the entire Democrat c congressional delegation by majorities ranging from 500 to 5,000. No opposition to state Democrats. Republicans run candidates in the First, Second, Fourth and Seventh districts, but the vote was insignificant in all except the Seventh district. Elliott (Dem.) for congress in the city's district by from 400 to 800 plurality, there being two Republican candidates in the field. Cleveland will have a majority of from 15,000 to 20,000 in the state. Thousands of negroes went to the polls without registration tickets and could not vote.

NORTH CARLINA.

Raleigh, Nov. 7.—127 precincts out of 1,100 show Democratic gain of 1,175 over 1884. The Democrats made gains throughout the state, and the electoral vote will be given to Cleveland.

Wilmington, Nov. 7.—The returns show a small Democratic gain over the vote of 1884, when the Democrats carried the state by over 18,000.

Raleigh, Nov. 7.—Returns from nine-three townships to this date give a Democratic gain of 1,256.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Concord, Nov. 7.—Harrison has carried New Hampshire. Alonzo Nute and Orrin C. Moore, both Republicans, were elected to congress. The legislature is Republican by a good majority. Returns from twenty-five towns give Harrison, 2,993; Cleveland, 3,021. The net gain in the same towns is 246.

WISCONSIN.

Milwaukee, Nov. 7.—Fifty-three precincts show a net Democratic gain of 1,172. This is largely absurd of the figures on which Chairman Usher, of the Democratic state committee, based his claim of 10,000 plurality for Cleveland. There is no doubt of the election of Republican congressmen in the First, Third, Sixth and Eighth districts, and Democratic congressmen in the Second and Fifth districts.

MISSOURI.

St. Louis, Nov. 7.—Cleveland has undoubtedly carried the state. The local Republican ticket is elected. The Republicans elect two congressmen in the Eighth and Ninth districts. The state elected state officers, legislature and congressmen. Four years ago the vote was: Cleveland, 203,078; Blaine, 202,887; Cleveland's majority, 191.

ALABAMA.

Montgomery, Nov. 6.—The indications are that the Democratic majority will be reduced to 40,000 to 50,000. All the Democratic congressmen are elected. Four years ago, in Louisville Congressman Caruth has largely increased his majority. Cleveland is receiving a large vote throughout the state, and will show a gain in the state. It has rained all day. The vote in Covington, Ky., shows a heavier majority for John C. Carlisle than he has ever had. The election is claimed as secure.

TEXAS.

Tyler, Nov. 7.—Accurate information of the vote of Texas cannot be obtained, but it appears that Cleveland's majority in 1884 of 122,000 has been considerably increased. It will certainly not be less than 140,000.

Galveston, Tex., Nov. 7.—Mills has carried Navarro county by about sixty votes—a loss of about 150 votes. His gains in the other eight counties of his district will give him a majority of between 6,000 and 7,000 votes.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Nov. 7.—The city's vote is light. Slight news has been received from the state. Fleming (Dem.) is elected governor, but the Second district is probably Republican in place of Dougherty (Dem.) The state majority will be very small.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, Nov. 7.—The Republicans claim a plurality of 35,000 in this state for Harrison. The Globe (Dem.) concedes 30,000 to 32,000, and also concedes the election of ten Republican congressmen out of twelve. 214 towns, not including Boston, give Harrison 113,812, and Cleveland 85,518.

CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco, Nov. 6.—California is claimed by both parties. The Democratic committee estimates the Democratic plurality in the state at 2,500; the Republicans, a plurality of 10,000. Returns are coming in very slowly.

VERMONT.

White River Junction, Nov. 7.—The vote shows a heavy Republican gain. Seventy-five towns give Harrison 18,918 and Cleveland 6,878. The same towns in 1884 gave Blaine 16,396.

MAINE.

Augusta, Nov. 7.—Reports from all over the state indicate a Republican plurality of 30,000 or 34,000, a gain of nearly 4,000 over Blaine's vote in 1884.

RHODE ISLAND.

Providence, Nov. 7.—Rhode Island complete: Harrison, 21,986; Cleveland, 17,486; Fisk, 1,276. A Republican majority of 3,196.

ILLINOIS.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—Republicans have made some slight gains, but with Democratic gains in Cook county the state is very close.

OREGON.

Portland, Nov. 7.—Estimates on returns already received indicate that Harrison has carried the state by 4,000.

MINNESOTA.

St. Paul, Nov. 7.—Harrison has probably carried this state. The vote for governor will be close.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans, Nov. 7.—This state gives Cleveland about the same majority as in 1884.

COLORADO.

Denver, Nov. 6.—The state gives Harrison a plurality of 10,000.

LIKE AN ORDINARY CITIZEN.

Indianapolis, Nov. 7.—In this, the home city of Gen. Harrison, the struggle was the most hotly contested ever witnessed in the history of the city. Polling until 6 o'clock, the polls were surrounded at the opening hour and the polling began immediately.

Shortly before noon Gen. Harrison took his place in the line of voters in the Third precinct of the Second ward, about two miles up town and some distance from his house. He had his ballot already folded and was waiting his chance to vote. When he reached the ballot box he deposited his ballot like any other good citizen. He attracted no little attention, and was cheered lustily as he left the polling place.

THE DAY AT WASHINGTON.

Washington, Nov. 7.—There was no stir or excitement in Washington yesterday. The Cleveland and Thurman and Harrison and Morton banners proudly waved in Pennsylvania avenue, but the streets were almost deserted. The groups of earnest gatherings looked as though they were closed for the season. To all outward appearances there was no one within the White House, but the president and Mrs. Cleveland were at home attending to their duties just as though nothing unusual was going on throughout this country.

Mr. Cleveland dined with the president in the White House, and it was said that they were never happier in their lives. In the evening Private Secretary Lamont received Mrs. Folsom and a few lady visitors, and, seated in the executive office, they were supplied with bulletins fro n Col. Lamont as soon as the returns were received. The greatest good humor prevailed. There were no signs of anxiety among that little group.

MURDER AT THE POLLS.

Gen. Harrison's Assistant Private Secretary Attacked by an Unknown.

Indianapolis, Nov. 7.—Will C. David, a well known and popular young Republican and assistant private secretary to Gen. Harrison, was fatally assaulted by an unknown man in Circle square early in the morning and his skull was crushed. He was taken to the hospital in a dying condition. His assailant escaped.

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

REPRESENTATIVES PROBABLY ELECTED.

In the Fiftieth congress the Democrats have 169 members, the Republicans 152, and there are 5 Independents. In the Fifty-first congress there probably will be 174 Democrats and 151 Republicans.

MASCULINE SHOPPING.

The Head of the House Has Some Fun As a Buyer.

I had occasion yesterday to get a few "things" necessary in a well regulated household. I went into a large store on the corner, where, as I gathered from their advertisements, they were more than satisfied if they made anywhere near a living profit. Five per cent. was called competitors, they claimed. were trying to undersell them, but, so far, these one horse concerns had received only the veal merited scorn of a discriminating and long headed public. I felt greatly pleased at getting on the track of a place the first thing where they were content to lose a fair percentage. I couldn't help feeling sorry for the small concerns that were struggling along and trying to keep up appearances, but then they should have known better than to have started in.

There was a wide stone sidewalk around the store, and besides the other people there were several coachmen standing along the outer edge wearing long, gloomy expressions on their faces. Personally, I arrived on the elevated road, which passes along but a few blocks away on somewhat shorter stilts, it seems to me, than it does farther uptown. I went in and began to look around. I wanted to get a number of things, but all I could think of was two yards of felt, so I went over to a man who looked like Hamlet when Polonius is talking to him and asked where they kept their felt. He told me, but looked as if things were getting worse and worse in the state of Denmark.

I went to the place to which Hamlet directed me and found fishing tackle and rubber clothing. Hamlet's advice to the purchaser is not satisfactory. However, I found the felt department at last and sat down on one of the cloth covered door knobs which stood along in front of the counter mounted on sticks. The young lady who had the management of the felts was very busy matching a piece of green felt to a blue sample for a customer. I had time to rest. I didn't see anything more of Hamlet, but Coriolanus went just once looking for Volscians. Down the hall glove alley I noticed King Richard II meditating on the melancholy fate of sovereigns and the probable relative demand that there would be next week for four and six button gloves respectively. Everything seemed to be intended for rest. They appeared to want to encourage people to stay and grow old with them. I saw that the idea in many folks labor under that life is short is a delusion. I sent word to the manager's desk by one of the cash boys that if there was any charge for sitting on that button after the first hour I would make it all right.

The young lady got around to me at last, however, and asked me what color I wanted. I didn't know that I had lost the sample while I was pawing around in the grass in the front yard before I left home looking for my street car tickets. I told her I thought I wanted a sort of dark green, though. She said she didn't see what I could want of dark green felt. I acknowledged that I didn't know what I wanted it for, but I was pretty sure that that was the color. She said that if I had any sample she didn't see what I could know about what I wanted, and I had to admit that it was some so. Then she showed me some red felt, and yellow felt, and purple felt, and various other colored felts. My mind kept wandering back forlornly to the dark green, but if I tried to say anything about it she soon put me on the right track again, and spread out some light rose colored felt before me. She was just ready to cut me off a piece of this when the thought came to me that I wanted dark green got the better of me again and I told her that I must have it. I apologized for my freak, but I explained to her that I would never be happy till I got it and carried home with it under my overcoat and hid it so that no one would ever know that I had bought dark green felt just because I wanted it when I found I have got light rose colored. She scattered slabs of felt right and left for a minute or so and dug a roll of the poor, crack flavored dark green out from the bottom of the pile and cut off two yards. She said it came to $3.50, reduced from $3.75½, and I gave her a $5 bill. She gave the felt to a girl in a pigeon hole to wrap up and put the money and a cheery little note to the cashier, saying that she had made a sale and hoped he was enjoying the same blessing, in a little round tin pepper box with a fur collar on each end of it, and dropped it down the end of a small brass curved spout which came up by the side of the postoffice box the girl was in. She pulled a sort of a thing around over the top of the brass tube and it began to hum a kind of a sad, subdued tune, and I judged that all was over.

I rested my elbows on the counter and thought and watched the end of that brass money disposing apparatus for a very long time. I saw my mistake, now that it was too late. I had often been warned from youth up against putting my money in where I would never get it back, and this must be what they meant. I had often wondered when my financially sharp friends had told me that I must never put my money into anything where it was not certain of speedy returns, what they were referring to; this was evidently it. Time wore on and the brass pipe hummed the same sad refrain down in its throat and refused to give up my $5. I wouldn't have cared so much if I hadn't been told so many times not to put my money into anything I didn't know anything about. Time went on and I hung to the one legged stool, though I had long ago given up hope. I noticed that Cardinal Wolsey was preparing to go home while Macbeth was having a lie down the sample lace in his department. All at once the organ pipe clucked and began to breathe hard. The girl pulled something and took out the pepper box with the whiskers. When the young lady opened it and gave me my change, consisting of nine pennies and some other coins, I walked back from the brink of financial ruin as one in a dream.—Fred H. Carruth in New York Tribune.

MEN AND EVENTS TALKED OF IN LODGE ROOM CIRCLES.

The Monument Recently Erected to the Late Masonic High Priest, James E. Morrison, in New York—A Fitting Tribute to a Noble Man's Memory.

Among the most magnificent tributes ever paid to the memory of a Mason in America is the monument recently erected in Woodlawn cemetery, New York, over the grave of the late James E. Morrison, past high priest.

The monument is of original and unique design, is cut from the finest granite found in the quarries. It stands over twenty-two feet high, and on six feet square at its base, surmounted by a huge granite ball. The four side panels polished and have appropriate inscriptions.

James Morrison was born in New York city in 1835, and became a Mason in the early youth. He joined Atlantic lodge, No. 178, and became its master in 1872, and was re-elected several times. He was junior grand warden in 1873, district deputy in 1874 and 1875, and was grand marshal of the grand lodge in 1876, and again district deputy in 1877. In Royal Arch Masonry he attained to the highest office in the order, that of grand high priest of the state, which he held in 1883 and 1885. In the Ancient and Accepted or Scottish Rite, he received the degrees up to the fourteenth grade in New York, and was advanced to the thirty-second degree in the city of Albany. In civil life Mr. Morrison held many important positions. He was a member of the state legislature, was private secretary to Mayor Cooper, and was chief examiner of the state at the time of his death, which occurred in the city of Buffalo on the 14th day of June, 1887.

THE MORRISON MONUMENT.

MASONIC TEMPLE FOR BUFFALO.

A Handsome Building to Be Erected on a Costly Site.

The question of a permanent home for the Masonic fraternity in Buffalo has at last been settled by the required vote of a majority of the lodges having cash in favor of the purchase of the Temple Beth Zion property on Niagara street for the sum of $34,250. The eleven bodies in the city have between them a $35,000 fund in cash besides the plant element. The money necessary for the consummation of the scheme will probably be raised by the formation of bonds.

No plans for the building have been definitely decided upon, but drawings have been prepared showing what the possibilities of the location are. These drawings show a magnificent structure, six stories high, with an imposing iron and brick front. These preliminary drawings devote the ground floor to two stores, the next story to offices, the next to club rooms, the fourth floor to blue rooms, the fifth to the commanderies and chapters and the sixth to the armory. Members of the various lodges estimate the probable cost of the building at $150,000, and say that, whatever plans are finally decided on, no building will be erected which will not be a credit to the city and the order.

An Ingenious Scheme.

There must be some particularly ingenious and original brother in Quinby lodge, No. 58, Knights of Pythias, at Cynthiana, Ky. At any rate the plan that lodge has adopted to help itself and the churches at the same time is novel, and is evidently appreciated by many lodges that it deserves mention. The plan was first proposed in September, and it was then resolved that "Quinby lodge give a series of six entertainments, dates to be fixed between that of Sept. 10, 1888, and June 1, 1889, and 20 per cent of the net proceeds of each entertainment to be given to each of the six churches—Methodist, Christian, Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopal and St. Edwards—of Cynthiana. Names of churches to be drawn, each entering from one to six, by three members of the lodge, and the church numbered one as per 20 per cent. of the first entertainment, and number two that of the second, and so on; and it shall not be known publicly which church is to get a part, or that named, of any one entertainment until the series have been completed." Quinby lodge is organized Dec. 5, 1887, with thirty-one members. On Jan. 7 a division was instituted with thirty members.

The Silver Anniversary.

On Feb. 19 the order of Knights of Pythias will be twenty-five years old. This occasion will be celebrated in Chicago by a grand parade. The two armories will be engaged for reception purposes, and a grand ball and banquet will be given. In order to defray the expense of the celebration each lodge in the city will be assessed $25, the surplus, if any exists, to be divided equally among the lodges.

PYTHIAN NOTES.

Ivanhoe lodge, No. 5, of San Jose, Cal., has demanded that the management of the House of the Fathers, at San Francisco, be investigated, in order that the cause of the death of James Young Ferguson, a member in good standing, may be known. It is alleged that the deceased, while suffering from the shock of a sudden immersion in the bay, was sent to the home and permitted to die in a cell, alone and unattended. He was buried in the potter's field, notwithstanding that he had a receipt for dues paid to lodge on June 23. The lodge has urged the grand lodge of California to cause a thorough investigation into the management of the institution.

Chesapeake lodge, No. 69, of Rock Hall, Kent county, Md., owns its own castle hall, which is a handsome two-story building. Members are being added, and there is good reason to expect the institution of a division in the near future.

Four officers of the Transient Knights Templar board of St. Louis are—President, George Rolling, of Aurora, Ill.; vice president, John M. Holmes, of Excelsior, Ill.; secretary and treasurer, W. H. Rudolph, of Hannibal, Mo.

British Columbia has a new lodge—Comox, No. 5, which was instituted on the 20th of January with a charter list of forty-five and a large number in waiting. It will own castle hall, having the land of the finer quality for that purpose.

As to Connecticut.

Connecticut was late in entering on her career as a doubtful state. She was the very last state in the Union to give up federalism, and in the sixty years from Jefferson to Scott inclusive she voted but twice for Democratic electors, though as there was no opposition to Monroe in 1820 she was counted on that side. In 1836 her vote was cast for Van Buren and in 1852 for Pierce; at all other elections she was Whig or Federal. After 1852 she was Republican in presidential years till 1876. Her vote and pluralities of late years have been as follows:

	Democrat.	Republican.	Plurality.
1872	43,684	50,316	6,632 R.
1873	45,039	52,553	6,514 R.
1874	46,755	50,978	6,723 R.
1876	53,873	54,779	906 R.
1878	48,849	51,349	2,500 R.
1879	45,395	48,807	3,412 R.
1880	64,417	67,078	2,661 R.
1882	57,934	64,980	7,101 R.
1884	67,127	65,960	1,264 D.
1886	59,918	66,030	6,112 R.

The Prohibition vote of Connecticut in 1884 was 2,489; in 1885, 4,609. The "Labor vote" in 1884 was 1,694, and 2,702 in 1886.

New York City.

Following is the vote of New York city for president, and for the leading official in non-presidential years:

	Dem.	Rep.	Lab.	Pro.
1879	Divided	46,323	....	95
1880	122,015	51,730	610	35
1882	124,914	47,765	1,587	804
1884	133,157	90,093	3,699	1,031
1885	122,603	75,354	1,015	139
1886	121,873	78,995	Divided	795
1887	111,368	69,634	27,277	1,319

The smallest recent Democratic majority in the city, in 1880, was 41,185, and the next smallest, on president, in 1884, viz., 43,064, the largest being in 1886, 52,367, and the next largest in 1887, viz., 59,214.

The City of Brooklyn.

With Brooklyn is usually included Kings county, which extends some distance south of the city limits, and of the two the recent vote is as follows:

	Dem.	Repub.	Labor.	Prohib.
1884	69,264	67,513	2,182	1,301
1885	57,605	47,927	—	1,358
1886	53,818	45,903	—	2,216
1887	69,597	44,192	15,625	2,088

It thus appears that the average Democratic majority in Kings county is about 14,000; that of New York and Kings, the two cities, about 65,000. And the usual majorities of Staten Island and the rest of Long Island, and the normal Democratic majority "below Harlem" appears about 68,000.

Will Try It Later.

A scientific journal tells "how to light a lamp with a snowball." We would like to try the experiment, but somehow snowballs are scarce at Pittsburg now.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

It Had the Strength.

Capt. Salthorse (to landlady)—Mrs. Hasher, can you tell me where I can purchase a large quantity of this butter?

Mrs. Hasher (gushingly)—Now, my dear captain! What can you want of a quantity of that excellent butter?

Capt. S.—I intended arming my marines with it in place of cutlasses, as my experience with it here convinces me it's a great thing to repel boarders.—Judge.

It is claimed that a few drops of ess de cologne, ether and chloroform, in equal parts, poured on a handkerchief previously wetted with cold water, and placed on the seat of a neuralgic pain, gives instantaneous relief. It is also very efficacious for nervous headaches.

JOTTINGS.

—Mr. C. E. Bow will meet his classes in English branches at the Y. M. C. A. to-night.

—Joseph Jefferson is to appear in "Rip Van Winkle" at Music Hall next week Tuesday night.

—A special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Y. M. C. A. will be held this evening.

—Applications for membership in the Y. M. C. A. ought to be left at the room before eight o'clock this evening.

—A new system of cutting of special interest to ladies, as taught by Miss Banghart, is advertised among our special notices.

—Louis Coddington, of West Front street, has moved seventy-two pianos during last month. Forty-eight of them were new.

—A regular meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club will be held at the Club House, Monday evening, Nov. 12th, at eight o'clock.

—Mr. W. W. Martin will meet his class in light gymnastics at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-morrow. For information apply at the rooms.

—With the entertainment season this year comes a fair to be held for the benefit of St. Mary's school in the hall of the new building. It is to be begun to-night and will continue till Nov. 17th.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the German Reformed church will give a sociable this evening for the benefit of the Plainfield German Reformed Sunday school room of the church. All the members and friends of the church are cordially invited.

—The week of prayer for young men in all lands will open with the day of prayer next Sunday, Nov. 11th, at which time sermons appropriate to the day will be preached by the pastors of the city. The Y. M. C. A. will have services at their rooms four evenings during the week.

—Plainfield Republicans were in a continual jubilee yesterday, even going so far as to get out a cannon, which they fired in salute to President-elect Harrison. At night the Lincoln Club held a rousing meeting and listened to congratulatory speeches by the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis and Mr. Alexander Gilbert.

—The prize overcoat or $30 in gold offered a few months ago by Harry Werner, the clothier, to the person naming the next President and the nearest to his majority, is to be given as soon as the actual majority is known. Mr. Wallace Coriell, of West Front street, appears to have made the nearest hit thus far.

—After the polls were closed, Tuesday, the saloons were opened and did a thriving business. That there was many a resultant sick-ness the sidewalk on Second street, in the saloon neighborhood near Park avenue, testified. Ladies, righteously indignant, called at this office yesterday and said that the pavement was so covered with vomit that pedestrians had to take to the road.

—"Many disease germs"—says an exchange —"enter through the open mouth. The mouth was not made for breathing, but for eating and speaking. The nose was made for breathing, and the air, passing through the long, moist, nasal passages, is purified, and leaves behind dust, disease germs and various impurities, while the air is warmed and tempered for the lungs. But when the mouth is left open dust, dirt and disease rush down to the lungs and, fastening there, develop and destroy the whole system."

PERSONAL.

Miss Susie Curtis Woodford, daughter of Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, of Brooklyn, has returned home after a short visit to the Misses Hagan, of Prospect avenue.

Mr. Phillips, of Plainfield, has been the well-known "Edward Varry" of the theatrical world a long time. He will appear with Mr. Joseph Jefferson in "Rip VanWinkle" at Music Hall next Tuesday evening.

There are now two Bishops Vincent. The first is, of course, the Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent, of the M. E. church, now residing at Buffalo, but formerly of Plainfield. The second is the Rev. Boyd Vincent, of Pittsburg, Pa., who has just been elected Assistant Bishop of the P. E. Diocese of Southern Ohio.

All of the high officers in the Masonic fraternity of New Jersey, together with many from remote parts of the country, were present in this city in November, one year ago, as guests of the Anchor Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, when a very high honor was conferred on Cornelius Bramhall, one of the most favorable masters of Masonic art will again visit this city Tuesday, Nov. 20th, when they will be entertained by Jerusalem Lodge, F. and A. M.

PLAINFIELD'S NEWSPAPER.

The Election Jubilee Edition a Great Hit.

THE NEWS may be pardoned for making some modest allusion to the characteristic success it made yesterday; for to pass by unnoticed the appreciation evinced by the public would savor somewhat of ingratitude.

While the majority of Plainfielders were sleeping as well as the hurrah in celebration of Harrison's election would warrant and while the rest were participating in the jubilation THE NEWS staff kept steadily at work to give at sunrise the true story of Republican triumphs.

At six o'clock the first Election Day edition was issued. This was rapidly counted two hours later by a second edition, which was so accurate in its returns that even the afternoon 'extras" from New York gave nothing more true to facts. That the sales were prodigious needs no telling. The paper was seen in everybody's hands.

The cartoons made a striking feature, and one which was received with considerable delight by all, of course excepting those whose toes were trodden on; but the main point achieved was the giving of Harrison's electoral majority more nearly than any other paper in the country published during the day.

Here is what we said:

TOTAL ELECTORAL VOTES	401
NECESSARY FOR CHOICE	201

REPUBLICAN STATES.		DEMOCRATIC STATES
California	8	Alabama	10
Colorado	3	Arkansas	7
Indiana	15	Connecticut	6
Illinois	22	Delaware	3
Iowa	13	Florida	4
Kansas	9	Georgia	12
Maine	6	Kentucky	13
Massachusetts	14	Louisiana	8
Michigan	13	Maryland	8
Minnesota	7	North Carolina	11
Nebraska	5	Missouri	16
Nevada	3	New Jersey	9
New Hampshire	4	New York	36
New York	36	South Carolina	9
Ohio	23	Tennessee	12
Oregon	3	Texas	13
Pennsylvania	30	Virginia	12
Rhode Island	4	West Virginia	6
Vermont	4
Wisconsin	11	Total	168
Total	233

In all the other papers several of the States were marked doubtful, but as the returns came in more fully it was seen that the advices of THE NEWS giving each State in the Union its proper vote for or against Harrison were in every case correct, and towards night our contemporaries were steadily drifting into our own line of report.

It will be noticed that our arrangement of electoral votes in the eight o'clock edition of yesterday, as re-produced above, is exactly the same as that given by to-day's New York papers, twenty four hours later, with the doubtful exception of California, which we placed on the Republican list till decisive news could be heard.

The Extra Jubilee editions of THE NEWS were a great hit in both their jubilee features and their returns, and were a mighty success in every way.

The Right Spirit.

It was agreed before election that Col. Julian Scott and Mr. S. E. Flower were to march in the Republican jubilation parade in case Harrison were elected, and editor T. W. Morrison was to march in the Democratic parade in case Cleveland were re-elected. Mr. Flower and Colyer led the Democratic columns in their parades, and it was thought before election that nothing would be more humiliating to either party to the wager afterwards than to thus made to contribute to the glory of the party they opposed. Mr. Morrison called both gentlemen this morning that he would not hold them to the agreement, if it was distasteful to them. Mr. Flower, speaking for himself and Col. Scott, held up both hands and said "We are all American citizens, and Gen. Harrison is our next President fair and square. We will do all we can to uphold him. If you had lost we would have held you to the agreement." As Mr. Flower cannot march because of lameness from wounds received in the war, suitable provision will be made for him. All three parties to the agreement were Union soldiers, but in this campaign were politically opposed as though personally friends. Our Democratic friends, not those named above were so sure before election that they had entrapped a Yankee, that they had a boat ready to send us up Salt river in, and the Postmaster had a big rooster stuffed for the occasion, which he is now willing to sell cheap.

To-Night's Concert.

The concert which is to be given in the Methodist Episcopal church this evening promises to be a treat to lovers of good music. Those who enjoyed the Marshall P. Wilder entertainment last year are assured that th will equal it in every respect, and probably surpass that of last year.

By giving this concert in the church instead of in Music Hall, it is possible to give a fine entertainment at very low prices, and to guarantee satisfaction.

Election Rum Cost Him $15.

Policeman Lynch arrested Edward Vail yesterday afternoon for drunkenness and disorderly conduct and turned him over to policeman Glenn. Vail broke loose, however, and spectators had the fun of seeing the two officers, with policeman Fine, also, chasing about Front street for the escaped prisoner. Mr. Lynch caught him over the brook and locked him up. To-day he was fined $15.

To Parade Next Monday.

The uniformed Republican Clubs of Plainfield will parade next Monday night in celebration of Harrison's election. The route will be over Front street to Peace, to Second, to Richmond, to Third, to Peace, to Ninth, to Park avenue, to Seventh, to Central avenue, to Front, to Grove, to Linden, to Somerset, to Front, to Washington street, countermarch, and dismiss at headquarters.

—A new orchestra, led by Mr. J. P. Fischer, played at Music Hall Tuesday night. It met with so cordial a reception that it will be engaged regularly.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

The Democrats Have a Joint Majority of Five.

TRENTON, Nov. 7th.—Complete returns from the legislative districts and the counties electing Senators show that last year's Republican majority has disappeared. The Democrats hold a majority in both houses, having eleven State Senators to ten Republicans, and thirty-two Assemblymen to twenty-eight Republicans, thus securing a Democratic majority on joint ballot of five. This will result in the election of a Democrat in place of Senator McPherson (Dem.), whose term expires March 4th next, and it will also give the Democrats complete control of legislation, as they hold the Governorship. The Republicans elect State Senators in Cape May and Burlington counties, and the Democrats elect their candidates in Passaic, Middlesex, Hunterdon and Somerset counties. Following is the list of members of the next Legislature, as shown by the returns:

A Re-Burial for Miller.

Edward L. Miller, the divinity-student who was murdered at Westfield last year, never had a Christian burial. This week Saturday the graduates of Theological Seminary, where he formerly studied, will give him a re-interment. The burial will be at Evergreen Cemetery, Hoboken, and the funeral is set at 11:30 a.m. Impressive services will be held in the M. E. church.

UNION COUNTY'S BALLOTS.

The Returns Show a Small Democratic Increase.

Four years ago Cleveland's plurality in Elizabeth was 793, and 690 in Union county. This time it is 1,249 in the city and 801 in the county. Fisk, (Pro.) obtained only 204 votes in Union county.

Jacob R. Geisenhainer (Dem.), for Congress, carried Elizabeth by 893 majority, and Union county by 628. His majority in Middlesex county is 540, and in Monmouth 1,000, making a total of about 2,068.

A. Q. Donovan, for Coroner, gets 1,239 plurality in Elizabeth and 816 in Union county.

The vote of Union county for President is: Cleveland (Dem.), 7,325; Harrison (Rep.), 6,614; Fisk (Pro.), 204. Congress—Geisenhainer (Dem.), 7,258; Kean (Rep.), 6,830; Park (Pro.), 293. Coroner—Donovan (Dem.), 7,269; Holmes (Rep.), 6,383.

The total vote of Elizabeth was 7,511.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

Leonard Davidson, age twenty-six, of Norfolk street, New York, was struck by a Central railroad train in the Communipaw yard yesterday and fatally injured.

Assemblyman Feeney, of Jersey City, has announced that in case of a Democratic majority on joint ballot in the Legislature, he is for District-Attorney Charles H. Winfield for United States Senator, "first, last and all the time."

Some drunken men created a disturbance in Wm. Kaufschiele's beer shop, No 165 Columbia avenue, Jersey City, at an early hour yesterday morning and the proprietor ejected them. One of them threw a paving-stone at Kaufschiele, which struck him on the head and fractured his skull, inflicting a probably fatal injury. He was taken to the City Hospital. Leonard Schroder and Richard Schillben were arrested and held to await the result of Kaufschiele's injuries.

The annual meeting of the Iron Steamboat Company of New York, which is incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, was held in Long Branch yesterday. The Company has 200,000 shares of stock, and 178,000 shares were voted upon to-day. The new board of directors is composed of Edward N. Lowe, George M. Dodge, George F. Baker, Lewis May, Samuel Carpenter, W. H. Woolverton, Frederick W. Lewis, L. C. Webster, John Hower, J. Henry Alexandre, A. R. Culver, Eagle Valable, Thomas Rigney, J. H. Coffin and Herman Clark.

The owners of the oyster-sailing-vessels are, like the owners of sailing petroleum-carrying tonnage, alarmed at the encroachments of steam tonnage. Recently the steam oyster-dredger Richard W. Law was launched at Fairview, Conn., for service along Long Island and the coast of New Jersey. The new craft cost $14,000 and will carry 5,000 bushels of oysters. She will be steam and sail rigged and has a single mast. She is 80 feet long, 20 feet beam, and 6 feet depth of hold, and has light and powerful engines.

Wm. B. Cooper, a member of the famous Cooper family, died suddenly in Camden, died at his residence, No. 407 Penn street, in that city, shortly after midnight last week Thursday, at the age of 76 years. He had for year he resided with his family in the old mansion near Pavonia. He was a direct descendant of Wm. Penn. He will be buried on the farm was what is now the northern half of Camden, and who ran the first ferry between Camden and Philadelphia, known as "Billy Cooper's Ferry." Mr. Cooper leaves an estate estimated to be worth from $300,000 to $500,000.

The opening of the Fall flower show of the New Jersey Floricultural Society took place in the Horticultural Rooms, East Orange, yesterday. Only cut flowers are shown, but the exhibition is a remarkable one and includes a number of novel features in floriculture. "Mrs. Hardy," a new chrysanthemum from Japan, is a magnificent flower and a special favorite of the show. It is exhibited by James R. Pitcher, of Short Hills, and is said to be the only one in the country. It was bought at a price ruinous into the thousands. The flower measures eight inches across and is four inches high. The principal exhibits are chrysanthemums, which are from florists in Massachusetts, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and other States are represented in the collection.

Boys Sometimes Too Noisy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS—I wish you would call attention to the nuisance to which the citizens living between Park avenue and Richmond on Seventh street are subject daily and nightly. Some eight or ten boys with drums beating, march past the doors of those who have children living in. Will you please call the attention of their parents and if that fails to correct the evil please set through your valuable paper what course would be the proper one to pursue to get relief. SUBSCRIBER.

[No doubt this letter, when read by the boys, will in itself be sufficient to effect a remedy.—ED.]

THE PARNELL INQUIRY.

Witnesses Give Serious Testimony Against the League.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Before the Parnell commission yesterday, Sir Henry James said it was difficult to compel witnesses to obey subpœnas, and he would therefore be forced to complete proof of certain outrages in Ireland at a later date.

Several witnesses testified that here boats, organized and conducted under the auspices of the Land league, had taken place on the lands of those who had in various ways offended the league, for the purpose of damaging their crops.

The testimony of policemen from Loughrea, Athenry and other places showed that prior to the founding of the Land league, those districts were comparatively free from crime. After that event began to hold meetings regularly the districts became turbulent and the disorder culminated in outrages. Five murders quickly followed the founding of the league in Loughrea, including the killing of Sergeant Linton, who, it was averred by the witnesses, was killed for having testified at the trial of Mr. Parnell.

Address by Mr. Gladstone.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Mr. Gladstone addressed an enormous meeting in Hengist hall last evening. The few seats reserved were readily sold at two guineas each, so the entire space not reserved was crowded to suffocation three hours before the meeting was called to order. Lord Ripon, Earl Spencer, Earl Rosebery, Sir William Harcourt and Mr. John Morley were present. Referring to Lord Hartington's action that his house rule was dead, Mr. Gladstone said that Lord Hartington would use by this meeting whether it was dead or whether the undertaker's services should be invoked to meet the absolute necessities of the other party. The Irish, he declared, should show their resentment toward a government which, while professing zealous to execute the law, had manifested contempt for it wherever it had been found inconvenient. It was the imperial necessities the Irish must be the best judges of how to deal with local affairs.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 8.—A boiler belonging to the Lancaster Chemical company, whose plant is situated just north of the city limits, exploded with terrific force, completely demolishing the building, killing one man and injuring five. The casualties are: John Riddle, fireman, 35 years old, killed outright; Aleppo Hall, engineer, badly injured; C. P. Miller, one of the proprietors, George Smith, a man named Mickey and a boy named Hoak slightly. The boiler was new and but few days old. The cause of explosion is unknown. The Chemical company also supplied the United States Electric Light company with power to run their dynamos for the city light, and it is said, in consequence of the disaster, in total darkness.

It Was an Infernal Machine.

BERLIN, Nov. 8.—The Republican has been aroused that the Russian press censors have rigorously prohibited dissemination of correct reports of the recent accident to the czar's train. It is now upon reliable authority that the disaster was caused by an infernal machine worked by electricity, which was placed under the imperial carriage. The finding of suspicious machinery and material at Sebastopol has confirmed general belief in the truth of this statement.

AFTER ELECTION.

Questions Set at Rest by Yesterday's Returns.

INDIANA IS REPUBLICAN.

Both Parties Still Claiming California.

CONNECTICUT GOES DEMOCRATIC.

Details of the Vote in These and Other States.

REPUBLICANS CLAIM CONGRESS.

Illinois Taken from the Doubtful List. An Increased Vote Polled Everywhere, Only Partial Returns as Yet from Many States, but Enough to Tell Pretty Accurately How They Have Gone—Figures on Which the Republicans Claim the Next Congress—Election Day Events. Comments of the London Press.

The returns from many states are still very incomplete, but there is enough from all in which there was any doubt to indicate how many stand, except, perhaps, California, which is still claimed by both parties. New York, Indiana and Illinois have been conceded by the Democratic managers and press to the Harrison and Morton ticket as given up by the Republicans. According to these concessions the electoral vote now stands as follows:

ELECTORAL VOTE.

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Present indications are that the Fifty-first congress will be Republican, but this question cannot be definitely settled until authentic reports are received from over a score of disputed districts in distant states. Some days must elapse before this can be done. The state has secured a Democratic gain of three and the delegation stands, Democrats, 18; Republicans 16. Democratic gains are also claimed in Indiana and Virginia—two in each state.

On the other hand the Republicans claim gains in Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, Tennessee and West Virginia. These claims, if well founded, would give a Republican gain of about thirty-five in the house of representatives.

In the present congress there are 168 Democrats, 152 Republicans, 1 Independent and 1 labor representative in the person of Henry Smith, of Wisconsin.

The figures in the following figures: Republican—Arkansas, 1; California, 6; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 2; Illinois, 14; Indiana, 7; Iowa, 9; Kansas, 7; Kentucky, 3; Maine, 5; Maryland, 1; Massachusetts, 10; Michigan, 11; Minnesota, 5; Missouri, 4; Nebraska, 1; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 4; New York, 28; North Carolina, 1; Ohio, 18; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 21; Rhode Island, 2; Tennessee, 2; Texas, 1; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 1; West Virginia, 1; Wisconsin, 7; Arkansas, 1; California, 2; Connecticut, 2; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 10; Illinois, 6; Indiana, 6; Iowa, 4; Kentucky, 9; Louisiana, 6; Maryland, 4; Massachusetts, 2; Michigan, 3; Minnesota, 3; Missouri, 10; Nebraska, 1; New Jersey, 5; New York, 14; North Carolina, 9; Ohio, 6; Pennsylvania, 9; South Carolina, 7; Tennessee, 8; Texas, 10; Virginia, 9; West Virginia, 3; Wisconsin, 2. Total, 211 Republicans, 154 Democrats; Republican majority, 12.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—There are more complete returns from this state than were sent last night, but they do not change the general result in any way. They are partly complete now and foot up as follows: Harrison's plurality, 8,906; Hill's plurality, 13,305.

No doubt remains that Harrison has carried the state, and that Governor Hill is reelected by a decisive plurality. The appended figures from the several counties in the state are as nearly perfect as it is possible to make them so soon after the closing of the polls. In counties in the interior of the state some election districts are still missing, but those votes cannot materially change the result:

The vote by counties for the two leading candidates, so far as at present received, is as follows:

Counties.	Harrison.	Cleveland.	Counties.	Harrison.	Cleveland.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Harrison's majority in this state will be about 70,000. The Republicans have suspected fraud in the Philadelphia returns, for example, in the case of Governor Beaver's majority, who has a majority of 6,000. Osborne, congressman at large, elected by 1,000 in Luzerne, although the district gives Cleveland 1,500 plurality. Harrison's plurality in Philadelphia is 15,000.

Following is the popular vote, giving the pluralities by counties. This is not the official count, but its figures are as accurate as it is now possible to obtain:

INDIANA.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—An estimate compiled by the secretary of the Democratic state committee shows that returns have been received from fifty-three counties, giving Harrison a net gain of 3,092. Estimates from the seven additional counties foot up this gain to the 4,031. This does not include Marion, with its gain in excess of 500, and 100 gain in Wayne county. The committee feel warranted in conceding the state by a plurality of 1,000.

The secretary adds:

"We concede the election of Cheadle and Owens, but we have defeated Steele and Johnson, and have elected all the other congressmen, making the delegation stand ten to three."

The best judgment gives the state to Harrison by a plurality of 3,000, and also indicates the election of the entire Republican state ticket by a small plurality. The Republicans claim a fighting chance for Congressman Steele in the Eleventh district, and for Hayes in the Thirteenth district, but both are probably defeated. Gen. Hovey's district went Democratic, insuring the election of Judge Parrott. Capt. White is beaten in the Twelfth district by McClellan, and Johnson in the Vigo district by Brookshire. This will make the congressional delegation ten to three in favor of the Democracy.

CONNECTICUT.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 8.—Connecticut gives Cleveland a plurality of 404. Morris (Dem.) beats Bulkeley (Rep.) for governor by 1,500, with three towns to hear from. Bulkeley will be elected by a Republican legislature. Congressmen are elected as follows: First district, E. Simonds (Rep.), 833 plurality, gain; Second, W. F. Wilson (Dem.), 893 plurality; Third, Charles A. Russell (Rep.), 670 plurality; Fourth, Edward W. Seymour (Dem.), 398 plurality. The state senate stands 8 Democrats and 13 Republicans; the house 105 Democrats and 144 Republicans, a Republican majority on joint ballot 89, against 39 in 1887. The presidential vote by counties is as follows:

Counties.	Cleveland.	Harrison.	Fiske.
New Haven	8,196	15,951	839
Hartford	6,966	15,551	787
New London	7,529	7,275	353
Fairfield	8,042	14,120	801
Windham	3,195	4,194	276
Litchfield	5,843	6,931	643
Middlesex	3,514	4,259	273
Tolland	2,264	2,953	249
Total	75,562	74,668	3,977

Cleveland's plurality, 404.

ILLINOIS.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—This city complete and the rest of Cook county, except two small townships which it is not thought will materially change the result, give Cleveland 81,190; Harrison, 80,361, a plurality for Cleveland of 857. The county complete in 1884 gave Blaine 69,251; Cleveland, 60,659, a plurality for Blaine of 8,642. As there has been no doubt that the state outside of Cook county went heavily for Harrison, though possibly by a somewhat less plurality than for Blaine in 1884, it now appear to be absolutely no question, notwithstanding the great gain for Cleveland in Cook county, that the state is safe for Harrison.

The vote of eighty-four counties in Illinois, including Cook, shows majorities for Harrison of 20,305, against 9,663 in 1884. The remaining eighteen counties in 1884 gave Blaine 5,881 and Cleveland, 6,942. Assuming that these eighteen counties not yet fully reported give the same vote as in 1884, the state will now give a plurality for Harrison of 18,482. It is safe to say, therefore, that Harrison's plurality will be about 19,000.

DELAWARE.

WILMINGTON, Nov. 8.—Delaware remains in the Democratic column. Cleveland carried the state by about 2,300 plurality, which is a gain of 1,500 from four years ago, although four votes are lost. Wilmington gives Cleveland 1,712 plurality and New Castle county gives him 2,561. Kent county gives 140 Republican psurality with 100 to hear from. Sussex gives 100 Republican plurality with 100 to hear from. The Democratic plurality will be about 1,500. The Democrats still hold out some hope for Sussex, but the counties are believed to be Republican.

If the Republicans in the two lower counties succeed in carrying their legislative tickets and the latter have elected 2 senators and 14 representatives—a majority of the legislature on joint ballot. Seven Democratic senators were held over and seven Democratic representatives are elected in this county, thus making the legislature on joint ballot—Republican, 16; Democratic, 14.

Another Chinese Question Settled.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The treasury department decides that Chinese seamen who ship on United States ships in foreign ports for a round voyage, and who have been continuously under the United States flag from the time they left until they return, to ports open generally to the Chinese merchants, and can remain in this country.

Miners Indicted for Murder.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 8.—The jury in the case of Sheriff Gaskell and Deputy Sheriffs Gumbert, Sanford & Co. returned an indictment against the officers charging the defendants with the murder of Peter Cassidy. It is understood that the attorneys for the defendants have not been given and they therefore do not know whether or not they will be arrested.

Editor Foran Resigns.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 8.—Thomas Foran, editor of the Florida Times-Union, and thirty-three years a resident of Jacksonville, died this morning. Col. Foran was a native of Ireland. Col. Cole, George Hubbard and W. C. Tucker. Of the new board the two latter will certainly dust editorial chairs.

CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—The returns throughout California come in slowly, and it is impossible to make up the county returns so as to make a comparison with the vote of 1884 as possible. The Republican and Democratic state central committees both claim the state by returns from 7,600 to 9,000 while the Democrats contend that the Democratic presidential ticket will have a majority of 2,000 to 3,000. The election of Governor Waterman is conceded by the Democrats The Evening Post (Rep.) says: "Cleveland's majority in the city will be 4,000, while the Democrats claim that the majority for Cleveland will approximate 8,000 to 9,000 in the city, and that the Republicans will not come to the city with a sufficient vote to overcome this. The entire Democratic city ticket is elected in San Francisco."

OHIO.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 8.—The Democratic state committee concedes the election of fifteen Republican congressmen, but claim the election of Yoder in the Fourth district, Seney in Fifth, Owens in Sixteenth, Haynes in Tenth, Outhwaite in Thirteenth, and Sutherland in Sixth. Chairman Coppeller, of the Republican committee, concedes the first five above Democrats, but claims Boothman's majority over Saltzgaber by 900. At the Republican headquarters Dalzell is claimed by 25,000, but Democrats only concede 19,000. Harrison's majority in this state will probably be nearer 18,000 according to returns and estimates made. Huling (Rep.) is elected prosecutor in this county.

MICHIGAN.

DETROIT, Nov. 8.—Michigan has gone Republican by a plurality ranging from 13,000 to 18,000 on the electoral ticket. Luce (Rep.), for governor, runs behind the rest of the ticket, but not more than 5,000. He has a large cities, but gained in the country, where he did not have to encounter the opposition of the liquor men. The Republicans gain two congressmen certainly, and perhaps three, Ford and Tarsney being defeated in the Fifth and Eighth districts respectively. The Tenth district is still in doubt. The legislature is safely Republican on joint ballot, insuring the election of a Republican senator to succeed Palmer.

WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE Nov. 8.—Chairman Payne, of the Republican state central committee, claims Wisconsin by 30,000.

The Republicans elected seven congressmen and the Democrats two. They are: First district, L. B. Caswell; Second district, Charles Barwig; Third district, R. M. Lafollette; Fourth district, J. W. Van Schaick; Fifth district, George H. Brickner; Sixth district, Charles B. Clark; Seventh district, O. B. Thomas; Eighth district, Nils Haugen; Ninth district, H. H. McCord. Returns thus far show Democratic gains throughout the state, but it will go Republican by a decreased majority.

VIRGINIA.

ALEXANDRIA, Nov. 8.—W. W. Scott, secretary of the state Democratic committee, says that although returns are very meager the indications are that Cleveland and the Democratic ticket will have a majority in the state of 4,000 to 5,000. He thought the Democrats would gain two, if not three, members of congress.

Mahone is beaten in his own district. All the Mahone candidates throughout the state have been swept under. Many Republicans voted against them because they were regarded as representatives of Mahone.

FLORIDA.

JACKSONVILLE, Nov. 8.—Florida gives Cleveland electors and Democratic state ticket a majority of something less than 5,000. Returns from precincts in the Second district came in very slowly. Baker, Bradford, Brevard, Hamilton, Lake, Madison, Marion and Orange counties give safe Democratic majorities. A careful estimate places Dalkeith's majority for congress in the Second district at 1,683, though the Republicans still claim it. Nine counties elect Republican officers. This city and county are largely Republican.

COLORADO.

DENVER, Nov. 8.—Returns are slow. Partial returns received up to this evening indicate a good majority for Harrison. The assembly will probably stand: Senate—Republicans, 20; Democrats, 6. House—Republicans, 39; Democrats, 10. Returns from 23 out of 38 counties give Cleveland 5,044; Harrison, 7,564.

Returns from 54 out of 63 counties in Colorado give Harrison a nearly 17,000 majority, and Cooper (dep.) for governor, between 8,000 and 10,000 majority.

MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 8.—The Democratic state committee has compiled and consolidated returns from about 50 of the 114 counties in this state, which indicate that Cleveland will have a majority of 40,000 in the state, and that Francis (Dem.), for governor, will have a plurality of 14,000. These returns embrace the vote of St. Louis, Kansas City and all the large cities in the state.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, Nov. 8.—The state (two townmissing) gives Harrison 183,447; Cleveland, 149,960; Fisk, 3,041. The same in 1884 gave Blaine 146,616; Cleveland, 122,284; Butler, 34,376; St. John, 9,916. For governor: Ames, 180,439; Russell, 153,240; Earle, 9,170. Republican plurality, 27,363.

NEVADA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 8.—Forty-two out of 172 precincts in Nevada give Harrison 2,142; Cleveland, 1,242. In 1884 these 42 precincts gave Blaine 3,106; Cleveland, 2,534. Returns from 35 precincts give Cassidy (Dem.) 1,683 and Bartine (Rep.) 1,984, for congress.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 8.—About one-third of the election returns have been received. Cleveland's gain is 1,000. Democrats have good majority in the legislature. Second district, congressional, is in doubt. Republicans claim the Fifth district.

IOWA.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Nov. 8.—Returns from fifty-four counties give 30,000 majority for Harrison. Full returns will increase his majority, and the entire ticket is elected; but one or two Democrats.

MINNESOTA.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 8.—There is no means to report from the state. Merriam's majority for governor is about 7,000. Four Republican congressmen have been elected.

WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING, Nov. 8.—The Democrats have carried West Virginia by about 4,000 majority; have elected a solid delegation to congress, and have carried the legislature.

MONTANA.

HELENA, Nov. 8.—From reports so far received it is considered that the Republicans have carried the territory by 4,000 majority.

NEBRASKA.

OMAHA, Nov. 8.—The indications are that Harrison will carry Nebraska by 25,000.

ELECTION BRIEFS.

Coleman (Rep.) is elected to congress from the Second district of Louisiana by about 300.

Lesher (Dem.) is elected to congress from the First district of Georgia by a handsome majority.

Salutes were fired at Washington in honor of Harrison's election.

In a speech at Lexington, Va., Harry St. George Tucker, Democratic congressional candidate from the Tenth district, claimed his election over Yost (Rep.) by 1,000.

Later returns on delegate in Montana indicate the election of Carter (Rep.) by 4,500.

The Republicans of the First North Carolina congressional district elected the election of skinner (Dem.) by nearly 1,000. The Democrats gain three members of the legislature in the counties of Chowan, Camden and Perquimans.

Monmouth county, N. J., was carried by the Democrats by a majority of 15, and they elect all their candidates for the assembly, gaining one.

Congressman McKinley, of Ohio, was reelected by almost 3,000 plurality, showing a gain in all four counties comprising the district.

MICHIGAN.

M. L. Smyser, (Rep.) for congress to succeed Governor Luce, carries the district by 1,800 majority in the Twentieth Ohio district.

The total vote of Maryland is: Cleveland, 108,788; Harrison, 100,986; Fisk, 4,741. In 1884 the vote was: Cleveland, 96,866; Blaine, 85,748.

Oregon's vote shows a majority for Harrison of 7,000 to 8,000.

Rhode Island's Republican majority has fallen off somewhat. Tuesday's vote was: Harrison, 21,969; Cleveland, 17,853; Fisk, 1,281.

Harrison's plurality in New Hampshire is a trifle under 25,000. Two Republican congressmen are elected, and the assembly will have 25 Republican majority and the senate 13. Goodell (Rep.), for governor, has a plurality of 750.

Harrison's majority is rolling up in Vermont, but many counties are to be heard from.

Harrison has about 70,000 majority in Kansas, and the state ticket wins by 65,000.

Latest advices from Mississippi indicate a majority for Cleveland of 30,000 to 40,000.

Tennessee returns are very slow, but Cleveland's majority is estimated at 20,000. Taylor is elected governor by about 16,000.

Returns thus far received from North Carolina indicate that Cleveland's vote in the state is about 153,000, against 137,000 for Harrison.

Cleveland's majority in Arkansas will be about 17,000.

English Comment.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Concerning the American presidential election The Daily News says: "The Republicans who revolutionized the tariff are thoroughly satisfied with vengeance. Though Mr. Cleveland's administration has been dignified and successful, it can hardly be said that he has opened the doors era in American politics proclaimed for him."

The Post says: "Mr. Cleveland's attitude has been thoroughly honest and unswerving purpose he was ready to flout at England. It is impossible in the circumstances for the English not to feel a small gratification at the failure of those methods which Democracy may regard the change of administration with indifference. It would be unfair to lay overmuch stress upon the reckless expressions of Mr. Blaine against England. The two countries have lived in harmony under Republican rule in America and can again. The Chronicle says: "The straight course has been taken here in the election. Englishmen have wished well of the Democrats, but recent events have shown six of one and half a dozen of the other."

The Chronicle says: "It is pretty well understood that Harrison is a marionette and Blaine pulls the strings. The accession of the Republicans to power strikes any hopes that the labors of the fisheries commission may be ratified."

The Standard says: "There never was a more absurd fiction than that all-wing that British gold has been used lavishly to defeat Blaine and his nominal leader, Harrison, or that the Liberals, Gen. Banks, Lord Lieutenant Governor Brackett and such other agents as could be found for the impromptu occasion. The meeting broke up with three cheers for Blaine and three for Harrison."

Rioting at Norfolk.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 8.—A riot occurred at Portsmouth, Va., last night between whites and blacks. Four hundred negroes assembled at the corner of Court and Hill, Grover Cleveland on a Sour Apple Tree. They encountered a party of whites and a free fight occurred. Between forty and fifty pistol shots were fired and three white men were wounded, two of them seriously. The negroes were finally dispersed and the city is now under military protection. One hundred special policemen have been sworn in to preserve order, as more trouble is anticipated. Both clans are well armed.

Judge Thurman Eulogized.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 8.—Judge Thurman's name was mentioned in the joint convention and caused the most exciting demonstration of the Democracy. His name suggested the nomination of the party, however, because he favored the tariff reform. Democrats are jubilant over the election of Governor Campbell in Kentucky. Already he is now talked of as the Democratic candidate for governor in 1889. Democrats would rejoice to see him elected, as he would be by admitting Dakota, Idaho and Montana.

RECEIVING THE RETURNS.

The President and President-Elect Both Calm.

WASHINGTON AND INDIANAPOLIS.

President Cleveland Holds His U sual Reception—Col. Lamont and Judge Thurman Talk—Excitement at Indianapolis. Gen. Harrison Remains at Home.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The president and Mrs. Cleveland remained at the White House Tuesday night. Just before noon Mrs. Cleveland drove out to Oak View. The president remained in and received several callers. He had a usual reception in the East room. He was agreeable to about sixty people there.

Col. Lamont seemed to regard the thing as settled. He was not especially disposed to speculate on the cause of the result. Money he mentioned as one thing. He was not disposed to say more. He declared that Governor Hill had done all he could for the ticket, and that the votes he got that Cleveland did not were from the Republican liquor interests, and not to be controlled by any one. He did not think that the result in the city pointed to much trading.

Associate Justice Lamar was seen soon after leaving the White House. The president, he said, admitted that the news thus far received very unfavorable.

"Do you think the tariff issue is responsible for the Democratic defeat?"

"No, I do not," said Justice Lamar, "and I do not know to what to attribute this defeat."

A special dispatch to The Star from Colonel Lamont says Mr. Thurman is followed:

"If the national committee had listened to Brice and Townsend and me and given us the aid we asked, we should have carried the state of Indiana by 5,000 plurality, and gained as no aid, but took the money we raised. We could not organize Cincinnati because the head men were against us. If the committee had taken our advice they would have carried the state; as it is they have lost it and the election."

"Do you then give up the entire election?" was asked.

"We must. Harrison is undoubtedly elected."

Vice president and Col. Lamont left the executive mansion early in the evening and drove to Oak View where the colonel remained until late in the evening. The bulletins and press reports were not sent to the mansion after 8 o'clock. The president talked quite freely yesterday about the figures and the unexpected Republican vote, but expressed not the slightest regret in the world at any action he had taken during his administration. He is willing to admit that the position he has taken on the tariff issue and he took in favor of revenue reduction may have lost him a good many votes, but he still maintains that if it were to do over again he would follow the dictates of his convictions. President Cleveland received no telegrams from New York city later than 8 o'clock in the afternoon. What he has heard, however, he concedes that he is defeated. No man ever took defeat more philosophically. He lays his defeat on no tariff issue and Republican lies, he says, treated him perfectly square, and he has no fault to find against them at all.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—There was no lack of enthusiasm at the home of Gen. Harrison yesterday. By 4 o'clock in the morning the streets were pretty well cleared of the 10,000 men and boys that had been creating pandemonium from dusk of the evening before, but by 8 o'clock a goodly number of them were out of doors again, apparently fresh and returning ready for new revelry. The rain which fell almost without cessation throughout the day did not dampen their ardor in the least. They surrounded newspaper offices, packed into the political headquarters, blockaded the street corners and jammed in and fore-deep. Fortunately for the peace of the city and the safety of the prospective president-elect kept away from the neighborhood of his residence. New York being conceived safe, police attention was more directly centered upon the state. It was claimed by both parties, the Democrats of the two being the more confident. The returns were remarkably slow in coming in, but indicated Republican gains.

At the Republican headquarters, in addition to the reports received by the Western Union, Chairman Huston received a special bulletin from the chairman of each county committee, while at the Democratic headquarters special reports from the various counties had been arranged for. These differed materially in almost every instance from the bulletins received through the other channel.

At the Republican headquarters, upon comparison of the Western Union bulletins with the private reports, it is claimed that a Republican plurality of 5,000 is now quite certain. As computed by the United Press the returns from fifty-six out of the ninety-two counties show Republican gains over a total of 7,400 and Democratic gains 705; not Republican gain, 6,785. Such Democratic strongholds as Allen, Clark, Dubois, Jackson, Perry, Posey, Switzerland and Vanderburg counties are, however, not included, no reliable returns from those points having yet been received.

The result in Marion county was a genuine surprise to the Republicans. It was carried by Blaine in 1884 by 228 plurality, although the ticket was headed by Democratic nominee for lieutenant governor, a plurality of 397. But as the home city of the Republican nominee for the presidency was a part of the county, it was confidently expected that it would come to the front with a rousing plurality for Harrison and the entire ticket; but the returns are exactly reversed. With eighty-six out of the ninety-eight precincts officially reported, and five of the six missing being strongly Democratic, the Republican majority is 1,400. The Republican state and county Democratic tickets are elected by majorities ranging from 300 to 900. If the returns from the precincts yet to be heard from are on the basis of those of 1884, it is conceded at Republican headquarters that Gen. Harrison will lose his own county by 2,500.

In his own precinct the vote was, Harrison, 345; Cleveland, 84, while the ward was carried by 730, a Republican gain of 300. Hanna, Republican candidate for county treasurer, ran ahead of him in the ward by nine votes.

Congressman Bynum, who was visiting the committee rooms, was warmly congratulated upon his reelection. Two years ago his majority was 1,774. This time, notwithstanding the fact that the state ticket has been defeated by 5,000, against him, it will be over 2,000.

Congressman Holman, who was also visiting the committee rooms, was likewise congratulated upon his reelection. He has been in congress for thirty years, and has served more terms than any other man in the state. He has been a member of the committee of ways and means for the greater part of that time.

SOMERSET COUNTY SURROGATE'S OFFICE, Somerville, N. J., Oct. 19, 1888. In the matter of the application of Annie L. Hand, executrix of Augustus W. Hand, of North Plainfield township, deceased.

Pursuant to the order of the surrogate it is on this twentieth day of September, A. D. 1888, ordered and directed by the surrogate that the said executrix give public notice to the creditors of the said deceased to exhibit to the subscriber, under oath or affirmation, their claims and demands against the estate of the said deceased, and that she do so by setting up a copy of this order in six public places in the county of Somerset, within four days hereafter, in five of the most public places of two townships in the county of Somerset, and in two newspapers printed in the county of Somerset, and by publishing the same for the space of three weeks next after the said twenty days, in THE PLAINFIELD PRESS and THE RARITAN ARGUS, and that all such creditors shall not apply for any dividend thereof, or any part thereof, after the said period of three months, public notice being given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be barred and debarred of his or her action therefor against the said executrix.

The Pump Was Out of Order.

"Beg pardon, sir," he said as he stopped a citizen on Michigan avenue, "but does this avenue lead to Dearborn?"

"It does."

"And to the poorhouse?"

"Yes."

"Want to go out there as a pauper."

"Yes. I shall probably die out there, as my spirit is broken and my ambition gone."

"Very likely; but they have a nice cemetery there."

"If I had a dollar I think I could keep myself until I found work, and would not be obliged to go," continued the man.

"But you haven't the dollar?"

"No, nor even a penny."

"I thought not. Just keep right on walking and you'll get out there by night. Very nice place. Part of it is an insane asylum, and then there's the cemetery I spoke of. Good day."

The citizen walked on, and the other shuffled around a corner, where a companion was waiting asked:

"Well, did he play?"

"Yes."

"How much?"

"Played me for a fool. We'd better try some other dodge. This is no crowd for sympathy."—Detroit Free Press.

Asking Too Much.

Dumley (to Brown)—I say, Brown, did you chip in $5 with the rest of the boys for the charity fund?

Brown—No, I can't afford to give away $5.

Dumley—Well, that's the way I feel. By the way, Brown, can you lend me a V for a few days?

Brown—Can't do it possibly, Dumley. Didn't I just tell you that I can't afford to give away $5?—New York Sun.

Mistaken Identity.

A passenger on a train from New York the other day stepped from the overheated car to the platform and filled his lungs with the fresh, pure air. "Ah," he exclaimed, "isn't this exhilarating?" "No," returned the laconic brakeman, "this is Berlin?"—Hartford Courant.

Making Them Sweat.

The colonel had been jawing all the forenoon about "the durned lazy niggers," who were idling about in crowds, and when he found about 200 at the depot to see the train come in he boiled over. I told him it was the usual sight of every southern town, and that he was none of his business whether they worked or played, but he went over and sat down on a barrel and conspired with himself how to make them sweat. By and by he came over, and climbing upon a bale of cotton he said:

"My friends, in coming up from Calera I lost my wallet out of the car window. Whoever finds the $150 in it can have half."

He had hardly ceased speaking when a hundred shouts arose, a mob moved down the track, and in another minute we were alone. Next forenoon we passed some of them twenty-one miles away, heads down and eyes searching the ground, and the colonel went to the rear of the car and encouraged them by calling:

"I think it was about six miles further down, and you can have the whole of it if you find it."—Detroit Free Press.

Pitching a Curve.

"Where are you going, my pretty maid?"
"To the Harvard Annex," Circe said;
"And, by the way, that Harvard man,
Just try to beat us girls if you can:
We're going to be lawyers, doctors, and, bless
Your heart, sir, we mean to running the press."

The senior smiled as he passed her by,
As a sonic triumphant look blazed in his eye.
"You may do all you say, my confident maid,
But still we reserve it be far ahead;
For the time when you girls will lose your nerve
Will be when you try to pitch a curve."
—Cambridge Press.

"Girls," he said, "the same," said the old man, as he stood at the cashier's desk and picked up $2.85 out of a $20 bill; "very little change!"—Life.

One Advantage.

The Chinese baby knows no cradle, and its father therefore never trips over such a receptacle when he jumps out of bed at midnight and goes groping about after the paregoric bottle. If there is any other advantage in being a Chinese father we have never heard of it.—Norristown Herald.

A Question.

Sarah Bernhardt now says she will be emaciated. As to whether she will burn easily it is difficult to say, but we have an idea that she will.—Rochester Post-Express.

What Pedal Extremities Were.

WOMAN AND HOME.

MANAGEMENT OF THE BABY DURING THE FIRST WEEK.

Setting a Refined Table—True Economy. Happiness of the Married—Pleasures Within Reach—Young People—Care of the Lamp—Odds and Ends.

The management of the baby during the first week of its existence may be summed up in one word—quiet. A new born infant, to say the wise ones, has little more perception than a jelly fish. It is a tiny bundle of flesh and blood—a packet of potentialities rather than an actual human entity. Even granting all this the fact remains that the wee frame contains in miniature all the essential parts that bring happiness or misery to an older child.

This morsel of humanity has the capability for being comfortable or uncomfortable as fully developed as if it were five years old. It shrinks from cold; it suffers from pin pricks or rough usage; it knows, poor little creature, the pangs of colic, and its nervous system is in a sufficiently advanced state to render it keenly susceptible to the glare of bright light or to such loud noises as a heavy tread or the banging of doors. Add to this that the soft velvety skin is in a state of sensitiveness unknown to the epidermis toughened by contact with our atmosphere and by friction, and it will readily appear why the little new comer should be enveloped in tranquility and tenderness as in a garment.

Almost equal in importance to this consideration for the small stranger is that of warmth. While the spirit may have come, as fond mothers love to think, from a climate where it was in neither too hot nor too cold, the body for left a much colder and more even temperature than that which now surrounds it. The air, then, that seems none too cool to ordinary people is chilling to the delicate organization accustomed heretofore to a warmth of 98.6 deg.

It is of course, out of the question to keep the temperature of a room at this point. The household will in time become acclimated to the atmosphere in which he is henceforth to live. But while this process is going on the baby must be wrapped in soft warm clothing that will to a certain extent make up for what he has just quitted. Without going so far as those who declare that the cuticle of a new born infant is so exquisitely tender that even the slightest touch causes him pain, it must be conceded that his skin is far more sensitive than is ordinarily supposed. It should be submitted to as little changings possible. Covered with the softest flannel and linen, he will become toughened by such gradual means that the experience will be unaccompanied by pain.

Too much cannot be said in condemnation of the practice of "hardening" infants by barbarous methods as bathing them in cold water, subjecting them to rude handling and similar harsh courses. One would affirm that this sort of treatment in the case of a tender little baby was ignorance, were it not that it is pursued by those whose reading and study of the subject should have taught them wisdom.

The baby's eyes should for a long time be carefully shielded from the light. Some nurses will not bathe one in a room where there are kittens and puppies. Even were this the case, the glare of sunshine or gas upon the translucent covering that shields the eyelid should be avoided. Monthly nurses require a good deal of watching in this respect. One of them, who could not herself sleep except in a darkened room, alleging that the least ray of light upon her eyelids was enough to waken her, would lay the slumbering baby she had in charge with his face turned toward the unscreened window of the unscreened gas. To expostulations she returned always the same answer: "Why, the child is asleep! his eyes are shut!" and seemed to consider that sufficient reason why the little one's eyes should be unshaded.

Loud noises often cause young babies acute suffering. Before they are old enough to distinguish between the voices of those about them they will cry out in pain when there is loud talking near them, and start and quiver from head to foot at the slamming of a door or window or the falling of a piece of furniture. The whole delicately balanced system seems to feel the jar. Well authenticated cases are recorded where the death of a nervous baby has resulted from a sudden loud noise, such as the firing of a gun or pistol in the vicinity, or any like violent and sudden report. These extreme instances are mentioned, but the fact of their occurrence should put parents and nurses on their guard to spare young babies the shock that would have been trying to those of less easily unstrung nerves.

In the endeavor to secure quiet for mother and child, visits must be tabooed. No callers except the very few who are immediate members of the family should be admitted to the sick room until at least a week after the little one's arrival. It will do the baby no good to be carried

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

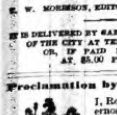
ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1888. PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS, THE NEWSPAPER OF PLAINFIELD AND VICINITY, IS PUBLISHED AT 4:30 O'CLOCK EVERY AFTERNOON, AT NO. 11 SOMERSET STREET,

BY E. W. MORRISON, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

IT IS DELIVERED BY CARRIERS TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY AT TEN CENTS A WEEK, OR, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, AT $5.00 PER YEAR.

Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its produce bounteously; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and offer thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation, State and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor: ROBERT S. GREEN, Jr., Private Secretary.

ROBERT S. GREEN, Jr., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—The Borough Common Council is to meet to-night.

—The cry now being raised by the populace is "The saloons must go!"

—Plainfield and North Plainfield are Republican oases in a Democratic desert called New Jersey.

—The members of the Exempt Fireman's Association are making extensive arrangements for their coming fair.

—The work of hanging the chandeliers and gas fixtures in St. Mary's school was completed yesterday. They are very pretty.

—The members of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society will hold their regular monthly meeting next Monday evening in the T. A. B. Association hall.

—The November meeting of the Archdeaconry of New Brunswick will be held in Plainfield this year in Grace church, of which Archdeacon E. M. Rodman is rector.

—The New York Sun, with all its enterprise, has just discovered that New York State gives Harrison 12,000 plurality. The News-Advertiser on Wednesday gave the figures as from 12,000 to 14,000.

—A. Vanderbeek has just received a number of new first-class pianos and organs, which he offers for sale at prices as low as in New York. He wants home markets patronized, his among the rest, and wants you to call and examine. Store on Park avenue.

—The class in light gymnastics, taught by Mr. W. H. Martin, will meet this evening at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. at eight o'clock. For particulars inquire at the Association rooms. Miss Martin will meet her class for ladies and children to-morrow at the same place at 4 o'clock.

—Roasting ought to give way to dignity. The local Democrats feel so sore that they bite even their title, and magnanimity dictates that that they be not crowed over. No matter what human nature suggests, humanity urges that their defeat be made by their successful opponents as easy as possible.

—It is said the decision given by Judge Scudder, in Middlesex county, to the effect that the Spring election is a general election, will govern this. Local Option Committee in Somerset, and that the Committee will withdraw their application for an election, with a view of making a new one at the proper time.

—The Democrats say that "Gep" is now the happiest man in the country. "Gep" asks why shouldn't he be. "We have the Presidency," he argues—"both Houses of Congress and all the money." His pockets to-day are full of greenbacks, and he expects to have a half-dill before night. Betting pald him.

—"Is eight"—asks The Indianapolis Sentinel—"a lucky number with Harrison? Each of his names has eight letters. The first letter of his surname is the eighth letter of the alphabet. He was nominated on the eighth ballot, as the Republican candidate in '88. If he serve eight years, he will then be the eighth Republican elected to the Presidency."

—"Gep" announces himself still on the war-path and proposes to take many more scalps in the approaching city election. He wants a "dry" Council, and contemplates vengeance on all the saloons that worked against Assemblyman John Ulrich. He says that his name is Marnage, the Eagle Chief of the Pawnee. He is not alone in the intention of annihilating the rum-element.

—The spectacle of Peter Cedar, laborer, of Somerset street, trundling a wheelbarrow occupied by Josephine Jackson, colored, along Race street, North Plainfield, this morning, afforded considerable amusement to spectators. It was the result of an election bet. The woman is very heavy, and Mr. Cedar had hard work. He bet on Cleveland. Had he won, Josephine would have wheeled him around the block.

THE GERMAN CHURCH CHOIR.

Arrangements for Good Music from Fourteen Voices.

A choir has been formed in the German Reformed church, "Ebenezer", North Plainfield, consisting of five girls, five boys and a quartette of two ladies and two gentlemen, all under the leadership of the organist of the church, Mr. Hasselmann. An endeavor will be made to improve the musical portion of the Sunday morning's service, and it is hoped that a considerable increase in attendance will result from this innovation.

This arrangement will take effect Sunday, December 2d.

ST. MARY'S FAIR.

The Opening Night a Splendid Success.

The grand fair for the benefit of St. Mary's parochial school was opened in the hall over the new school building last evening with a fine display of articles both useful and ornamental. The well-decorated hall presented a beautiful appearance, and as one entered he was confronted with a most pleasing sight. The first table to greet the eye is that of the Young Men's Catholic Literary Union, and it is well-stocked with articles of every description, which find a ready sale. There are four other tables—the Emeralds', the school children's, the Sodality and the Rosary Societies'—all of which offer many bargains. Among the valuable prizes are a gold watch, a parlor suit, a drawing-room suit, a crayon portrait of Father Smyth, a marble clock, a barrel of candy and various other articles too numerous to mention. The incl-mency of the weather last evening interfered somewhat with the attendance, but several score were present. The fair will be continued at least ten days, and the committee in charge expect to net a handsome surplus for the benefit of the school.

VERY HAPPY GERMANS.

A Profitable Entertainment at Their Church.

The members and friends of the German Sunday school had a very pleasant evening yesterday, when an entertainment for the benefit of the school was given by the never-tiring ladies of the Christian Work Society. There were good recitations and songs, all doing credit to the performers. The recitations were given by Masters Fred and Alfred Koechle, Master George Hoffman, Miss Lang, Miss Fuk, Miss Huegin, Mrs. Jaeger, Mrs. V. Utzinger and Mr. Hasselmann. The songs were by Miss Seibel, Master Harry Jaeger and Mrs. Neiss, solos; and a trio by Miss Seibel, Mrs. V. Utzinger and Mr. Hasselmann.

After the entertainment refreshments were served in the most agreeable manner by the ladies. A neat sum was cleared, a fine clock was presented to the Sunday school room by a good friend, and all were very happy.

Last Night's Concert.

Some fifty or sixty ventured out to the Madame Fry Concert at the M. E. Church last evening and pleasantly spent an hour and a half. The programme included four vocal quartettes, Rheinberger's "The Mountain Brook", Johannes Resch's "The Rustic Dance", Mohring's beautiful "Legends" and Pursuit's "Three Wishes" by Madame Fry and daughters; a flute solo, "Salut a la Rosete", by Miss Lulu Fry; with an encore, "The Last Rose of Summer"; a vocal solo, "Fleurs de Alps", by Miss Eugenie Fry; DeBenoit's "First Concerto for Violin", by Miss Atta Fry; also encored; a string quartette, Wagner's Classical "Tannhauser", by the Fry family; and readings by Mr. Wm. Westervelt and Mr. Clark Parkinson, examples of his power as an impersonator. Among his impersonations was one of Joseph Jefferson as "Rip Van-Winkle" as he will appear at Music Hall next week Tuesday. Dion Boucicault in "Con, the Shaughraun" was impersonated. Among Mr. Westworth's varied selections were Dr. Holmes's "The Archbishop and Gil Blas", Bret Harte's "Plowing at the Farm", Johnny's composition on "Horses", Johnny's recitation of "Bingen on the Rhine", "Reflections at a Temperance Meeting" and "The Way Some Pastors Preach".

PERSONAL.

Mr. John Rafferty, jr., of Park avenue, is taking a course at Seton Hall College.

Mr. W. F. Trust, of West Front street, has returned from a ten weeks' sojourn in Scranton, Pa.

Mr. Charles B. Davis, of East Second street is on a two weeks' visit to friends in New Haven, Conn.

Mr. W. G. Cadmus, of East Sixth street, is on a two weeks' visit to friends in Williamsburgh, Pa.

Mr. G. W. Williams, of Second street, has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to be out-doors again.

Mrs. Deane Bonham, seventy-seven, died yesterday at her home in Dunellen. The funeral services will be held Saturday.

Mr. Halstead C. Compton, of West Front street, now tells fish stories over the prize reel awarded him by Vanderbeek & Co. for landing the largest bass during the season.

Among the prospective November weddings is that of Miss Helen Francis, daughter of ex-Councilman Orville T. Waring, to Mr. Lewis Gouverner Timpson in Grace church next week Wednesday evening at seven o'clock.

A fully-bearded man whom no one at first recognized took a seat in the Borough Council chamber last evening. The night, the board, however, was only the disguise of Councilman S. St. John McCutchan, who had just ventured out for the first time since his leg was fractured on the base-ball field.

Ex-Councilman Wm. Thompson, of Central avenue, is quoted by The New York Tribune as saying that "My education was Republican, but I voted for Cleveland and Tariff Reform." Mr. Thompson is a coffee broker in New York, and is the partner of Councilman B. O. Bowers, of Franklin place.

Mr. R. F. R. Huntsman, of East Front street, with his father, now visiting him from Providence, donned the canvas coats to-day and went gunning. He has entered a friendly rivalry with Mr. Fred. Sandford, of Washington avenue, North Plainfield, who "gathered in" nine "cotton tails" his first day at shooting this season. Both are enthusiastic sportsmen.

"THE NEWS" BEATS THE WORLD.

Its Returns the Most Nearly Correct of All.

The Democrats concede that California has gone Republican, and it is now clear to all what was clear to us before—that THE NEWS's compilation of electoral votes published on the night of October's Democratic morning was more nearly correct than was that of any other paper.

We then said that Harrison had at least 233 of those votes to Cleveland's 168; and THE NEWS made this positive announcement hours before any other paper in the world put reported, for while THE NEWS stood thus firmly concerning every State every other paper was "doubtful" about at least one.

And now come tidings that West Virginia is also Republican, making the electoral figures 236 for Harrison and 168 for Cleveland. We haven't retracted a single State, but we have gained one other. Here is the original list with California where we were the first to put it and with West Virginia transferred to our credit side:

TOTAL ELECTORAL VOTES	401

HARRISON'S ELECTORAL MAJORITY—77.

An Educational Campaign.

It has been asserted and reiterated that the campaign just closed was one of education; but there seem to be left two or three benighted ones whose early training was of the wrong sort and who have not as yet been thoroughly taught the truth.

Here, for instance, is our unfortunate contemporary, who doesn't appear yet to have heard that Plainfield gave to Harrison a handsomely increased Republican plurality and who wants to know what our Queen City is crowing about. It wasn't Plainfield's fault that the entire State of New Jersey didn't go Republican; her plurality for Harrison last Tuesday was 326, while four years ago she gave Blaine only 186 over Cleveland. It was Plainfield's candidate that won, gentlemen, and that's why this exuberance of joy, these cheers about town, these tremendous cannon-salutes, this monster parade next Monday. Let the procession proceed, gentlemen: the hitherto untutored are being educated and you'll join us before we come to the counter-march.

The Week of Prayer.

The Week of Prayer for young men of all lands is to be observed by the local Y. M. C. A. during the coming week. The pastors of the city have generally signified their intention to preach sermons appropriate to the occasion. At the Association rooms the week will be observed as follows: Sunday, 8 a. m. Prayer and Conference meeting. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evangelistic meetings will be held at the rooms at eight o'clock. These leaders are expected for the week: the Rev. Carter Heim Jones, of Elizabeth, James C. Cadmus, of Brooklyn, W. E. Taylor, of Newark and C. E. Tyler, of New York. All the meetings will be preceded by a Workers' Devotional meeting commencing at 7:30 o'clock. Members of the Association are urged to be present and to bring some young man with them if possible.

"Joe" Jefferson Next Week.

"Rip Van Winkle" will be the attraction next Tuesday evening at Music Hall, and Joseph Jefferson will play it as he has played before and as no other actor can play it. Indeed, it is not too much to say that, as great an actor as he undoubtedly is, there is no play in his repertoire in which the man fits his character and the character fits the man better than in Jefferson's "Rip", which is redolent of Cooper, is fragrant with Hudson's breeze, and which carries the mind back to the good old times when the Dutch settlers were the features of life in the Catskills.

Monday Night's Parade.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Noticing in your valuable paper to-night news of the Republican parade next Monday in honor of Harrison's election, I take the liberty of observing that the route seems to be all over the city with the exception of West Front street, which appears to have been neglected.

SUBSCRIBER.

Plainfield, N. J., Nov. 8th, 1888.

[The route on West Front street is from Somerset street to Washington, and some of the parades are grumbling because they have to "go way out there again". On East Front street the march is only from Park avenue to Peace, so that West Front is more favored than is East.—ED.]

Room for the Gentler Sex.

An ardent Republican—a woman—suggests that an invitation be extended to her sex to take part in the Republican jubilee parade Monday night. There is always room for the women, and their presence in the parade in carriages will be hailed with pleasure.

Gone to Make Chicken-Broth.

The Democratic rooster which the postmaster of Plainfield had planned to stuff and display in honor of Cleveland's election may be said to be "in the soup". Eaters of this devotion—which of late has been so popular—need to look out for pin-feathers.

—It is all very well to talk about mind-reading, but the thing to be encouraged is reading Tulip soap advertisements. This is what the manufacturers say.

DIAMONDS ON ONE'S BOOTS.

Crystallized Carbon Said to Cause the "Shine".

"Why is it"—said a News reporter to a bootblack at the North avenue railroad station, this morning,—"that from such a smoky pasle as blacking you are able to evolve such a brilliant lustre?"

"Dunno, boss,"—was the response.

"Well,"—interjoved a chemist who overheard the inquiry—"we must first observe that with a preparation of bonebiack, which, though entirely devoid of lustre, by the friction of a dry brush we can make shine like the sun. There is not another process like this anywhere in the arts, so far as I know; and I never read anywhere any scientific explanation of the process. I have a theory of my own, however, which I will give you for what it is worth.

"The key to the mystery lies in the fact that a diamond is nothing but a crystalized carbon. The blacking is little more than carbon paste, and the friction of a hair brush, being one of the most efficient methods of generating electricity, has the effect of crystalizing the carbon of the blacking. As soon as this is done the boot is covered with millions of infinitely small diamonds, and, of course, begins to shine, as a mass of diamonds would.

"Of course this is not a perfect explanation of the phenomenon. What part the other ingredients of the blacking play, and especially, why it is that the blacking must be moistened, I cannot tell; perhaps some one else can. But I feel pretty sure that the bootblacks are engaged all day in turning blacking into diamonds."

THE FECUNDITY OF RABBITS.

One Pair Can Breed 2,000,000 a Year.

Now that the gunners of this locality are scouring the country after rabbits there again arises a familiar cry about "wholesale slaughter".

The claim that the creatures are being exterminated loses all force, however, in the statement that a pair of rabbits can in two years produce 2,000,000 others of their kin. This last is an assertion that at first seems incredible, and when a sportsman made it the other day to a party of gentlemen they thought he was jesting. Yet it is said to be as true as Gospel. "A pair of rabbits will usually produce four does and two bucks"—says our informant. "The does breed when two months old, and they have on an average four litters a year. You can calculate from this and you will find that the statement that a pair of rabbits will produce 2,000,000 in two years is not so preposterous as it at first appears."

As the hunters in Plainfield and vicinity have thus far confined their "slaughter" to modest scores it will be observed that there is no present danger of extermination. The law gives them a month and a quarter to braid, and protects them from powder only two. There is no fear, however, of their over-running the section by millions.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

John Ort, age twenty-seven, of New Durham, a freight conductor on the West Shore Railroad was caught between the bumpers of two cars yesterday and crushed to death.

Postmaster James Carran, of Hoboken, became so incensed at his assistant, George White, for voting the Republican ticket Tuesday that he summarily dismissed him. White was an efficient and faithful officer.

The Anarchist of Newark will hold a meeting at the Academy of Music, Saturday night to commemorate the execution of their Chicago brethren. Henry F. Chambers and Adolph Schenck will deliver addresses.

The Supreme Court, in session at Trenton, yesterday affirmed the judgment in the case of James Trainor, of Jersey City, convicted of murder in the second degree for being concerned in the murder of August Lippiegon, an itinerant musician.

Robert Boyd, a Jersey City carpenter, thirty-three years old, has been missing from his home at No. 168 Grand street, since October 17th, and his wife fears that a serious accident or foul play is the cause. He left home to go to Newark to look for a house.

An exhibition of pictures from living figures was given in the Orange Music Hall last evening for the benefit of the Colored Orphan Home. The entire expenses of the entertainment were defrayed by Miss J. W. Shook. The exhibition was under the direction of Prof. C. B. Bartlett, were admirably given and received with great applause.

George H. Bunnell, an ex-policeman, of No. 136 Montgomery street, Jersey City, was before Justice James M. Davis yesterday, charged by Mrs. Bunnell with deserting and violating the law in failing to report a death by contagious disease. Bunnell pleaded guilty and said that he delayed the burial at the request of the family. Judge Davis fined him $25.

The body of Matthew Ash was found yesterday floating in the Passaic river, near Broomhead's mill, in Paterson. It was supposed at first that he had fallen into the water in a state of intoxication, but the fact that the left pocket of his trousers was turned inside out and that there was no watch on his person led to suspicions that there might have been foul play. Inquiry made by Coroner Hardrige showed that deceased left his brother's liquor store at eleven o'clock Wednesday night, after exhibiting considerable money. He was then apparently intoxicated and said that he was going home. When he left the liquor store he had on his coat and waistcoat, but his body was found without either. It is supposed that he was lured into some house and was there robbed and that his body was thrown either into the sewage or into the river. Four dollars in change was all the money found in his person; those who were with him Wednesday night say that he had at least $100 with him. An autopsy showed that the head of deceased was under the water, as there was no water in either his lungs or his stomach. An examination of the head showed a wound on the right side; immediately under this there was a great deal of blood, and death was caused by compression of the brain consequent on a rupture of some blood vessel.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

SURPRISE IN ENGLAND.

Harrison's Election Is Still Doubted There.

THE BETTERS REFUSE TO PAY UP

They Want Official Returns First—Sensational Accounts of Bribery and Corruption—The Scotsman's Comments. Salisbury Receives West's Explanation.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—While there was little interest expressed or felt by the English generally in the American election, there certainly is considerable surprise exhibited over the result.

Cleveland's chances of re-election were universally thought to be so good that the practically unknown Harrison was not looked upon even as a possible winner. Thousands of pounds were staked on Harrison's election, and are waiting for the official returns for a confirmation of the report. The settlement of election bets is also postponed until the returns arrive, placing the Republican victory beyond a doubt. There is a universal uplifting of hands at the supposed prodigious and sickening bribery, the belief in which is founded upon sensational dispatches. The Edinburgh Scotsman says of the election: "There must have been a sort of carnival of corruption and unscrupulousness in which honesty had sore trials." The same paper also says of Mr. Blaine that every gentleman "willing to go through dirt is willing to go through dirt to dignity." The English papers generally look upon the attempt to reform the tariff in the United States as a hopeless task and consider the theory of protection too firmly rooted in the American mind to be disloded during the progress of a single campaign.

Lord Salisbury received by mail dispatches from Lord Sackville further expounding and defending the latter's position.

United Ireland's Opinions.

DUBLIN, Nov. 9.—Mr. William O'Brien's United Ireland expresses indifference at the result of the American election, as it says it "has friends in both camps." The paper is inclined to think that Harrison owes his election to the Sackville affair, as the Irish voters suspected President Cleveland of being friendly with Lord Salisbury. It says: "While it is flattering to the Irish to be asked to turn the scale in such contests, the fact is regretable that it is so humiliating and moaning to a people. The Irish vote exists as a separate and menacing factor in American politics, because the fact that Ireland is without home rule rankles as a sparkhead in the minds of the whole English speaking races. It would be cheap for America to establish home rule in Ireland, even at the cost of a war with Great Britain. We will not comment on the value to England of a settlement of the Irish question."

The Parnell Inquiry.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Yesterday's session of the Parnell commission was entirely consumed in hearing the testimony of witnesses in reference to outrages in Ireland. One Mr. Harrington, M. P., one of Mr. Parnell's counsel, objected to the interpreter prompting the Irish witnesses. President Hannen sustained the interpreter against this practice. The police testified that a large force in Ireland was occupied in protecting boycotted and threatened tenants.

Resurrecting Frederick's Correspondence.

BERLIN, Nov. 9.—In addition to the unconcealed letters of the late Emperor Frederick which were found in the recent search of Dr. Roggenbach's house, the police discovered in a secret drawer of a writing desk two bundles of letters and telegrams which had been secreted by the latter. One is the wife, Queen Victoria, the Prince of Wales, Alexander of Battenburg, Dr. Mackenzie, the Duke of Cumberland, Count Secondorff, Dr. Windthorst and others.

Surprised the World.

BERLIN, Nov. 9.—The North German Gazette says: "Harrison's election has surprised the world. It has put the question of the continuity of American internal politics to a somewhat severe test."

Carl Schurz Coming Home.

HAMBURG, Nov. 9.—Mr. Carl Schurz will sail for America on Sunday, the 11th inst.

An Immense Winner on Harrison.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 9.—William Riley, the Chicago bookmaker, is an immense winner on Harrison, having last every one here to a stand still Tuesday night, first even and then at odd, of $100 to $90. Among the bookmakers alone now doing business at the West Side Park it is estimated that $25,000 has changed hands.

CAMPAIGN CLOSED

The Committees Have Completed Their Tasks.

SUMMARY OF THEIR WORK.

The Outlook for the Fifty-first Congress.

NEWS FROM DOUBTFUL STATES.

California and Nebraska Very Slow with Their Returns Claims That West Virginia Is Republican—How It Looks in Indiana—Estimates on the Standing of the House and Senate—News and Gossip of All Kinds Concerning the Election and Its Results.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—The campaign is over, the election of Gen. Harrison as the twenty third president of the United States is conceded by the Democratic national committee, and the headquarters of the committee, at No. 10 West Twenty-ninth street, are closed. Chairman Brice has authorized the following statement:

"The National Democratic committee to-day concedes the election of Gen. Harrison. When the National Democratic committee adjourned the states of New York, on Tuesday evening at 11 o'clock, with 13,000 majority, the figures of the returns then received fully justified the estimate. The reports from New York and from large counties in Indiana in the interior of the state showed large Democratic gains, and the first reports from Brooklyn inspired the effect that the majority there was 25,000. As the returns were more fully recorded, and the transmission of the committee's bulletins to the west was considerably delayed, there began to be a majority reported in some parts of the west as to the time at which this dispatch was sent."

The Republican national executive committee says: "Returns received from all parts of the country except Virginia and California are sure for the Republican ticket, and that without New York Harrison is elected. They have, of course, no doubt about New York, and say that Harrison will have the biggest vote in the state ever cast for president for twenty-five years or more. The committee will maintain their present headquarters for the balance of the week, and Gov. Gray and Dudley will probably not return home before Sunday.

FIFTY FIRST CONGRESS.

It seems to be clear that the next national house of representatives, viewed politically, will be very close, and a matter of doubt what the final returns may determine. According to The New York World's latest returns the Democrats have a majority of five, according to the following, in which the probable congressmen are mentioned in order, according to the number of their district in each state:

Alabama—Richard H. Clarke, D.; Hilary A. Herbert, D.; William C. Oates, D.; Lewis E. Pyles, D.; Joseph Wheeler, D.; John H. Bankhead, D.; Thomas Jones, D.; Joseph Wheeler, D. Pettus, D.

California—John J. De Haven, R.; Marion Biggs, D.; Joseph McKenna, R.; William W. Morrow, R.; Thomas J. Geary, D.; William Vandever, R.

Colorado—H. Townsend, R. Republican, 1.

Connecticut—Nathan Frank, R.; Orlando B. Bradley, R.; Charles A. Russell, R.; E. W. Seymour, R. Democrats, 2; Republicans, 2.

Delaware—Joseph Wilson, D.

Florida—John M. Davidson, D.; F. S. Hendricks, D.; Charles Dougherty, D.; Robert H. Hackett, Bradley B. Lester, D.; Henry G. Turner, D.; Charles C. Crisp, D.; Thomas W. Grimes, D. Democrats, 10. James H. Blount, D.; Judson C. Clay, D.; Henry R. Carlton, D.; Allen D. Candler, D.; George T. Barnes, D. Democrats, 11.

Illinois—Lewis E. Payson, R.; Frank Lawler, D.; William A. Rodgers, R.; Albert J. Hopkins, R.; Joseph G. Cannon, R.; Samuel W. Allerton, R.; Charles B. Lawrence, R.; William M. Close Enough.

"They are working on a new telescope," observed De Smith, "that will bring the moon within sixty miles of the earth."

"If the moon is really made of old cheese," remarked De Cantur, "that's close enough."—Chicago Tribune.

Midnight Mysteries.

Paterfamilias (sternly)—Seems to me you are becoming quite interested in that Mr. Goodfellow.

Daughter (demurely)—Why, pa, he is homely enough to stop a clock.

"Ah! That, then, may account for the fact that when he is here in the evening you never know what time it is."—Philadelphia Record.

Taught Him Politeness.

The pay train stopped at Willow Bend to pay the railroad hands and to liquidate claims for cattle that had been killed on the track by that section. A gaunt, hungry looking granger stepped up to the smart young man who was dispensing the cash in the rear end of the car.

"Granger—Got my name on your books, mister?

Clerk—How should I know unless you tell me your name?

"Kersey's on are. You have got the edge on me there. Well, my name is Rufus McConkey."

"Yes," said the young man, referring to his books, "Mr. McConkey, I've got you down for a hog."

"Have no down 'for a hog, have you? Well, I'll have you down and he on top of you, makin' it sorter excitin' to you, if you don't revise that expression. Now, say after me: Col. McConkey, school trustee, Fourth district. Where am I, sir, is on this here list as a honey fider creditor of the I. & G. N. railroad, which the amount are ten dollars, the valley of one spotted Berkshire hog; said amount of ten dollars it do me proud to hand to you. Won't you have a cigar, colonel?"

The smart young assistant paymaster repeated after Mr. McConkey word for word, handed Mr. McConkey the $10, and gave him a cigar. Col. McConkey put the hammer of his six shooter back to half cock, and then struck out, muttering: "Some city chaps think they're smart, but they'll find they has to come out on the peraries to learn politeness and grammar."—Texas Siftings.

His Curiosity Aroused.

"Keep away from that," said a restaurant keeper to an Irishman who was standing in front of a newly arrived box of turtles, holding his finger in evident pain. "What are you doing there anyhow?"

"I was investigating."

"Investigating what?"

"I was trying to see which was the head and which was the tail of that baste over there in the corner ov the box."

"What did you want to know for?"

"I've a curiosity to know whether I've been bit or stung."—Merchant Traveler.

A Kentucky Tribute to Genius.

Two Newport men went over to see Booth and Barrett in "Othello" a few nights ago. When the show let out neither of them said anything of consequence until they got down to the ferry, where, while waiting in the boat, one, who never says anything unless he says it, said:

"Pon, hanged if that little nigger didn't hold up his end about as well as any of 'em."

That "little nigger" was Othello.—Newport Journal.

Working Nights.

"What will it cost me, Uncle Rastus, to have my coop whitewashed?"

"I kain't tell yet, sah, till I makes an estimate ob de size and dimensions."

That night the owner was disturbed by a loud noise in the hen coop.

"Hi, there!" he shouted from an upper window. "What are you doing there?"

"It's Sine, Rastus," was the reply, "and he's diggerin' ca de size an' dimensions ob de coop."—Harper's Bazar.

Economy in Safes.

Many firms in New York have safes made of pasteboard, for the purpose of giving a business like and thrifty appearance to an office. They are said to be excellent imitations of a $250 safe, and there is another great advantage. When a burglar blows up a shaky safe the loss is not so heavy. It is awfully provoking to have a $250 safe ruined by burglars.—Norristown Herald.

He Had Courage.

"Yes," said the North Side citizen, as he stepped into a drug store with his friend to replenish his stock of court plaster, "we had our North Side cable cars very useful to have accidents with. Ride on them? Oh, yes. I rode on them. I was a soldier in the war and I never blenched in battle."—Chicago News.

Picked One Pocket Too Many.

Visitor (to convict)—My friend, you appear to be entirely indifferent to your surroundings. Have you no feeling?

Convict—No feeling! If I hadn't been an expert feeler I wouldn't be here today.—New York Sun.

Had Change Enough.

Doctor—What you need is change of climate.

Patient—Change of climate! Why, doctor, we've had all kinds of change—rain, sunshine, heat, cold, calm and storm—right here within a week.—Chicago Globe.

The Woman of It.

"I notice, Miss Saunders," he remarked, "that when two women kiss each other they do it in a most rapturous and fervid manner."

"Yes, Mr. Clarkson, but that is simply the woman of it; there is really nothing exciting about the affair."—New York Sun.

Tough Luck.

What must have been the feelings of a Portland family when, after moving and getting well settled, discovered that they had moved into the wrong house!—Lewiston Journal.

SAVE MONEY

by purchasing the best Piano. Do not decide what one to get until you have investigated the claims of the two Pianos for the Estey Piano. The patent repeating action in the Estey piano renders them superior to all others, but besides this there are many other points of excellence not found in other pianos. The immense factories now being done in this piano are the result of the great power that it possesses, and the demand for them proves that it is appreciated. A SCREW AT EACH END.

NEW TYPE OF FERRY BOAT TO BE INTRODUCED.

It Is to Ply the North River Between New York and Hoboken—Something About the Plan on Which It Is to Be Built.

A new type of ferry boat is to be introduced on the North river between New York and Hoboken. For many years there has been little change in the ferry boats plying on the East and Hudson rivers, though they have grown considerably larger. They are all propelled by paddle wheels and most of them sport the old time walking beam; being sharp at both ends they all move in either direction with equal facility. Cabins are broken by the space given to the paddles so that the passengers in going from one to the other must pass through a narrow, dark gang way.

Screw ferry boats have been tried and successfully in England and at Detroit, but thus far there has been nothing but paddles at New York.

But at last the screw is to be tried on the New York ferries. The Bergen is the name of the first craft built on the new plan. It was lately launched at Newburg and taken down the Hudson to the foot of Thirteenth street, where it is now receiving the machinery. The Bergen will be moved by two screws, one at either end, the one in the advance pulling and the one astern pushing. The narrow way between cabins will not exist, as there will be but one cabin on either side from stem to stern—if such an expression can be applied to these boats, which are reversible.

There are many advantages in the new plan over the old. The cabins, being much larger and more open, may be better ventilated, and in case of accident will admit more readily of escape. Then the new boat will burn less coal. Where the old boats burn ten and a half tons of coal the Bergen will burn six and a half tons. Space used for the old clumsy frame, upright cylinder and the walking beam in the center of the boats now used will all be saved for teams. Indeed the total space saved by the new plan has been estimated at 1,800 square feet.

The screws will be of great advantage in winter in emptying the slips of ice. At present, when the slips are packed with floating ice cakes, it is the custom to hire a tug to create a current with a screw to carry them out. Of course the Bergen can use her own screws for this purpose. This is of more importance than will at first appear. At times of dense fog ferry boats have been prevented from getting into the slips by ice and have drifted for hours in the fog. In stopping and starting the boat the paddles are less effective than the screw. The great engine working the walking beam cannot be easily handled for this purpose, while the two screws at each end of one shaft may readily be reversed by the inverted compound engines. The new boat will work more steadily and without the noise of the paddles, especially disagreeable when they strike ice in winter. The screws being under water can more readily plow through ice fields.

The Bergen is an object of great interest to the many people living in Hoboken, Newark and Orange—composed of a number of small stations, which are continually called the Orange, who do business in New York. Morning and evening the ferries are crowded, the air in the cabins is stifling and ice and fog are looked upon with dread. Any improvement in the ferry facilities will therefore be of great importance to the many people living on the New Jersey side of the Hudson. It is not known when the Bergen will be completed, but it is expected that she will be running by the last of January. She will doubtless work revolutionize the ferry traffic about New York.

Pop-rice Better Than Pop-corn.

It has been discovered that rice is an excellent substitute for pop corn. Rice in the husk is to be treated in a process like pop corn, bursts of it just like the latter, and not only has the flavor of the real pop-corn, but is crisper and much more delicious to the taste. Try it.—Wilmington Star.

Curious Case of Deafness.

A case of deafness as a result of gazing for a few seconds at a powerful electric arc has been reported to the French Academy of Sciences. The symptoms disappeared after about an hour and a half, but returned on a repetition of the experiment.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A BIG SCHOONER.

The Governor Ames, a Two and All Yacht with Four High Masts.

Down in Maine, where formerly, when the American flag was seen at the peak of vessels in every part of the world, they used to build ships, they are building a big schooner. Ships are the stocks at Waldoboro, and will be known as the Governor Ames. Oliver Ames, Fred L. Ames and Oakes A. Ames being among owners.

The Governor Ames will be a mammoth schooner. She is to be 265 feet in length, 50 feet in breadth and 21 feet deep. Her tonnage will be between 18,000 and 19,000 tons. Five masts will be set up, the lower masts, foremast, mainmast, mizzenmast, figurehead and spankermast, each being 115 feet long and 30 inches in diameter. It will require over 400 of the best and straightest trees in the Old Pine Tree state to supply these masts. The outside planking is 6 inches thick and 7½ inches at the gunwale. This is the heaviest planking ever used on a schooner. The ship will have a waterboard 23 feet 3 inches, 17 feet 6 and 9 inches thick, which is number three oak. The building of this ship will be based on the centerboard plan now in vogue. It is estimated that the vessel will cost New York business men $1,000,000. The contract between cutter and receiver is for the completed ship, and the builder will not been held responsible.

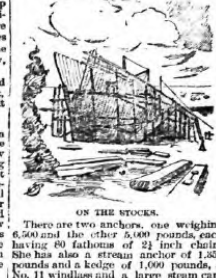
The Ames has five lower masts 24 feet across decks and 23 feet 6 inches. These will be used for coaling and unloading. The upper masts are large, and the main cabin is fitted up with an elegance seldom seen on a vessel, being in oak and ash.



ON THE STOCKS.

There are two anchors, one weighing 6,500 and the other 5,000 pounds, each having 80 fathoms of 2½ inch chain. She has also a stream anchor of 1,550 pounds and a kedge of 1,000 pounds. A No. 11 windlass and a large steam capstan. There will be a hoisting engine of 30 horse power with which to hoist sails.

While the Governor Ames is intended to reach a speed of 12 knots, she is also built for speed. Capt. C. A. Davis, of Somerset Mass. is personally overlooking her construction, and will command her when finished. The managing owner will be J. H. Davis, of Somerset. It is not yet decided what will be her hailing port.

When this schooner is ready for launching there will doubtless be a reawakening of Waldoboro as the spirit of naval architecture which went to sleep when Maine lost her ship building interest years ago. It will seem like old times to the Waldoborians to see a big ship launched, with all the bunting and shouting and rejoicing common on such occasions.

Might Have Been Worse.

Mrs. Hendricks—I read an account in the morning paper of a railroad accurrence. An eagle snatched a baby from its nurse's arms and carried it off.

Mr. Milboy (who is not fond of babies)—It might have been sadder, mum. What ir the eagle had failed to get away with the baby!—The Epoch.

Peculiarity of a Statue.

The recently unveiled statue of Gordon in London is peculiar—if not unique—in that it represents a great soldier without a sword. He is shown carrying a rattan cane under his left arm.—New York Tribune.

A Great Gas Holder.

A structure notable because of its great size, is the gas holder now being built in New York. It may be remarked in this connection that the political campaign had nothing to do with the conception of this work.

The capacity of this holder will be, when completed, 9,250,000, cubic feet. The outlet and inlet pipes will be 30 inches in diameter.

It was necessary to dispense with the customary brick tank. A thousand piles 40 feet long were driven, and an iron tank constructed, practically on the surface. To economize depth the holder is built in three sections which telescope into each other. Thus the holder can rise above the tank curb three times the height of the tank. The tank is filled to the curb with water, 16 inches deep. The frame work in which this vast receptacle will rise and fall looms 150 feet above the street level.

A GREAT GAS HOLDER.

FASHIONS FOR MEN.

WHAT IT IS NOW PROPER FOR THE STERNER SEX TO WEAR.

The Sheet or Sack Dress Coat, the Inverness Cape Overcoat, Socks, Cutaways and Frocks—When, How and Where to Don Them.

There is considerable difference between the estimates recently made by writers of men's fashions for the winter outfit of a well dressed man, and the amount actually expended by many a man who dresses well and moves in good society. Fifteen hundred dollars has been named as an amount requisite to put a man in fine figure for the winter. If we calculate two-thirds as much for the summer it gives us a grand total of $2,500 a year. If this is the figure required to dress a man who moves in good society for one year, that society must necessarily exclude nineteen-twentieths of the intellect of the country. Authors, artists, musicians, indeed all men devoted to the arts and sciences for the purpose of making a living, must necessarily refrain from the inner circle.

The estimate is absurd. There are men at scores in the larger cities of the eastern states who not only cover themselves with clothes purchased at great expense, but pay a considerable bill for taste. The fashion of loud dress finds its extreme at races and athletic games, where men's trousers are of many hues, where their scarfs are plaids a flaming red, their scarf pins big enough to hide any blusher that may have appeared on their faces in a year, and who carry canes calculated to make a policeman shudder. But these men are by no means the only men in America who are gentlemen. They may be the only men who make pretensions to be such, but there are tens of thousands who make no pretentions who could discount them for pure innate refinement and give them ninety-nine points out of a hundred in the game.

Any man who starts from the skin, so to speak, and dresses himself for the winter may do so in accordance with from $500 to $400. And he may get himself into position to move in refined circles lectual people pay very little attention to his clothes. And there was never a truer saying than that "fine clothes don't make a gentleman." It is certainly, however, an advantage to a man to be well dressed, or rather it is a disadvantage not to be well dressed. Not only should he wear good clothes, but he should wear clothes cut in the prevailing style. He should not be too far in the advance nor too far in the rear in adopting new styles.

Be not the first by whom the new are tried,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside

is excellent advice for all men, except such as whose standing is dependent upon being leaders of fashion in dress. There are three different kinds of coats for ordinary wear, either of which may be worn by men: The double breasted frock—once called the Prince Albert—the cutaway and the sack. The sack is best adapted for business. The cutaway may be worn day or evening, the double breasted frock is most suitable for walking. Either of these latter is proper for evening wear, except at parties, or among certain fashionable men of large cities, who wear dress suits invariably after 6 o'clock. The plates herewith are taken from The New York Clothier and Furnisher, which periodical thus more minutely describes these garments:

"The proper business coat for fall and winter weather is a three button sack, such as is shown in the accompanying illustration (No. 1). As will be noticed, it is cut very little different from the similar garment for summer wear, and although the cloth is heavier, little diversity will be noticed.

"As to patterns, anything striking in plaids, checks or stripes will go, and the chosen fabrics are in cheviots and cassimeres. Fancy wide wale diagonals and corkscrews will, of course, be called for by certain trade, but the main object of fashion is to this winter get as far away from somber effects as possible. Almost any color trousers can be worn with almost any color sack coat; some people in fact considering this contrast one desirable to be sought.

"The three button cutaway here shown (No. 2), says an authority, is the most popular coat made at present. It is equally applicable for full dress or to business. There is, however, one point which should be made a note of. The cutaway for business wear should be made of roughcast goods, and as are applicable to a sack suit, and should always have flaps at the waist seams; the half dress cutaway coat is without the flaps. There is little change in the shape of the three button cutaway. The materials in vogue this winter are cheviots, diagonals and Scotch, and wild combinations of coat, vest and trousers may be made

NO. 1. Sad lib." The same Journal says that the double breasted frock coat (No. 3) should be made of silk mixtures or fancy cassimeres. Silk velvet collars are used for frock coats this fall. They button close to the body, and the lapel faces are lined with silk to the bot-

A WASHINGTON HUMORIST.

W. J. Lampton, Otherwise Known as "Judge Waxem."

W. J. Iampton, of The Washington Critic, is one of the brightest young humorists of the United States. His creation, "Judge Waxem," is much better appreciated at the national capital than elsewhere, for there the people see congressmen of all degrees daily, and to them his sayings and doings are often but slight exaggerations of the ways of some of the members they personally know.

Mr. Lampton is now 37 years old, having been born May 27, 1851, near Ironton, O., just across the river from the old Kentucky home of the Lampton family.

When young Lampton arrived at the mature and responsible age of three he agreed with his parents that it would be advisable for the good of the family to go back to Kentucky. The young man's judgment proved good. The elder Lampton went over into Greenup and "Kyarter" counties and went into iron mills, making a small fortune. This was the way Lampton became acquainted with the Waxems, and eastern Kentucky is his way back region.

In 1870 young Lampton went to St. Louis and endeavored to restrain his levity by clerking for a firm of iron brokers. He made a noble effort—spent three months—himself under, and then gave it up. It was during this sojourn in St. Louis that he laid the foundations of a long and happy bachelorhood, deep and wide. At the same time he brought out a fine silky, black beard, which has had a big run ever since. After St. Louis he tried journalism, selling his first dose in the form of a country weekly. This guardian of the people's rights was maintained at Ashland, Boyd county, Ky., for several years by the profits of the iron furnaces owned by his father.

When in the course of time the people's rights had been maintained to Lampton's perfect satisfaction he went to Cincinnati, then to The Stenbenville (O.) Herald, and finally to Louisville, where he wrote humorous letters for The Courier-Journal over the signature of "Mary Jane."

While in Texas he became editor of The Merchant Traveler, of Cincinnati. Lampton found in this place a special and highly enjoyable field of fun. Traveling men make and take more good stories than any other class of men Many a good story that is still going over the road toll by drummers from town to town was written by Lampton, who got the material from "Wayback." There he probably 10,000 drummers in the United States who know Lampton personally. Wherever he goes they keep track of him.

In January, 1886, Lampton went to the national capital, and through The Washington Critic, began to electioneer for "Judge Waxem." It was not long before the "judge" was one of the best known members of congress.

Beside the Waxem articles, which form a staple and regular attraction to The Critic's readers, Mr. Lampton's pen has produced many of the brightest bits of unwritten wit. Imaginary conversations between public people, etc., that have been recently turned out. He is still a single man.

She Doesn't Want to Know Him.

It is claimed this is an excellent portrait of Mrs. Peabody Wetmore, of Rhode Island, who lately refused to be introduced to the Prince of Wales and thereby set the gossips' tongues wagging on both sides of the Atlantic. Mrs. Wetmore was, before her marriage, Miss Edith Kelcham, and the blue blood of the old Knickerbockers of New York flows through her veins. She came into a large fortune upon her marriage with George Peabody Wetmore, and is generally considered a very handsome woman. She has four or five children, is 36 years old and is noted for her devotion to her family.

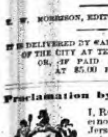
Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its produce bountifully; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and the Heavens are have been spared from the scourge of fever.

I recommend that on that day the people of this state, assembling from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation, State and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

ROBERT S. GREEN, Gov.

By the Governor:

ROBERT S. GREEN, Jr., Private Secretary.

—The young men's meeting will be held as usual at the Y. M. C. A. rooms Monday evening.

—The Westfield Republicans expect to have all Westfield turn out in their parade Monday night.

—Hemp is now used instead of hair in plastering. It is said that lime has less effect on the hemp than on the hair.

—The total potato crop of the United States for 1888 is estimated at 210,646,059 bushels, against 154,000,000 bushels last year.

—There is no use in trying to get on the soft side of a man who drinks hard cider and doesn't use Tully soap, say the manufacturers.

—The ladies of the Park avenue Baptist church will hold a fair in the lecture room to-day and to-morrow in the church parlors towards the middle of December.

—The complaint made against a North Plainfield official for alleged false swearing in the natural ration of a voter was dismissed by Justice Crosley last night.

—The handsome drawing room suit to be disposed of at the Bazaar is on exhibition in the windows of the furniture store of Mr. Garret Q. Packer, corner Park avenue and Second street. The fair is now in progress and will continue until the 17th inst.

—We would call the attention of close buyers to our immense stock of stoves, tinware, ready-made tin goods and our beautiful wood art ware, comprising slop re-ases, work-baskets and wall-pockets, as elsewhere advertised. J. C. Pierson, 42 West Front street.

—Matthew H. VanDerveer, tax collector, was in Bound Brook Thursday, disturbing his equanimity to contribute to the public purse. The rate of tax this year exclusive of the special school tax is $1.10 to the $100, divided as follows: county, .40; township, .20; State school, .30; road, .30.

PERSONAL.

Miss Burt has removed from 141 Broadway to 50 East Sixth street.

Master Cyrus F. Moore, of New street, has returned from a visit to Shrewsbury. One of the recent social events which he attended while there was an evening party given by Miss Ida Wolcott, who is a charming hostess.

The Rev. Dr. Hurlbut, of Plainfield, lectured last evening before the Union county teachers, at the Elizabeth Park M. E. church, on the "Possibilities of Leisure." The regular session of the County Institute was begun this morning at the Cherry street school, concluding with a lecture this evening in St John's church by Nicholas Murray Butler on "Manual Training."

THE DAY OF JUBILEE.

Extensive Preparations for Monday's Big Parade.

The parade in celebration of Gen. Benjamin Harrison's election to the Presidency, Monday night, promises to be accompanied by a great manifestation of enthusiasm. The Committee want as many citizens as can to turn out, and are making every effort to have extensive illuminations at residences along the line of march which will be over Front street to Peace, to Second, to Richmond, to Third, to Watchung, to Sixth, to Park avenue, to Seventh, to Central avenue, to Front, to Close, to Lindsley, to Somerset, to Front, to Washington street, counter-march, and dismiss at headquarters.

The First Ward citizens are to follow the Cyclers, the Second Ward citizens the Tippecanoe Guards, the Third Ward citizens the Lincoln Guards, the Fourth Ward citizens the Fourth Ward Guards, the North Plainfield citizens the U. S. Grant Guards, the Scotch citizens the Langston Guards.

Those of the gentler sex who wish to join in carriages will be welcome.

FREDERIC A. POTTS DEAD.

Carried Away by Cancer After Two Weeks' Illness.

Frederic A. Potts, the head of the coal firm of Frederic A. Potts & Co., and one of the most prominent men in the coal trade in the country, died at 7 o'clock last night at his residence, 31 East Thirty-ninth street, New York city. He had been ill only two weeks with cancer of the stomach. Mr. Potts was born fifty-two years ago in Pottsville, Pa., which town his father, George H. Potts, virtually founded. George H. Potts was one of the first shippers of anthracite coal in the country. He took his son Frederic into the coal business when he was but one and twenty, went to New York and started the house which has since become so important in the trade. Mr. George H. Potts came to New York also, and became President of the National Park Bank. He died last April.

Shortly after the war Mr. Frederic A. Potts went to live in Pittstown, N. J. He was an active Republican. In 1872 he was induced to become the Republican candidate for Congress in the Fourth District of New Jersey, and, not withstanding one of the most popular leaders of the opposite ran as competitor, the ordinary Democratic majority was reduced more than one-half. Two years later, at the solicitation of the party in Hunterdon county, Mr. Potts consented to stand for State Senator. After a canvass of extraordinary activity he was elected by a majority of 226, thus breaking a link in a long chain of Democratic successes, with majorities ranging from 1,400 to 1,900. Senator Potts distinguished himself by relentless hostility to cliques and jobbery of every sort, He carried his business training and methods into public life, and was an ernest advocate of economy and reduction of taxes. The public schools and state educational institutions found in him a champion worthy of the name.

In 1878 Mr. Potts again stood the Republican nomination for Congress in the Fourth District, and so great was his popularity that the ex-State Senator was beaten by only 629. Mr. Potts was for many years Chairman of the Republican State Committee in New Jersey. He finally retired from politics in the 1880, when he re-organized the New Jersey Midland Railroad, which became the New York, Susquehanna and Western. He was elected President, and remained so until his death. He was a Director of the New Jersey Central Railroad prior to 1880. He was Vice President of the National Park Bank in New York, of which his father was President at the time of his decease last Spring. He was an Executive Committeeman of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, a member of the Executive Council to which had charge of the erection of the Statue of Liberty, and he gave a great deal of time to this undertaking. He was a member of the Union League Club Executive Committee and of the Century and Union Clubs, and a Warden in Zion Protestant Episcopal church, New York, where his funeral will be held Monday. In 1857 he married Miss Sarah Brevoort. His wife and five children survive him.

Mr. Potts was a man of fine presence, with a tall face beaming with cordial good nature. He stood fully six feet high, and although he gained flesh in the last years of his life he did not lose his handsome proportions. His hair and the small side-whiskers he wore grew white with years, but the change served only to bring out more clearly the sweet expression of his mouth and the geniality of his whole face. He was invariably dignified in demeanor, but he never forgot to be cordial. He was a warm friend and he had few enemies.

Mr. Potts was at one time a resident of Plainfield, occupying what is now the residence of Dr. Boone, at the corner of West Front and Grove streets. He was a brother of ex-Councilman W. Rockhill Potts, of West Seventh street.

SCHULTHEIS BECOMES INSANE.

Plainfield's Small-Pox Victim Violently Mad.

Joseph Schultheis, a blockcutter, residing at No. 58 Guilden street, New Brunswick, yesterday became violently insane, while on a visit to friends in New York. His brother John Schultheis was telegraphed for, who went down and brought him home. All last night he was very violent, and it required the combined strength of several men to keep him under control and prevent his doing harm to himself or others.

This morning officer Kuhn took him to jail under a commitment from Recorder Housell. Here he became so violent that it was necessary to put him into a strait-jacket, but to do this required the united efforts of three or four men.

As soon as the proper papers can be procured he will be sent to the Insane Asylum at Trenton. Over a year ago Mr. Schultheis had a severe attack of small-pox in Plainfield, and his insanity is believed to be a result of that illness. He had always been an industrious, quiet and unobtrusive citizen previous to this sad affliction.

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

Fire Department Rules Occupy Most of the Time.

The fourth meeting of the present Common Council of North Plainfield was held last evening. Those present were Mayor Cooley and Councilmen Emmons, Hegeman, McGee and Needham.

The reading of minutes was passed.

Petitions for sidewalks on Green Brook road from Somerset street to Union avenue and on Madison avenue and Rock view terrace were referred to the Committee on Streets, as was also that for a cross-walk at the junction of Westervelt avenue and Grove street.

Marion Bell was granted a certificate and John C. Meeker a peddler's license.

A communication from Corporation Counsel Cips, A. Reed and Counsellor Geo. F. Snyder, offering for the sum of $42.42 to indemnify the Borough in the case of Jackson Darling's wench and Tom. Finney on end the suits was filed.

Borough Clerk Arnold reported a balance-on-hand of $8.94.

The following bills were ordered paid: Times Pub. Co., $6; S. St. J. McClellan, $5.92; Joh. Collins, $67.50; Geo. Conover, $10.38; Plainfield Gas Light Co., $4.75; H. H. Barker, $104.85; T. W. Morrison, $83.25.

Mr. McGee for the Committee on Fire, Light and Lamps reported that there had been procured no fresh testimony in the case of Warren Engine Company's not responding to an alarm of fire when Louis Wyckoff's house was burned, and suggested that the Company be relieved of all blame. He said that the Fire Alarm Company had submitted an estimate for the same but that the Borough could purchase a plant of its own much cheaper. He recommended the renewal of the N. Y. and N. J. Glote Gas Light contract.

The report was filed.

A resolution that a warrant for $42.42 be paid to Judge Suydam in the Lynch and Finney cases was adopted.

The Fire Alarm communication was then read. Mr. W. S. Slitzer, the manager, offered to furnish and operate one striking bell, four 4 rest boxes, one engine-house gong and one gong in the driver's house for $30 per month. The communication was filed, Mr. McGee suggesting that the charge was exorbitant.

Mr. Hegeman for the Street Committee reported the granting of all petitions hitherto referred, except one asking for grading on Summit avenue. This was still under consideration. The old Rock road had been permanently repaired at a cost of $100.50. The $300 authorized had been borrowed.

Mr. McGee for the special committee reported lengthy rules for the governing of the Fire Department, which were adopted. They provided that every application for membership in any Company must be made in writing; each election must be reported to Council for approval; each new member must take the oath; he must be a citizen of the United States and bind himself to perform faithfully his duties and obey all regulations; certificates of approval must be given by Council to each member approved; each Company must be governed by its own Rules and By-Laws, which must, however, be approved by Council; all firemen must be under the control of their respective Foreman and his First and Second Assistants, who shall be elected yearly at dates to be set, and whose election must be confirmed by Council; if any person elected be unconfirmed a second el ction shall be held and he shall be ineligible; if membership be reduced one-half or be deemed inefficient Council shall appoint members; the Chief Engineer shall make monthly reports and quarterly appear and report; he must keep a record of examinations, of fires and of all members, officers and terms of office; the Chief Engineer shall have absolute control over everyone present at fires in the Borough; in his absence the control is successively in the hands of First and Second Assistant Chiefs, and on the Foremen of the Companies; the Chief and Assistants shall be empowered to act as Special Marshals, shall protect goods and chattels in danger and shall prevent all but the owner and those working at the fires from entering property; badges shall be furnished and worn; a Fire Patrol, consisting of not over five from each Company, shall aid in keeping order and observance of the law.

After the rules were accepted Council adjourned.

Mrs. Mary Winans, of Soho, had a narrow escape from being outrageously abused by tramps Thursday night. Two burly fellows sprang upon her from a clump of bushes by the roadside near her home and threw her to the ground. She screamed loudly and fought by fought the brutes until her cries were heard by people in a house some distance away, and when they answered the tramps fled. The people who were attracted by Mrs. Winan's cries found her in very unconscious on the road, with a bad cut in her forehead. She was carried to her house, and after reviving told the story of the attack. Her pocket-book, well-filled purse, but managed to save it. Aside from the cut on her forehead and a severely wrenched arm, she suffered greatly yesterday from nervous prostration, but her condition is not serious.

Body-Building.

The class in gymnastics for young men will meet again to-night in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Membership in the Association with an extra fee to the instructor entitles to the privilege of the class. Mr. Martin will be pleased to see as many as are interested in the subject at the rooms to-night at 7:30 o'clock, when he will gladly answer any questions that may be asked regarding the work.

Postmaster James Curren, of Hoboken, is generally denounced for dismissing his assistant, Geo. White, because he voted for Harrison instead of Cleveland. Democrats have signed a petition to the Postmaster-General asking for White's reinstatement. The policy dodgers are also after the forgeries having been informed that the Grand Jury is after them.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

Officer Wolverton, of the Fourth Precinct, Jersey City, has just unearthed a lot of young rascals who have made a rendezvous in a cave in the meadows of Baldwin avenue, between Rock and Newkirk streets, Jersey City Heights. The cave was filled with plunder of all sorts and was comfortably furnished with a stove for cooking and other appliances.

Probably the most expensive ballot ever cast in this neighborhood was that deposited by Walter E. Otis, agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Jullustown, near Bordentown, on Tuesday. Instead of the customary printed slip, he deposited in the ballot box at the village of Columbus a check for $36. He was so full of enthusiasm at the time that he did not mind it, but now he wants the check back. The election officers are tossing him about having to lock the ballots up for a year.

Martinsville Mites.

Pastor Haggerty will preach at Mt. Horeb to-morrow, morning and evening. His annual donation will be made in the church parlors next Thursday evening.

Mr and Mrs James Brokman, S. K. Bolmer and George Sutter attended the W. C. T. U. meeting in Bound Brook Wednesday evening.

A change in the post office as the result of the election is already the talking topic.

John Schwartz's horse ran away Wednesday evening, but turned up all right at Myers's blacksmith shop.

Fred Haggerty, who is a student in the medical department of University College, New York, spent Sunday at his home here.

Postmaster Smith and Gen. Jackson have hauled down the Cleveland and Thurman flag.

Christopher Kline died Friday last, age 67. He was a native of Germany and came here 35 years ago. The funeral took place from his late home on Sunday. Two sons and five daughters survive him.

"Rip Van Winkle" Monday.

One of the most interesting dramatic events of the season will be the appearance of Mr. Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle" at Stillman Music Hall Monday night. In this play Mr. Jefferson shows all his abilities and sounds the gamut of all quiet and natural emotions. He is one of the best comedians of this generation, but his pathos has yet produced, and is probably unsurpassed in England. His face and body were formed to inspire mirth, and this lends additional force to his rendering of pathetic parts.

Mr. Jefferson gives to a fine artistic study of Rip's character, his quarrels with his wife and his affection for his children. His native humor and geniality are fully developed in the early scenes. His awakening of the sleep of twenty years, the gradual return to consciousness of the changes that have taken place in the interim, and the realization of the full possession of the reasoning faculties in the denouement of the drama are delineated with the hands of a master. The generation that can see Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle" has been called blessed in this one prerogative alone.

A Good Beginning.

A series of temperance meetings were begun at Hope chapel last evening. Mr. Benjamin Hand led the meeting, and much interest was manifested by those present, about sixteen young men signing the pledge. The meetings will be continued every Friday evening throughout the Winter, and promise to be a great power for good.

Instant Death 112 Feet Below the Surface—No Possibility of Escape—The Night Shift Had Just Gone Down to Work—Two Came Up Just in Time to Save Themselves—Agony of the Victims' Wives—Difficulty of Reaching the Bodies.

PITTSBURG, Kan., Nov. 10.—The worst disaster in the history of Kansas occurred last evening, and the town of Pittsburg is in tears. One hundred and sixty men were sent into eternity at a moment's notice. It is the most horrible mining disaster that ever happened in the state. The mines are known as Nos. 2 and 3 mines, and are situated on the north side of Pittsburg, a suburb of this city, and just entered the shaft for the night's work when a terrific explosion occurred. The shock was terrible. For miles around the scene of the explosion was heard, and its force shook the earth so that it seemed as if an earthquake had taken place. There were 300 men in the mines at the time. They were 112 feet below the surface. There is no doubt that all are dead.

When the smoke and debris had somewhat cleared away it was seen that the shaft was entirely closed up by the cave in. There was no chance for the imprisoned men and no hope of rescue. For miles around the shock was felt and the report was heard. Two men had just come up in a car, and these are the only ones saved.

The terrible accident caused a panic in the city, and in an hour nearly all the citizens rushed to the scene. Scenes there was heartrending in the extreme. Women and strong men shed tears. Wives of the victims and children of the doomed miners broke forth in loud lamentations and uttered piercing shrieks and cries of "John! John! Where is my husband? I know he is dead," frantic wife-stricken women and children would cry. "Save him!" she exclaimed to her friend. Then the latter dropped from her arms and she fell in a faint to the ground.

A score or more of women were rendered hysterical. Many fainted, but at last something like order was brought about. A few good headed men compelled the women to retire, and the management of the affair took the scene of the dead miners to their homes, and rendered them all the consolation in their power, and tried to calm them in this false hope. The men of Pittsburg said they were for this time able to go to work, which they did with a will. A great deal of the debris and large stones were removed from the entrance to the shaft, where it was thought the unfortunate further headway was impossible. The shaft was blocked completely.

The cave in has practically destroyed it, and the only way to attempt to reach the imprisoned men, or rather to recover their bodies, for no one has the faintest hopes that they are still alive, is to sink a new shaft. The superintendent of the mines was soon at the scene of the disaster, and assisted the miners into gangs all with a will bent upon the one task of reaching the doomed men. It is doubtful whether they can reach the bottom of the shaft today. Hence the whole industry in a town of mourning. There is scarcely a family but has some relative or friend among the imprisoned men, and what with alternating hopes and fears the citizens are in a state of soul frenzy.

Disastrous Collision at Sea.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—The Cunard steamer Nantes came into collision with the German ship Werra, the largest ship of the Lloyd's vessels afloat. Part of the Rugen's crew was saved. The fate of the remainder and the entire crew of the Nantes is as yet unknown.

Mine Disaster in Austria.

VIENNA, Nov. 10.—The coal mines at Salgobarjan are flooded. Twenty persons are known to be drowned and others are missing.

Thirty Men Killed in an Explosion.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—News has been received of an explosion in a coal mine in Aubonnais, Spain, in which thirty men were killed.

Six Men Killed by a Falling House.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—A house on Litchfield street collapsed, killing six persons and injuring many more.

Discussing Inauguration.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Among the Republicans of the District the subject of the arrangements for the next inauguration are already being discussed. It has been the custom to organize a committee of citizens, which appoints sub-committees to take charge of the various details, such as decoration of the city, the inaugural parade, the ball, fireworks, the care of visitors, etc. To meet the expenses of the entire decoration in the contributions of citizens and the sale of ball tickets have been in the past the only sources of revenue. The amount usually collected and disbursed for inauguration expenses by the citizens' committee is between $35,000 and $40,000. No public building being available, it may be necessary to erect a temporary building for the inauguration ball on the White lot. It would cost about $20,000.

Death Set Him Free.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 10.—Frank Turner, of Westfield, who was confined in jail in default of bail for the action of the grand jury on the charge of adultery against him, hanged himself in his cell. He was discovered after he had been dead several hours. He was in the habit of wearing a silk hand kerchief around his neck and through this he tied another handkerchief and fastened the loop to the bars of the window. One handkerchief had broken and he was in a sitting position when found. This is the second suicide at the jail this week.

Yellow Fever Record.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 10.—Dr. Neal Mitchell, president of the board of health, reports twenty-two cases of yellow fever following are the deaths: Lucius Mims (colored), Susan Wright, Mrs. Pascora, Ada Williams, Mary Ober, Charlotte Young (colored), William Bergman and Dr. Ot. All these cases ben are whites. Total cases, 4,436; total deaths, 379.

The "Q" Declares a Dividend.

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy directors held a three hours' session, and declared a dividend of 1 per cent., making 3 per cent. for the year. The dividend is declared from the net earnings of the current quarter, and payable Dec. 15 to stockholders of record Nov. 20.

FOR PRESIDENT, GROVER CLEVELAND

A Chicago Paper Nominates Him for the First Campaign.

CHICAGO, Nov. 10.—The Herald contains an editorial nominating Mr. Cleveland as the standard bearer of the Democrats in 1892. The triumph of the Republicans, The Herald declares, was accidental, and based on misinformation, and its fruits will speedily decay. "Grover Cleveland alone, among modern Democrats in high place," it says, "gave his party an issue. He alone is entitled to lead the host to victory.

"Mr. Cleveland's wards for the masses against the classes. Rejected by the corrupt elements of his own state, he is freed of all merely local restrictions. He stands and will stand for an idea which is to triumph when the Democracy shall triumph, and is to perish only when the Democracy shall perish. He will remain the Democratic leader of reform. He will be the nominee of his party, vastly augmented by that time, in the campaign that is to come. He will be elected. Let the good work begin now."

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

The Republicans Seem to Have a Working Majority—West Virginia Still in Doubt—Latest Election News.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—All the great Democratic journals now concede that the Republicans will have a majority in the fifty-first congress, but all differ as to the size of the majority. The Republican Press makes the following estimate:

The next congress will surely be Republican in both branches. West Virginia and Delaware will elect Republican senators. Riddleberger will be replaced by Senator-elect Faulkner, of Virginia, a Democrat. Then on 4th of March next the senate will stand forty Republicans to thirty-six Democrats, and Vice President Morton will not be absent at the critical moments.

The latest and revised returns of congressmenelect, placing all the doubtful districts in the Democratic ranks still give the Republicans a majority of thirteen in the house, as the annexed table shows. But the Republican majority will probably reduce a much higher figure. There are disputes in Virginia, West Virginia, California and Indiana which can not be decided until the official count is made. Of these the Republicans are sure to gain four or five. Even if they should lose them all their majority would remain as below:

WHAT OF MR. BLAINE?

Everybody Anxious to Know What Part He Is to Play.

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 10.—Many prominent Republicans were interviewed yesterday as to the prospects of James G. Blaine under the Harrison administration.

Governor Morrill said: "Mr. Blaine is the best man in the nation to represent us at the court of St. James."

Hon. M. Hatch: "I doubt whether Mr. Blaine would accept the position of secretary of state. Should Hall or Frye enter the cabinet, the party would undoubtedly tender him the nomination."

Howard Owen: "Mr. Blaine will be offered the secretaryship of state. The party demands it. He will accept."

Anson M. Goldsbury: "I do not believe Blaine cares to go to England on account of the feeling against him in free trade circles. He is the leader of the grand old party, and will be until his last day on earth."

Harrison Grieves for Miller.

UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 10.—At a celebration held in Herkimer last night the following dispatch was read:

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 9.

Hon. Warner Miller:

I am greatly grieved in your defeat. If the interests of the country and those of them greater column inspired by his courage went on to victory. BENJAMIN HARRISON.

Warner Miller spoke for the last an hour on the result of the elections. He congratulated the people on the victory of the protective system, and said the new factory which would benefit the whole country.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—There have thus far been canvassed 222,282 votes, including all but nine precincts in this city, and 1,121 votes of Alameda county. The vote stands as being: Harrison, 112,576; Cleveland, 104,615; Fisk, 3666; Curtis, 1,052. McKenna (Rep.) and Vandiver (Rep.) are elected in the First and Sixth congressional districts; Morrow (Rep.) almost certainly in the Fourth, and Biggs (Dem.) in the Second. The First and Fifth are yet in doubt. The chances seeming in favor of De Haven (Rep.) in the First and Currie (Dem.) in the Fifth.

West Virginia.

WHEELING, Nov. 10.—The vote of this state in the national election is still smothered. All reports so far received show Republican gains in most of them greater than expected—and if continued, Harrison will get the state by 900. The legislature will be close. Still, there is no fair indicate a Republican majority of two in the senate and one in the house, a majority of three on joint ballot. Each side claims the election of its candidate for governor.

Virginia.

RICHMOND, Nov. 10.—Republicans here assert that Harrison has carried this state by 2,000 plurality. Thirty-nine white counties out of forty-seven heard from give a silk hand kerchief around his neck and through this he tied another handkerchief and fastened the loop to the bars of the window. One handkerchief had broken and he was in a sitting position when found. This is the second suicide at the jail this week.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 10.—County returns are very slow arriving here, but there is no reason to doubt the result of the election. The latest returns on presidential electors indicate that Gen. Harrison's plurality will be about 4,000.

Speaker Carlisle Safe.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 10.—The general impression now is that the perforated ballots used in Carlisle's district will not vitiate his election. It is doubtful if his opponent would be elected even if these ballots were thrown out.

The Water Boats Shortened.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 10.—The Old Colony company will make Newport the landing for all the boats this winter instead of Fall River, where the docks are being repaired. The arrangement takes effect Dec. 1.

NEARLY FIFTY ARE DEAD

CATASTROPHE AT ROCHESTER

Sixty Workmen Cut Off from Escape in a Six Story Building—Only Fourteen Known to Have Escaped—List of Killed, Missing and Injured.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 10.—The most disastrous and fatal fire that has happened in this city for many years occurred last evening, and the loss of life is expected to reach between fifty and sixty persons. A general alarm was sounded at 7:20 o'clock, on fire being discovered in the packing room of the Rochester steam gauge and lantern works, an important factory employing a large number of men. So busy has the factory been lately, the men have been working night and day to catch up on orders. The locality where the fire occurred is regarded as somewhat dangerous, and when the report got abroad that the lantern works and the cotton factory in the vicinity were on fire there was intense excitement all over the city. While it was learned when at 9 o'clock the rumor got abroad that a large number of men had been killed.

The building to which the fire was confined was six stories high. About sixty men were working on the three upper floors, and as soon as they found there was fire underneath them they began to leap from the windows, jumping fifty feet or more to the ones that were ready for them on the south side of the building. In these leaps quite a number of men were injured, many of them probably fatally, and probably die. By 9 o'clock the building was entirely destroyed. Five men were taken out dead, sixteen seriously injured, many others severely safe, and the rest unaccounted for, of whom quite a number are unknown by name.

The scenes at the fire were heartrending, and especially among the girls who were present after the fire were three priests in their surplices, who administered spiritual comfort to those who were in the dying condition.

The factory was built on the high bank on the west side of the Genesee river, and was a difficult one for the firemen to get at, owing to one side being entirely closed to them.

Two buildings that were in great danger for a long time were the Rochester cotton factory and Hoyt's shoe factory, but both of these buildings were saved from destruction, the only damage done to them being by smoke and water.

Following is a list of the casualties so far as learned:

Killed: John Gall, foreman; Joseph Danzer, jumped from sixth floor and picked up dead; Henry Snyd r, burned internally; Frank A. Ochs, an; Joseph Webber.

The injured are: Frank Siddons, both legs and arms broken, will probably die; Jacob Dubl, night watchman, burned internally and perforated by shock; John Devlin, left leg broken and injured. And these more or less burned and bruised: Richard Parce, John Grosmaier, William Devlin, Frank Froelin, S. Burkhard, Oscar Knotts, Joseph Burkhard, Charles Dubl, G. Rupert, Stephen Forbes, John Grosminer (second by that name), Con. Holleran, John Ball.

The known to be missing are Thomas Mathias, S. Rodiana, Charles Weber, John Miller, Patrick Cosgrove, Richard Cannon, G. Walters, Charles Smith, Robert Pool, Frank Reinle and Alfred Cannon. These are known by name to be missing, but until the books are examined it will not be possible to tell who were actually at work.

Among those saved was John Piatte, who escaped by sliding from the sixth floor. He says there were thirty persons at workon that floor, and three were saved—Hubert and John Hall and Joseph Smith. Piatte thinks that about ten others escaped with him.

The lantern works, with stock and machinery, is a total loss, estimated at about $225,000. The insurance is $179,000.

The cause of the fire is a mystery. The men went to work after supper, and all seemed to be right then. Soon afterward Jacob Dubl, the watchman, while making his usual rounds, discovered flames making their way up through the floor. He had barely time to give the alarm when he was surrounded by the flames, but he succeeded in making the danger known to the men on the floors above and their fates. Then all were realized their position and made their way from the building, but before they all got out the struggles was a seething mass of fire.

There was not the slightest chance of escape by the usual doors of exit, and the windows were all barred for burglars. The majority of the workmen lost their heads and began to jump, instead of using the fire ladders that were attached to the building. As far as the ruins are sufficiently cool work will be begun of searching for bodies. The streets were crowded with people during the night, looking for relatives, friends and acquaintances. They stood through the heavy rain which fell constantly during the evening, and watched the operations of the firemen. The fire worked its way to some of the adjoining factories, but were too late to be of use in the lantern works.

Promise Fulfilled.

SHARON, Pa., Nov. 10.—Notices were posted yesterday through the iron works of D. J. Kimberly & Co., the largest in the Shenango valley, notifying the laborers employed at those works of an advance of ten cents per day. This is in accordance with an arrangement made by Mr. Kimberly with his men that in the event of Harrison's election he would advance their wages. The Sharon Steel company also gives notice of a similar advance. The iron workers have an ox roast, and the day will be given up to jollification.

Mr. Cleveland Cheerful.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Senator Gorman, of Maryland, who took an active part in the management of the Democratic campaign, visited President Cleveland at the White House and had a long conversation with him. Senator Gorman afterward said that he was surprised at the cheerful manner in which ex-president Cleveland received him. He seemed to think that the people did not fully grasp the situation as to the reduction of the tariff was concerned.

Gen. J. Bowman Sweltzer Dead.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 10.—Gen. J. Bowman Sweltzer died after a brief illness in this city. He was a prominent lawyer and politician during the late war, was favorably known as an attorney of exceptional ability and for many years held the position of prothonotary of the United States court of Pennsylvania. He leaves a widow and three children.

Powderly a Candidate for Re-election.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 10.—The Truth, in reference to the general assembly of Knights of Labor, to convene at Indianapolis June 4, says: "Mr. Powderly will not allow the re-election to general master workman, for which office he is a candidate.

WHAT MADE THE WATER BAD.

Child Murderers Used a Reservoir as a Depository for Corpses.

MONTREAL, Nov. 10.—A special dispatch from St. Ambroise, de Jumo Laroite, a town ten miles below Quebec, says that coupl dinks d ed been made recently concerning the condition of the city reservoir water, and the sixth critic finally resolved to empty the water works to find out the cause. The task was commenced a few days ago, and when completed, to the great astonishment of the engineer and laborers, the remains of eleven children were discovered at the bottom of the reservoir, in an advanced state of decomposition.

The authorities of the locality, who have been apprised of the facts, are at a loss to know who are the mothers or who the authors of the murders, as the inquest has revealed that every one of the children had been born alive and had breathed for several hours at least. The police suspect certain factory girls, but have not as yet sufficient proof to make a clear case against any one of them.

OUR NATIONAL GUARD.

Adjt. Gen. Drum Compliments Its Present Organization and Makes Some Valuable Suggestions—Uniform Arms and Shoes.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—In his annual report Adjt. Gen. Drum makes a statement of the details made of regular army officers to inspect state militia encampments and the reports of these inspecting officers. Upon this subject he says:

"The presence at the several state encampments of members of over sixty regiments, ten battalions and two troops of cavalry, and of cavalry or batteries of artillery, representing from 20 to 35 per cent. of the total strength of those organizations, evidenced unmistakably interest and solicitude concerning the appreciation of the value of a 'well regulated militia' as the main reliance of a free people for maintaining the peace, securing domestic tranquility and uniformed active militia of the several states, which in 1885 aggregated 84,739, reached 93,754 in 1886, increased to 11,887 in the following year, and July 1, 1888, represented an available force of 106,814 men.

"A careful perusal of these reports leads me to make the following remarks and suggestions: The progress of the inspected organizations is excellent, and no better material could be found anywhere to make good soldiers. The officers are generally intelligent and fairly up in tactical knowledge, while a general desire is shown to learn. Drill and discipline, generally fair, in some instances very satisfactory and equipments, except in few instances, good, but not of uniform pattern—a very serious defect with regard to arms. But which it is confidently expected will be remedied in the near future, consequent on the largely increased appropriations by congress. Much attention should be given to company and battalion skirmish drills (obviously impracticable except at camps), as, while movements in masses will of course be always required in active service, beyond the range of musketry, the battles of the future will be fought necessarily in open order formation. For the greater comfort of the men in drill, marching and marching, it would be well if a suitable shoe, of uniform pattern, were made part of the equipment, to be worn only when on military service. Instruction in military signals; should be made a part of the education of the troops. A knowledge of the code and use of the flag is easy of attainment, and recommended for a small squad—say two non-commissioned officers and four privates—in each company would prove of much practical advantage. In small encampments it is suggested that two guards mounting daily (twelve hours each) would afford greater opportunity for instruction in this important duty. With a view to troops in camp securing the largest measure of benefit from the presence thereat of officers of the regular army as instructors, I beg to recommend that for large encampments future details provide one officer to act as assistant adjutant general to the command and one to each regiment."

Crazed by Election Excitement.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 10.—Morrison Renshaw, the manager of the Democratic campaign in the Tenth congressional district, and Charles D. Brockman, a saloon keeper, have gone crazy in consequence of the election excitement. Renshaw was formerly a newspaper reporter, and is a well known man about town. The doctors say he will recover by careful nursing. His wife, who is on a visit to Texas, has been telegraphed to come home. Brockman's case is more serious, and he was sent to the insane asylum.

Confessed and Surrendered.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 10.—Another sensation has been created in business and political circles here. P. H. Bruggine, chairman of the Republican county central committee; and at one time an associate editor of the Cleveland Leader, surrendered himself to the sheriff and confessed that he forged the mayor Rose's name to notes aggregating $6,000 to $7,000. Several banks suffer.

Robbed the Stage Single Handed.

DOWNIEVILLE, Cal., Nov. 10.—The down stage was "held up" by a masked highwayman, and the express box containing bullion and coin amounting to about $2,500, was rifled of its contents. The mail bags were not found.

WHITECHAPEL'S FIEND.

He Has Resumed His Horrible Butchery.

THE WORST HE HAS DONE YET.

This is His Ninth Victim, and She Was More Terribly Mutilated Than the Others—Murdered in Her Room—The Police More Mystified Than Ever.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—The Whitechapel butchery, after a cessation of two months, has resumed his horrible atrocities. His ninth victim has paid the penalty of his insatiable thirst, and still the atrocious fiend is at large.

In a small room in Dorset street, Spitalfields, the center of the silk weaving districts, the body of his latest victim was found yesterday. Unlike the previous atrocities, this awful crime was committed within a building.

The woman is known as Lizzie Fisher among her associates. Like all the others, she was a disreputable character. She was married to a porter named Lawrence, but lived with him only occasionally. Of late she tired of the companionship of her husband she would abandon him and occupy the room in which her mutilated body was found.

The murderer must have had a key to the house in which her room was located. She could enter the house when she pleased and be seen by no one. None of the occupants had any idea as to when she returned home, and no one saw any man with her or entering her room. The possibility of his identification is therefore very remote. The butcher has left the house at any time between 1 and 6 in the morning, and escaped without observation.

The mutilation of this victim was more frightful than in the case of any who preceded her.

The butcher must first have choked his victim into insensibility by a blow on the head. When she was unconscious he brought into requisition the keen knife used by him in his previous atrocities. First he severed the head from the body with the skill and dexterity of a practiced surgeon. Holding the ghastly evidence of his appalling crime before him, he exercised his bloodthirsty mania at will. Skin on the face was cut in the fantastic figures. The forehead was slashed and large patches of skin cut clean off that portion. The nose was entirely washed out of the same horrid fashion. Then he slit the nose, but, not satisfied with this fearful disfigurement, he cut that organ from the face. The ears were also severed.

Having completed the horrible mutilation of the severed head of his victim, he devoted his fiendish attention to the other portions of the body. With a single slash of the knife he laid open the abdomen of the victim. Then, with the skill and delicacy of a surgeon, he disemboweled the unfortunate woman and severed the intestines which lay on the chest. The flesh of the thighs was cut and hacked in fearful shape.

Having completed the horrible sight he took the fearfully mutilated head of his victim and placed it under one of the arms of the woman. The other arm he drew across the body and placed her hand in the pit of her stomach.

The murder is undeniably a continuation of the series which was for a while interrupted by the Mitre square murder in October. In this case the murderer worked leisurely, as is made evident by the fact that he left the house and room by the ordinary door, the street, on the ground floor, and within a few yards of a temporary police station, whence officers issued hourly to patrol the district. The metropolitan police system is not yet clear cited, the bloodhound theory is entirely the one out, since the murder was not discovered until 10 o'clock in the morning, and the streets were filled with people and traffic was going on uninterruptedly. Gen. Sir Charles Warren was early on the scene and told a reporter that all the precautions that could be taken to prevent the work of such murderers. The sole chance remaining to the police, he said, was to catch the murderer in the act. A change of tactics increas d the difficulty. In the open air, where the killing has been done hitherto, the chance of their apprehension was slight. In the case of an indoor murder, such as the last, the hope of arresting the perpetrator was almost barren of fruition.

The latest murder will undoubtedly cause a large number of persons to suspect, but that the monster will be brought to book is a matter of extreme doubt, since he has left no clew of any worked over by the officers investigating the previous cases. The most annoying feature of the case is that the arrest of innocent persons on suspicion will have to be resorted to here. P. H. Bruggine, chairman of and Mr. Winslow that the assassin is a homicidal maniac is confirmed by the latest murder, and the prediction has become general that the murderer will kill again.

The brutality of the mutilation to which the last body was subjected surpassed all the others. In the case of the Egyptian garrisons in Wadi Darfour, repulsed an army of 20,000 followers of the Mahdi, killing 3,000 of them. Subsequently the Mahdists rallied and, re-attacking Wadai, captured the town.

BATHED IN HER BLOOD.

A Young Squaw Sacrificed at an Indian's Drunken Orgie.

RHINELAND, Minn., Nov. 10.—The old Winnebago Indian tribe, which formerly was settled on the Winnebago reservation, near Tremdeau, Wis., was recently removed to Nebraska, but about 200 of them remain in Wisconsin. At the commencement of the hunting season every year it is an old custom to indulge in orgies to propitiate Gitchemanitou and to procure a good season's hunt.

While this was being done recently several old men and squaws, after holding a consultation, determined that a young squaw should be killed to appease the Great Spirit.

Finally when all were intoxicated and feverish with excitement a young buck, with his hunting knife in his hand, jumped into the center of the ring of dancers, and seizing a young girl by the hair dragged her into the center and stabbed her several times in the breast. He then wetted his hands in the blood which flowed from the wounds and smeared it over his face, as did several others.

John Walker, a civilized Indian, told Squire Barclay, of this city, of the murder, and although the young buck escaped, the police in all the surrounding towns have a description of him. The old prejudices against the Indians is again being revived.

A NOVELETTE.

THE SILENT SECRET; OR, ROE REGINALD'S PRAYER FOR SUCCOR.

Helene Rogermere sat upon the silken divan in the palatial residence of her father, the plumber, on Fifth avenue. Beside her, his form lay drooping gracefully over his alabaster brow, sat Roe Reginald Rosecraft, the poet and litterateur. The night was waning. Through the parlor window shone fair Luna, almost three-quarters full, at times coquettishly dodging behind a fleecy cloud as she carried on a nocturnal flirtation with Jupiter. 'Twas a fit hour for the communion of souls. Roe Reginald's attenuated arm encircled the tapering waist of Helene, and her fair head rested upon the shoulder of his trowsiliarre coat. Hoo was unseuy.

"Is her soul restless this night, my love? Has the divine afflatus seized thee in its inexorable grasp? Gase upon yonder effulgent orb, and mellinks in her quiet beauty thou shalt find surcease of sorrow, love."

And still the poet was restless.

"Will no word of mine relieve thee, dearest?" said Helene.

"Hardly," was the reply, in a hoarse, cadaverous tone. "Words will not suffice."

Then Helene leaned over her poet lover and pressed a burning kiss upon his alabaster brow. Looking into the saure depths of his soulful eyes with an arch smile she queried:

"Will kisses suffice, love?"

"Alas! no," was the heart broken reply, "for these are evanescent."

"Shall we walk upon the balcony, dearest?" whispered Helene in mellifluous accents.

"And me, my love, I am too weak," murmured Roe Reginald with a consumptive sigh.

Helene was perplexed.

"Tell me truly," she pleaded, "that thy love for Helene grown cold! Has another usurped my place in thy affections! Art weary of me, love! Speak, I implore you!"

Driven to frenzy by these piteous appeals, Roe Reginald leaned over the fair woman soon to be his bride, and clasped her to his breast in a passionate embrace.

"Would'st thou know," he hissed between his clenched teeth, "what is it that gnaweth at my vitals which no poetry, no kisses, no love, no affection can assuage? Then list and I will tell thee."

Roe Reginald Rosecraft, the poet, placed his thin and trembling lips close to the shell like ear of his inamorata, and in a tremolo paroxysm voice shrieked:

"I'm hungry. Have you got any cold ham in the house?—New York Evening Sun.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

A Truant Who Made a Nice Trap and Got Caught.

He had been in the habit of playing truant from school, and he had been moderately lucky in getting out of the scrape. But he was caught one day and brought before the teacher.

"You're late. Where have you been?"

"I've been sick."

"You don't look sick."

"Well, I'm better, but I've been sick, all the same."

"You go right home and get a note from your mother, or I'll punish you severely."

He went off and was gone about ten minutes. It was pretty quick work, and when he handed the note to the teacher she thought that the handwriting did not look altogether like his mother's. She kept her eyes on him as she opened the note, but he was as bland and as innocent as the best boy in the world. The note read:

Miss ——: Please excuse John this mornin fur bein late, cos he broke his leg. Mrs. ——.

—San Francisco Chronicle.

Easily Understood.

Mr. Keely explaining his motor to committee of experts—You will readily see, gentlemen, that the acoustic relation of this etheric vibrator to the vaporic functions of the generophonic resonator is based on the sympathetic vibratory of the positive and negative vibraphones. It is unnecessary, of course, to explain to gen lemen of your intelligence that the vibratory force of wave plates varies inversely as the square of the propulsatory impact when etherically polarized by the force of the vaporic sympathy. This is perfectly plain to you?

Committee of Experts (feebly)—Y-yes, of course.—Chicago Tribune.

Wanted to See Him Do It.

"I tell you," said a traveling man to a companion on the train, "you'll never catch me playing seven up again with Bill Scriven."

"Why not?"

"Because I saw him turn up a jack off the bottom of the deck."

"Well, I'd rather play with him than Jerry Spader."

"Why?"

"Because when Jerry turns a jack off the bottom you can't see him do it."—Omaha Bee.

The Nail and the Hammer.

A Nail which was About to be Driven into a Board complained to the Hammer:

"Ah! how have you no feelings! Behold how straight and smooth an handsome I am, and then think of the Fate to which you would condemn me!"

"My Friend," replied the Hammer, as he made ready to Drive, "as a Nail lying about loose you will be kicked Aside by all, and in a short time Rust would deprive you of your Strength and Beauty. As a Nail helping to hold this Board to the House you have a Mission and are Depended on."

A Singular Poem—A Satire on the Philosophers.

There is a poem by (Dean) Rev. Henry L. Mansel, who was reader of moral and metaphysical philosophy at Magdalene college, Oxford, 1859, and appointed dean of St. Paul's, London, in 1868. We find it quoted in a book by the late Rev. Edwin Paxton Hood. It is as follows:

With a hum, hum, hum, and a hum, hum, hum,
Hither we mighty Philosophers come!
Professors we,
From over the sea,
From the lands where Professors in plenty be;
And we thrive and flourish, as well we may,
In this land that produced one Kant with a K
And many Units with a U.
Where Hegel tangled, to his profit and fame,
That something and nothing were one and the same;
That absolute difference never a jot being
Twixt having and not having, being and not being.

Where reared by Otter's plastic hands,
The Eleventh Nothing of Nature stands;
And Theology sits on her throne of pride,
An Arithmetic personified.
Sir Isaac Newton and Steeler strain,
To square the circle and prove it plain;
But Locke said Fun is alive again:
He from his bed he rises once more,
With deep intuition and mystic rite,
We worship the Absolute Infinite.
The Night-one—Ego, the Primary Void,
The Subject-Object identified,
The Great Nothing-Something, the Being-Thought,
The reddish the mass of Chaotic Sought.
With schwz, bzzz, bzzz, and a hum, hum, hum,
Hither we great Professors come!

Origin of Visiting Cards.

As in the case of many other instances we owe the invention of cards to the Chinese. So long ago as the period of the Tong dynasty (618-907), visiting cards were known to be in common use in China, and that is also the date of the introduction of the "red silken cords" which figure so conspicuously on the engagement cards of that country. From which we learn that in the present day the Chinese have observed the strictest ceremony with regard to the paying of visits. The cards which they use for this purpose are very large, and usually of a bright red color. When a Chinaman desires to marry, his parents intimate that fact to the prospective mother-in-law, and if she approves runs through the list of her visiting acquaintances, and selects one whom the conditions of fitness make for a young man; and then she calls upon the young woman's parents, armed with the bridegroom's card, on which are inscribed his ancestral name and the right symbols to denote the hour of his birth. If the answer is an acceptance of his suit, the bride's card is sent in return; and should the oracles prophesy good concerning the union, the preliminaries of betrothal are written on two large cards, and these are tied together with the red cords.

"There's Many a Slip."

In one form or other this proverb may be found in the folk-sayings of most European countries, and it was current among the Latins and the Greeks. Lycophron tells this story of its origin: Ancæus, son of Poseidon and Alta, was a king of the Leleges in Samos, who took especial pride in the cultivation of the grape and prided himself upon his numerous vineyards. In his eagerness he unreservedly overtaxed the slaves who worked the soil, and never announced that for his cruelty he would not live to taste the wine from his grapes. The harvest passed safely, and then the wine was pressing. Ancæus, holding in his hand a cup containing the first ruby drops, mocked at the seer's prophecy. But the prophet replied, "Many things happen between the cup and the lip." Just then a cry was raised that a wild boar had broken into the vineyard, and the king, setting down his untasted cup, hurried off to direct the chase, but was himself slain by the boar.

"A Tinker's Dam."

A tinker's dam is a wall of dough raised around a hole in a pan of pastry to prevent the juices to flood with solder. An electroplorum an instrument for generating induction by electricity) is thus formed. A vial, previously heated, is upset upon a circular plate with a turned over edge. A circular dam of dough is raised around the lip, forming a wall to hold the half solder, which holds the handle or to the plate. The material of this dam can be used only once, and, being consequently thrown away as worthless after a very temporary period of uselessness, this device has passed into the proverb "Not worth a tinker's dam," which generally involves the addition of a profane to the last word, and thus converts an otherwise innocent comparison into a phrase of quite another character.

Eliot's Bible.

At the age of 42, John Eliot, pastor of a church in Roxbury, began the study of the Natick Indian dialect, with a view of translating the Bible into that language. He completed the translation in 1658, after a labor of eight years, and the book was printed in 1663. Upwards of 1,600 copies were printed, of which twenty copies were dedicated to King Charles. The latter copies are so rare that one of them was sold in the United States, in 1802, for $1,000, and six years later for $4,150. Among the many points of interest which Eliot's Indian Bible possesses, not the least is the fact that it is the language of a nation no longer in existence, and is almost the only monument of the race; another fact is that it is the first edition of the Bible published in this country.

University of Oxford.

The University of Oxford has twenty-one colleges and six halls. The halls differ from the colleges in not being incorporated and having little or no endowments. There were at one time more than a hundred halls. The colleges are as follows: University, Merton, Balliol, Exeter, Oriel, Queens, New, Lincoln, All Souls', Magdalen, Brasenose, Corpus Christi, Christ's, Trinity, St. John's, Jesus, Wadham, Pembroke, Worcester, Hertford and Keble. The halls are: New Inn, St. Edmund, St. Mary, Chargley's and Turrell's.

Singular Verse.

The author of the following verse was William Dowling:

One of these lads the land that bore us,
Betrayed by the land we fed,
When the brightest have gone before us,
And the dullest are left behind,
Stand, stand to your glasses, steady!
To all we have left, we pledge you;
One cup to the dead already,
Hurrah for the next that dies!

Slave Monopoly.

In 1517 Charles V gave the Marquis de la Brea a monopoly for eight years of importing slaves to the American colonies; but soon while driving in the park or on the road. Certain well known club men have been charged with imitating English grooms in their style of clothes and dress. The most charming effect is a gentleman in an ordinary road wagon gig produce is one of quietness. There should be nothing unusual or startling about his make up. He should avoid every appearance of being "horsey," wearing no clothes which he would not wear walking on Broadway. The proper glove to wear this season is a dressy sewed dogskin in one of the popular tan shades, or a chamois leather gauntlet glove if so desired. A mixtan or fancy overcoat in drab colors and a derby hat may be worn at all times.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Striking Designs and Shapes That Prevail in the Newest Silverware.

There is no end to the silver articles that have for their only ornamentation waving, fluted forms and "swirls," as they are called, appear on silverware, from umbrella handles to coffee pots.

Marine forms prevail largely in table silver, as mixed oyster forks having oxidized handles with designs of sea weed in fine relief and trident prongs in silver gilt.

The grotesque is also much affected in all articles that permit. An ape standing on a twisted tree trunk and supporting a tray is a conspicuous example in bonb n trays. Another favored style in these bonbon trays is shaped like a shallow bowl of oxidized silver, ornamented with set flowers of deep red enamel. All kinds of phantasies are introduced in sugar tongs. One of the most novel is in the form of frogs' legs joined to the fat, round body as a handle.

Syrup jugs with bulging glass bodies in waving flutes have every color form cut in floral designs and are mounted with repousse silver mouths. Another example of cut glass and silver combined is a chirct jug with hands, handle and base of repousse silver.

For tableware, silver and cut glass in combination will always remain one of the prettiest and most expensive styles.

A new and taking ornamentation for silver is found in Persian enamel, which is coming into general use not only on silver gilt frameworks and hair articles, but for mounting portfolios, pocket books, etc.

Jardinieres for the table are low with flaring bordering and repousse ornament. They are intended to be filled with moss and have ferns and fine found like foliage standing in the the center. Other styles have perforated borders finished with an edge of solid raised ornament.

To Clear Jellies and Soups.

The success of jellies depends greatly on their clearness, and to secure this an experienced cook advises the following process, also applicable to clear soups: The jelly or soup is made and the fat all removed, put it into a very clean saucepan, with the whites slightly whipped and the crushed shells of three eggs for an ordinary quantity of soup, jelly, etc. (two whites and shells for the first quart and a half and one for each succeeding quart). Let the ingredients boil up all well to the boil, whisking it all the time to prevent its burning; then pour it through a napkin (for soup) or jelly bag (for jelly) previously wrung out of boiling water. If not sufficiently clear, rinse the napkin or bag and run the soup or jelly through it again. The bag should be absolutely most relatively, as it often is) clean, and should be hot from having boiling water run through it, or from being wrung out of boiling water, and last, but not least, neither soup nor jelly should be handled while being run through the bag, as any pressure will muddy it irretrievably.

Croquettes, Etc., Free from Grease.

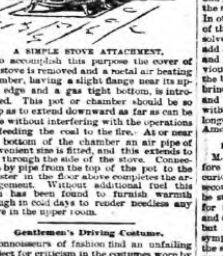
Frying is a mode of cooking unfavorably regarded by those desiring delicate stomachs. Yet fried things are not necessarily greasy. Grease used in cooking boils at a temperature of from 300 to 600 degrees Fahrenheit, consequently the temperature of hot grease is very high and the surface of anything put into it is at once hardened so that the grease does not penetrate into the inside. Oysters, croquettes, potatoes, fish, etc., are first dipped in egg and bread crumbs should be entirely free from grease when fried, for the egg hardens as soon as it touches the hot grease and thus protects them.

Ideas in Picture Framing.

A critic who considers present modes of framing pictures as in bad taste suggests the following as an improvement: The frame should in some sense repeat the idea of the picture in its coloring and in its treatment, especially in color. Where it meets the outer edge of the canvas or panel on which the picture is painted it should be of open or scroll work so that the eye of the spectator may not be be disturbed by contrast—and not limited, as pictures now almost invariably are, by a square, oval or circular flat band or belt of gold.

A New Attachment for Stoves.

To Mr. Henry Mead, of New York, is accredited the invention of a new device for heating two rooms by means of one stove. Being simple and unpretended, it may be easily applied to any stove in use. This new attachment is shown in the accompanying cut. The purpose of the device, as illustrated and described by Scientific American, is to utilize the heat space in stoves, which in ordinary cases is devoid of any use other than furthering the general exterior design and increasing the exterior heating surface.



To accomplish this purpose the cover of the stove is removed and a metal air heating pot having a single or double flange near its upper edge and a gas tight bottom, is introduced. This pot or chamber should be so deep as to extend downward as far as can be done without interfering with the operations of feeding the coal to the fire. At or near the bottom of the chamber an air pipe of convenient size is fitted, this pipe extends to and through the side of the stove. Connection by pipe from the top of the pot to the register in the floor above completes the arrangement. Without additional fuel this plan has been found to furnish warmth enough in cool days to render needless any stove in the upper room.

Gentlemen's Driving Costume.

Connoisseurs of fashion find an unfailing subject for criticism in the costumes worn by many of the foremost of New York society men while driving in the park or on the road. Certain well known club men have been charged with imitating English grooms in their style of clothes and dress. The most charming effect is a gentleman in an ordinary road wagon gig produce is one of quietness. There should be nothing unusual or startling about his make up. He should avoid every appearance of being "horsey," wearing no clothes which he would not wear walking on Broadway. The proper glove to wear this season is a dressy sewed dogskin in one of the popular tan shades, or a chamois leather gauntlet glove if so desired. A mixtan or fancy overcoat in drab colors and a derby hat may be worn at all times.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

THINGS PAST AND PRESENT THAT ARE OF GENERAL INTEREST.

All About the Sluggish, Vegetable Eating, Armor Clad Glyptodon of the Remote Past, Which When Standing Was as Large as a Rhinoceros.

The glyptodon is the remote and gigantic ancestor of the common South American armadillo, and was in its day a relative of the still more gigantic megatherium, which, for its part, was the ancestor of the sloth of our time. In other words, the glyptodon belonged to the order Edentata, or toothless animals. It was not, however, strictly speaking, a toothless animal, as its name indicates, it being derived from glyptos, fluted, and odons, tooth.

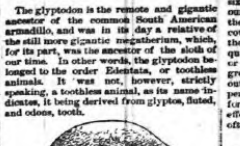


FIG. 1.—THE GLYPTODON.

When standing, explains Scientific American, from which the accompanying cut was taken, the glyptodon was as large as a rhinoceros and much more bulky. The carapace was seven feet in length, eleven and a half feet along the curve of the back the long way, and nine feet across, following the curve. The shell alone was about three and a half feet high, and to this must be added a foot and a half more for the height of the animal when standing on its feet. Different portions of the glyptodon and allied species have been found, but only one carapace is in existence, and that is at the London Museum of Plantes in Paris. This and the scattered bones are all found in deposits of the pleistocene age in the fluviatile beds of the Argentine Republic and in the bone caves of Brazil. It has been suggested that the idea of the hut was derived from such a source as the discarded carapace of some dead glyptodon. It is not difficult, at all to imagine the comfort with which the first savage realized that he had found, ready to his hand, an air tight, rain proof shelter.

Rings an Evidence of Age in Trees.

Mr. R. W Furnas, an agent of the United States forestry department, who has devoted much study to rings in timber as indicating the age of trees, has reached the following conclusion: Concentric or annual rings, which have once existed as good legal evidence, fail, except where climate, soil, temperature, humidity and all other surroundings are regular and well balanced. Otherwise they are more guesswork. The only region, within his knowledge, where either rings or measurements were reliable indications are the secluded, even and regularly tempered valleys of the Sierra Pacific coast. Annual measurements of white elm, catalpa, soft maple, sycamore, pig hickory, cottonwood, chestnut, box elder, locust, coffee tree, burr and white oak, black walnut, osage orange, white pine, red cedar, mulberry and yellow willow nineteen species made in Nebraska Nebraska show that an "annual growth is very irregular, sometimes scarcely perceptible, and again quite large," and this he attributes to the difference in seasons. In time rings increase rings decrease in size, sometimes almost disappearing. Diminished rate in growth after a certain age is a rule.

Description of Meteoric Iron.

Mr. George F. Kunz report to the United States Mineral Statistics is remarkable, says Science, on account of the interesting history given of the meteoric iron which fell in Johnson, Kan., on March 27, 1886. A thorough description of the mass is given. Its upper side is ridged and deeply indented, being in many places almost tin white, while the lower side is fine and covered with large, shallow pittings. The writer concludes, that, after entering our atmosphere, the iron traveled with the greatest velocity, and that it became heated so rapidly as to be torn off, leaving part of the surface bright. The flame thus passed over the sides, and, the indented edge being downward, the flame was not able to burn as much advanced. The flat side not being so much exposed, the iron was not so completely consumed, hence a crust and large but shallow pittings. These conditions would perhaps have been entirely different had the mass been round or thicker, for it evidently moved at its straight as pole without rotating at all. That it is was found in the earth with the flat side down was due perhaps to the fact that it turned after losing its highest velocity.

How to Purify Salt.

An extensive miner, refiner and operator in salt says, in relation to the purification of the manufactured salt and especially in freezing it from sulphates which operate so injuriously against its use for dairy purposes, the end could be obtained in the most perfect and yet the most simple manner by leaching the salt with a saturated solution of itself. In other words, said he, to purify a barrel of this salt all that you have to do is to dissolve a peck of it in cold water to saturation, add a small amount of sodium bicarbonate and pour this into the barrel, having previously provided an exit by boring a hole in the bottom of the container. The saturated brine runs through, dissolves the impurities, and carries them off, but being saturated with chloride of sodium, it, of course, no longer attacks that substance.—Scientific American.

Deafness Caused by Electric Light.

M. D'Arsonval related not long since, before the French Academy of Medicine, a curious experiment. After gazing for a few seconds on an arc light of intense brilliancy, he suddenly became deaf, and remained so for nearly an hour and a half. Surprised and somewhat alarmed in the first instance, but reassured by the disappearance of the symptoms, he repeated the experiment with the same results. When only one eye was exposed to the light, no very marked effect was produced.

Fashionable Lamps.

Among favored and fashionable lamps are all the old standard ones in brass, and they are especially popular for country houses. They are often placed in a corner, surrounded by a few ferns or leaf plants in pots, with a large lamp shade of crimson silk. To show how popular they are there is scarcely a show of presents at a fashionable wedding without one of these lamps towering above the tables, under the popular tan shades, or a chamois leather gauntlet glove if so desired. A mixtan or fancy overcoat in drab colors and a derby hat may be worn at all times.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Rheumatism of the Joints and Other Affections That Come with Cold Weather.

For articular rheumatism, which is the source of much suffering and very stubborn in its nature, Journal of Health recommends mustard poultices as the most efficacious of external applications. But as these are disagreeable to many people the following is also suggested: Oil of cajeput and spirits of camphor, of each one ounce; spirits of ammonia, six drams; alcohol and chl roform, of each one ounce. To use this, first fasten neatly over the inflamed joint flannel of sufficient size to cover the same; after saturating this with the mixture, which must be well shaken, quickly cover with another piece of flannel or oil silk. It should create an agreeable degree of heat, but if it burns too severely the outer covering must at once be removed to permit evaporation, which can be allowed for a moment and then again confined. The effect of the application will indicate how often to renew it.

Chilblains.

Some women suffer terribly from chilblains, which are not only painful but when they appear on the hands cause great disfigurement. They are caused by frosted or congealed blood, which is difficult to disperse; consequently prevention is better than cure, according to The Lady, which recommends the following precautions to be taken immediately upon the beginning of cold and frosty weather:

Wear high warm under bodices, and, above all, let your dress sleeves be warmly lined, and let the sleeves reach to the wrist. A pretty fancy cuff will help greatly, and flannel or swansdown are convenient. They are intended to be filled with moss and have ferns and fine found like foliage standing in the the center. Other styles have perforated borders finished with an edge of solid raised ornament.

Never plunge the hands into very cold or very hot water, and do not expose them to the fire immediately after using the pocket handkerchief. Above all, attend to the wrists and arms, as wrapping the hands only is of little use. Rings, also, should be worn loose enough to prevent chilblains than any outward applications. If chilblains appear in spite of or from neglect of these precautions, let not the slightest attempt be made to "get rid" of them by rubbing. Get the following mixture, and apply night and morning, or whenever the chilblain is troublesome, and remember that friction, combined with a stimulating lotion, helps to disperse the chilblain:

Spirit of rosemary, five parts; spirits of wine, one part. On the first sign of redness or irritation, an excellent plan is to rub briskly with the lotion named, and to cover the part with adhesive plaster; but friction is earnestly advised, or if this is not neglected, until there are symptoms of their appearance, then apply a lotion and friction every two hours.

Broken or ulcerated chilblains should be washed with tincture of myrrh in water; but with care and wearing warm clothing chilblains may be prevented, or at least will not reach beyond the first and easily cured stage.

The Housewife's Complexion.

Shirley Dare says there is not necessary for a woman to have a cook's complexion and crow's feet because she does her own housework, though the heated air of kitchens with American cook stoves is enough to take all life from the skin of the face. The ventilator over the range or stove is the most essential thing in the kitchen, next to the water supply. This effluent current, drawing off the heats and odors, to the improvement of dinner and dinner giver. But as in any other cookery, one must stand over the fire and watch dishes more or less, the skin should be protected by glycerine. This keeps the skin moist, keeps it from deposits of dust, and prevents wrinkles. It is no earthly use to put glycerine in the bath, but it has its place in kitchen heat, over the camp fire, or in broiling sun. Wash the face carefully at night and apply violet glycerine or some line to keep soface innocent of wrinkles till after 25.

Twitching of the Eye.

There are few people who are not at times annoyed by an aggravating twitching of the muscles of the eye. This is a danger signs indicating abuse of the organs or extreme fatigue of the whole system and the remedy is at once the simplest and most difficult to apply—perfect rest. If this fails to restore, an oculist should be consulted.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

Introductions In Polite Society—Who May Be Presented and Who May Not.

The making of introductions is a matter requiring tact and discretion in a hostess. A lady may always introduce a gentleman to a lady, says Mrs. Sherwood, unless the lady does not wish to know him. But to say, a gentleman can never lose "caste" by being presented to a lady. It is wholly immaterial to a gentleman's fashion as to what set of society the lady to whom he is introduced may move in.

With a lady it is otherwise. She may consider that it is derogatory to her dignity to know a person who lives in the same town and yet moves in a different circle.

In England a person of lower rank to one of higher rank is never introduced except that the person of higher rank request it. In this country, where we have no rank, but where the shadowy outlines of caste or fashion are still much fast, the feelings of both people should be consulted; that is to say, if there is time. There are, however, occasions, such as receptions and conventicular ones, premeditated and unpremeditated introductions, but they should never be indiscriminately made if it can be helped. If there is any doubt as to how the introduction should be received, the wishes of the doubtful party should, of course, be consulted. If one person has expressed a desire to make the acquaintance of another, and the other has whispered, "Don't let me know that odious Mrs. Van Stoffenburg," what is a hostess to do? She must put off the odious Mrs. Van Stoffenburg by some of those familiar common places of defense with which every hostess has to arm herself.

It is not usual for a hostess to ascertain a gentleman's wishes whether he would be introduced to a lady or not, although at a ball the poor man is often consulted, as the introduction is generally with a view to "getting a partner" for a young lady.

How to Hold the Knife.

Ladies have frequently an affected way of holding the knife half way down its length, as if it were too big for their little hands, but this is an awkward a way as it is weak, the knife should be grasped freely by the handle only, the forefinger being the only one to touch the blade, and that only along the back of the blade at its root and no further down.

It is stated that tea which is made very strong, or which has drawn too long, becomes acid and has a bad effect upon the mucous membranes of the stomach. There is always a dry sensation after taking a cup of tea that has drawn too long.

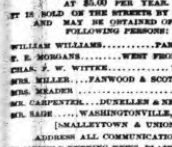
Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its produce bounteously; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all the goodness vouchsafed to us, with prayer that He will bless us and all others that we have instituted. His bounty, and that this State and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor:
ROBERT S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—In the Republican parade at New Brunswick to-night fifty ladies are to ride horseback.

—The Democrats and Republicans are to unite to-night in a general jubilation and illumination.

—It is a wise child that advises its richest relative to use Tulip soap, according to the manufacturers.

—The Woman's Temperance Aid Society will hold a mothers' meeting Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock. All are cordially invited to attend.

—The attendance at St. Mary's fair Saturday evening was larger than on any previous evening. A number of new articles have been added to the tables. The fair will be continued this week.

—Plainfield builders may be interested in knowing that building blocks made of corncobs form the object of a new Italian patent. The cobs are pressed by machinery into forms similar to bricks and held tightly together by wire. They are made water tight by soaking with tar. These moulds are very hard and strong, and weight is less than one-third that of a hollow brick and the bricks can never get damp.

—The Rev. B. Rush Rhees will lead the Young Men's Meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms this evening at 8 o'clock. There will be good singing and short talks; and every man is welcome. Mr. James C. Adams, the young Quaker evangelist, formerly of Indianapolis and now of Brooklyn, will lead the meeting to-morrow night. The evangelistic meetings each night will be preceded by a prayer meeting commencing at 7:30 o'clock —Of course it was not in Plainfield that a lank, lean, raw-boned countryman leaned over the desk of a hotel, and informed the clerk that he'd like "tew her a room for few days" He got a supercilious nod and the clerk continued to talk races and explain to his friends why he had put his salary on the candidate that didn't win. Still in silence and patience the pure yokel waited against the desk. At last the clerk jabbed the register in front of him, flung a pen at him in a way that spattered ink all over his linen duster, and glared at him while he scrawled his name upon the register. "Do you know," the yokel asked when he had finished, "that you put me in mind o' Clay?" "You mean the great orator, Henry—Henry Clay?" "No," came the drawling response, "no, jest the common, ordinary clay—the kind they make slop-jars out of. I'll take my key, please."

—The rough-and-tumble wrangle a few days ago on the corner of Front street and Park avenue recalls to the minds of many a special providence that seems to hover over drunken men and children has something of an explanation," said a well-known and eminent medical man to a reporter, "in the fact of the main cause of the breakage of bones from fall being the resistance of the tendons more often than from the violence of the shock incident to the actual fall. A child or an intoxicated person will rarely endeavor any great effort to recover their balance when they slip or topple over. Hence no special resisting force is exercised, and they sink into a collapsed heap without serious injury. When an adult in possession of his full sound senses undertakes with endless contortions and gyrations to save himself from going down, he draws every muscle and single bone of the wrench is too severe the bone breaks. There is no way of definitely proving it, but it is asserted, and I believe with some degree of truth, that some, at least, of the fractures resulting from falling, especially from a height, happen before the actual shock with the substance one falls on occurs. It's strange, but I guess it is the truth."

TO-NIGHT'S PARADE.

New for a Rousing Republican Demonstration.

The uniformed Republican clubs are expected to report at their Headquarters promptly at 7:30 to-night, to take part in the parade in celebration of Gen. Harrison's election to the Presidency. The parade promises to be accompanied by a great manifestation of enthusiasm. The Committee want as many citizens as can to turn out, and are making every effort to have extensive illuminations at residences along the line of march, which will be over Front street to Peace, to Second, to Richmond, to Third, to Pear, to Ninth, to Park avenue, to Seventh, to Central avenue, to Front, to Grove, to Linden, to Somerset, to Front, to Washington street, counter-march, and dismiss at headquarters.

The First Ward citizens are to follow the Cavalry, the Second Ward citizens the Tippecanoe Guards, the Third Ward citizens the Lincoln Guards, the Fourth Ward citizens the Fourth Ward Guards, the North Plainfield citizens the U. S. Grant Guards, the colored citizens the Langston Guards.

Those of the gentler sex who wish to join in in carriages will be welcomed.

LOCAL OPTION

Another Petition to Be Presented to Judge Scudder.

In accordance with the decision of the Middlesex County Local Option Committee, the temperance people will make a second application Dec. 8th to Judge Scudder for an election under the Local Option high License law passed by the last Legislature. The notices of the application have already been prepared, and have been sent by the Rev. Dr. J. G. Mason, the secretary, to the different newspapers throughout the county. The notice avoids all points to which Mr. Adrain made objection in the last application, and it will be published for three weeks in order to avoid all possible quibble.

The temperance people say that the rum element is afraid to go to a direct issue on an election, and that the liquor dealers have for that reason concentrated all their efforts toward the repeal of the law. They are hopeful that the repealer, which will undoubtedly be introduced in the next Legislature, will not pass the Senate, because of Senator Baker's well known stand in its favor.—New Brunswick Home News.

Different Higginses.

A subscriber sends us a clipping copied from The New York World into "the only daily newspaper in Plainfield"—of its kind—to the effect that since the Republican victory E. S. Higgins & Co., of New York, carpet manufacturers, had reduced their force for the present one-half. The subscriber also incloses a long article from The Brooklyn Eagle, which he calculated as a reply. The latter is another case entirely. It applies to Charles Higgins, soap manufacturer, and explains that employes of his were discharged for neglect of duty, not as alleged because of their politics. But is it strange that the carping Democrat should have cut down his expenses, in view of the way business all over the country has been injured by the attack of the Free Traders on our protected industries? It will take some time before they recover, and meanwhile the employes must suffer.

Women Fought the Flames.

The insurance has just been adjusted on a fire which occurred at the corner of Fourth and New streets last Friday. Bed-clothing hung over a chair near a stove caught fire, and Mrs. Isabella Stellinger, in whose room the clothing was found the room filled with smoke and the bedding burning briskly. With the aid of Miss Whittaker, a boarder, she fought the flames with buckets of water and eventually extinguished it. There was no alarm. The loss was about $150.

PERSONAL.

First Assistant Fire Chief Eugene Laine has been confined to the house several days with illness.

Mr. Thomas Day, of Brooklyn, N. Y., is spending a week at the residence of his par ents on Cottage place.

The Rev. Dr. VanMater preached his last sermon as pastor of the M. E. church in this city yesterday. His successor will be the Rev. Mr. Mitchell, who will occupy the pulpit next Sunday.

Mr. Geo. F. Morris, editor of the religious department of The New York Mail and Express, and formerly of THE NEWS staff, visited his brother, of West Front street, yesterday, and received calls from several old friends.

Mr. George E. Vincent, editor of "Our Youth", and son of Bishop J. H. Vincent has the first of a series of educational articles in last Saturday's New York Mail and Express. He is to occupy a column every Saturday evening.

Bessie Arnold, infant daughter of Edwin C. and Josephine A. Cloyd, age two years and six months, died yesterday at the home of her parents on Door street, North Plainfield. The funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at five o'clock.

The paragraph quoted from Friday's New York Tribune to the effect that ex-Councilman Wm. Thompson, of Central avenue, had voted for "Cleveland and Tariff Reform" proves to refer to another Wm. Thompson, whose residence is Brooklyn. He is in the same business as the Plainfield ex-Councilman, who remains a straight Republican.

FULFILLING OUR PROPHECY.

The Prophecy.

[From THE NEWS of Aug. 1st, 1888.]

KEEP THIS IN MIND.

We are not a prophet nor the son of a prophet; but in our judgment it requires no gift of prophecy to foresee that the result of the present campaign will be the greatest victory which the Republican party has had since 1872, in its battle for Protection of Home Industries against the Democratic attempt to ruin it by Free Trade.

Joseph Jefferson.

Mr. Jefferson, supported by his own comedy company, will appear at Stillman Music Hall to-morrow evening in "Rip Van Winkle". Every condition of good acting is fulfilled in Mr. Jefferson's performances. The conception is distinct as well as true, and the execution is without a flaw. The halo of genius is all about it. In addition to the particulars of hit acting, it is not difficult to see by what subtle effort produced. Perfect in sincerity, true pathos, vivid imagination, a gentleness of temperament—these are the springs of Mr. Jefferson's arts.

Millionaire Meyer, Second, Dead

John C. Meyer, son of the lately-deceased millionaire, Christopher Meyer, of New Brunswick, died of pneumonia yesterday afternoon at Atlantic City, where he had gone for the benefit of his health. He was worth $2,000,000, and was only forty-four years of age. He leaves a wife. His brother, Howard, also a millionaire, was recently sent to the insane asylum.

THE SALOON IN POLITICS.

Democrats Pledged to Kill Local-Option in New Jersey.

In its issue of Oct. 8th, 1888, THE NEWS said:

"The New Jersey State Liquor Dealers' Association held its annual meeting in Jersey City Friday. There were 150 dealers present from all parts of the State. Every county was represented, Cumberland and Salem, where the local-option law was adopted recently, was represented.

"It is said that the members of the Association discussed the political situation and the chances of making the next Legislature Democratic and getting a bill passed repealing the high-license-local-option-law. This was considered possible, and it is understood that the dealers will make strenuous efforts to carry the Legislature. They will be willing, it is said, to contribute $20 each for political purposes. This would make a total of nearly $75,000, which, if used in doubtful districts, it is thought would insure the election of men who would vote to repeal the law.

"The liquor-dealers and brewers of New York State have decided to tax themselves $1,000,000 to re-elect Hill for Governor and defeat the High-License bill.

In this connection it will be interesting to read the following significant paragraph from The Newark News of last week Friday. Nov. 9th:

"No United States Senator will be elected by the New Jersey Legislature, and no Democratic party measures will pass till the entire High-License Local-Option bill is repealed," said De-scendant Assemblyman Joseph Schmehl this morning. 'Six of us Democratic Assemblymen arebound by a mutual understanding not to favor a measure of any kind until the License law has been completely knocked out, and we will stick together until the last.'

"The Assemblyman, as he concluded his sentence, brought a well-developed fist down on the table with such vehemence that a number of persons in the bar-room greeted the demonstration of earnestness with applause of approval and encouragement. They also supplemented the Assemblyman's views by saying that no one should see the United States Senatorship and other things out of the temperate zones before he thoroughly yielding 1st, on every point not tending toward the complete wiping-out of the License law.

"Somebody, a tall, well-formed man, with a bright, ruddy face and a light mustache, had been standing in front of his saloon, 157 Springfield avenue, engaged in an animated discussion of the powers vested in the Democratic Legislature of the State, when a News reporter met him."

The Game Laws.

The State, by an act of the last Legislature, was divided into two game sections. The northern section includes the counties of Bergen, Essex, Union, Hunterdon, Middlesex, Morris, Passaic, Somerset, Sussex, Union and Warren; and the southern those of Atlantic, Burlington, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Gloucester, Mercer, Monmouth, Ocean and Salem. The open season, as to different species and fish, is given below, together with the amount of penalty attached for taking either at any other time:

Northern Section—Hare or rabbit, gray squirrel, quail, ruffled grouse, Nov. 1st to Dec. 15th, penalty $20; woodcock, Sept. 15th to Nov. 30th, $15.

Southern Section—Hare or rabbit, gray squirrel, quail, ruffled grouse, Nov. 15th to Dec. 25th, $20; woodcock, Oct. 17th to 31st and Nov. 15th to Dec. 25th, $20.

It is unlawful, at all times, to trap any kind of game or game bird; to kill any kind of insectivorous bird except the English sparrow; to catch fish in any manner not in accordance with the laws; to catch and have in any device except hook and line; to catch and keep trout less than 6 inches long, black bass less than 7, and to hunt on land without permission of the owner.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The fair in aid of St. Joseph's church, Hoboken, which closed Friday evening, realized $5,000.

Thomas Hart's infant daughter, ace two and a half, fell yesterday afternoon from the second story window of her father's house, No. 328 Bergen avenue, Jersey City, and received injuries from which she died in a few minutes.

A delegation of Jersey City officials yesterday visited the disputed ground where the Central Railroad is filling and laying tracks. The officials stated to the city's claim staked off, and then to proceed against the Company for seising the city's land.

Frederick Waldman, proprietor and manager of the Newark Opera House, died at his residence in that city yesterday morning, of blood-poisoning. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1832, and came to America when 20 years of age. He had been a variety theatre manager since 1874.

Mrs. Katie Hughes, a monomaniac, who lives at Union Hill, near Weehawken, in Hudson county, Hoboken, broke out into a state of wild frenzy yesterday, wrecking everything in her room and setting fire to the place and all in the windows. The neighbors were afraid to interfere. Finally the infuriated lady said she will be sent to the county asylum to-day.

The memorial service in honor of the Anarchist murderers hanged in Chicago which was held in Paterson, Passaic county, Saturday was tame and commonplace. About 150 persons, including women and children, were in the hall. The principal speech was delivered by a man named Henriot, of Brooklyn, and a John Scherry, of Newark. There was no display of any kind, and the audience was apathetic.

A desperate fight took place Saturday at Phillipsburg on a Central Railroad freight train between Brakeman Richard Wolf, and Pat Carroll, the conductor, both of Phillipsburg. Carroll struck Wolf a terrible blow, severely bruising his face being badly bitten. The conductor, it is alleged, was the aggressor. Wolf is a powerful man, and knocked White down, and then bit big pieces out of his cheeks and nose. While in custody on his bonds from the fight Carroll was discharged for life. Fears are entertained that blood-poisoning may set in, a warrant has been issued for the arrest of Carroll, who has fled.

ALLE SAME MELICAN MAN.

New York Chinamen Close a Very Lively Political Campaign.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—Quong Hong Leong is the new Gai Pung of Chinatown. He was elected yesterday to fill the place of the late Gen. Lee Yu Doo, who was laid away last week with all celestial honor. According to the constitution of the municipal government which the Chinese of this city have established among themselves, the council, which represents per grand jury and board of aldermen, must always contain a full membership in order to do any business. Chinatown was thrown into intense excitement over the election. As only Chinamen of good business standing and known honesty were eligible to membership in the council there was great rivalry among the Mongolians.

While American citizens were battling over their election last week the 10,000 Chinamen of this city were engaged similarly. Most and Pell streets were filled from early morn till dawn ave with Celestials who pedaled ballots and fought wordy wars over their candidates. The ballots were deposited during the week. To-day they dropped through a slot into an iron bound chest, which was securely locked. At noon yesterday the chest was opened in the presence of the councilors, and the little bits of brown paper with their hyeroglyphics were counted. After two hours' labor it was decided that Quong Hong Leong was the victor, and that gentleman was summoned to the council room.

He was congratulated by the assemblage and responded with great alacrity in a speech which was more than equal to an aldermanic candidate for boodle honors. After the speech the councilors squatted down on the floor of the chamber after the manner of Turks and Japanese, and fought over municipal matters. Then the long steamed pipes of peace were smoked.

A Fish With Hands.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—A very peculiar looking fish was caught at Revere beach, near the Revere House, by James Collins, one of the employes of the hotel, who experienced some difficulty in landing it. The monster looks more like a skate than anything else. It is 18 inches long, has two long hand shaped fins with five fingers on the under part of its body. From the mouth to the tip of the tail it measures four feet; the width of its mouth is fourteen inches. Upon cutting open the fish a large sea gull was found, which it could not digest, so death soon followed after landing upon the beach.

An Independent Missionary.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—The American board has refused to recognize as one of its missionaries Rev. W. H. Noyes, who was sanctioned by the Berkeley Street church and twenty-five other churches, but will act concerning the hereafter are not considered orthodox by the board. Dr. Noyes will be sent to Japan as an independent missionary, supported by the Berkely Street congregation.

A November Blizzard.

St. Joseph, Mo., Nov. 12.—The city was cut off from the outside world from noon Friday until Saturday evening. The snow, which commencing falling at 6 o'clock Friday morning, in three days was three feet deep, and all the telephone and telegraph wires were down. Trains were delayed from four to six hours on all roads entering the city from the north.

New Ticket Agent.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Mr. D. C. Walsh has been appointed division ticket agent of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad. He has been chief clerk of the passenger department in Philadelphia for some time, and has been connected with the company about twelve years.

A Car Repairer Killed.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—Richard Hyles, a car repairer, was run over and killed, and George Mitchell, a fellow workman, fatally injured, at the stock yards by a Michigan Central engine backing down upon the car under which the men were engaged repairing the trucks. Both leave families.

Confessed Judgment.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—Albert J. Reilly, of this city, dealer in mantels, grates and ornamental bronze goods, confessed judgment in the sum of $40,000. The sheriff immediately levied on the stock. The actual liabilities could not be ascertained. The creditors are mostly New Yorkers.

GOSSIP OF THE CAPITAL.

Who Will Be the President's Private Secretary?

FATE OF AN HISTORIC MANSION.

It Was the Social Center in War Times, and Is Now to be a Club House—An Interesting Relic of 1840—The Coming Aquatic Struggle—West's New Dilemma.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—There is a great deal of gossip in Washington as to the probable successor of Col. Lamont. As the private secretary to the president is the medium through which the executive is reached there is naturally curiosity as to whom the public will have to apply on executive business after March 4 next. It has been stated that Gen. Fifth Auditor Alexander, who is an intimate friend of Gen. Harrison, would be the appointee. This announcement is at best premature, and Col. Alexander, since it was made, has been quoted as saying that he does not aspire to the place

An Arctic Belle's Attire.

In a lecture in Brooklyn, in relation to the Polar regions, William Bradford gave the following description of an Arctic belle:

A red silk handkerchief was tied around her forehead and ribbons fluttered from the knot of hair which stood up on the crown of her head. Her boots were as red as her handkerchief and quite as spotless. Her trousers were of the choicest and most striking sealskin, and were ornamented with needlework and beads. Her jacket was also of sealskin, met with trousers at the hips, where it was fringed with a broad band of eiderdown.—Detroit Free Press.

Surprised All Around.

"By Jove! those Jackson girls will be surprised to see me."

They were.—Life.

He Would Wait.

There was once a popular comedian whose name was Walter Grips, nor Grabali, yet whose dominant weakness was suggestive of both those names. His manager, having had a run of ill luck, gave him the nod one salary day and said: "Look here, Mr.——, the treasury is running low and I shall have to ask you to wait a little for your salary," which was a good fat figure.

"Certainly," was the ready and gracious response. "Certainly; I'll wait till it's paid."—Detroit Free Press.

A Story About Sheridan.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the brilliant orator and dramatist, and audacious manager, was what the beaks of Scotland Yard would call a fine cove. He was dining at a friend's home one evening and found himself much beset by one of his fellow diners of the giddy old maid variety.

"Ah, my dear Mr. Sheridan," she said, "I should so love to take a walk with you this evening."

The wily Sheridan was appalled at the prospect. "Oh dear me," he replied with well feigned regret, "my dear Lady Blank, it is raining cats and dogs. I'm afraid I shall have to forego the pleasure until it clears up."

Fifteen minutes later the alert spinster, who did not trust entirely to Sheridan's sincerity, detected hair in the act of sneaking out by a side door.

"Oh, Mr. Sheridan!" she exclaimed, "has it really cleared up! How delightful!"

"Y-yes—n-no—that is—it has cleared up enough for one, but not enough for two."

Completely Terrorized.

A good story is told of Miss Mary Collette daughter of the popular comedian, Charles Collette, who lately made a successful debut under the Kendals' management. One evening during a starring engagement in a provincial town Mr. Collette had sent his daughter, then a child, to see the performance at the rival show. At supper he inquired how she liked the entertainment.

"Well," said the juvenile critic, "I thought it dull and very vulgar."

"But how were the other spectators pleased?"

"There were so few," replied little Miss Mary, "that they seemed afraid to hiss!"

A Curious Coincidence.

"Just five years ago today," said a farmer at the Central market yesterday, "I was coming in with a load of potatoes and a bag fell off the wagon. When I missed it I went back, but some one had gobbled it."

"I was myself!" gasped a man who stood by, "and this is strange!"

"Why?"

"Just five years ago this morning I found a bag of potatoes near the toll gate!"

"It must have been mine."

"Not a doubt of it."

"And—and"——

"Youll settle with me, of course. I held them four weeks, at a charge of fifty cents per week storage. I advertised them to the amount of $2.33. Thus, as they were beginning spoil, I paid an expressman 50 cents to cart them to an orphan asylum. I'll run into the office and make out your bill."

He ran in, but when he came out the farmer and his team had slid out and were not to be found.—Detroit Free Press.

Little Mary's Secret.

A resident of Peterboro street who has a little 3-year-old daughter named Mary, was sitting in his library after dinner, when the little one climbed on his knee.

"Papa, do oo love me?" she asked very sweetly.

"Yes, pet, very much, indeed," was the hearty response.

"Does oo love me a whole houseful?"

Being assured of this, little Mary became very demonstrative, and her father felt that her face and arms were dripping wet.

"Hallo!" he exclaimed, "been in mischief, Mary?"

"Papa," asked Mary insinuatingly, "can oo keep a secret?"

Her father assured her that he could, whereupon she whispered to him:

"Mamma put her bowl at dinner—me most drown'd; don' oo tell mamma 'cause sometimes she's just hortid."—Detroit Free Press.

It Will Be, Next Year.

"I think that I can at last exclaim with Monte Cristo, 'The world is mine.'"

"And why?"

"I have learned the trick of pitching a curved ball."—Nebraska State Journal.

WURTEMBURG'S ROW.

IT IS ALL ABOUT AN AMERICAN AND HIS TWO FRIENDS.

They Are Said to Possess Too Much Power Over the King to be at All Pleasing to the People of the Country.

The ascendancy of Baron Von Jackson and his friends Woodcock and Hendry over the old king of Wurtemburg is one of the most remarkable cases on record of the capture of a monarch by adventurers. Singularly enough some forty years ago in the neighboring kingdom of Bavaria a similar capture was made of its ruler, but in that case the capturer was a woman. Lola Montez became the favorite of the king of Bavaria; was installed in a beautiful house in Munich; made Countess of Lansfeldt, and for a time was virtual ruler of Bavaria. She was at last driven out by a mob and the king forced to sign an edict of banishment.

Some ten years ago there appeared in Stuttgart a young man, Richard M. Jackson, who went there from Steubenville, O., his birthplace, for the purpose of studying music. His talents in a musical way were deemed sufficient by his friends to warrant their furnishing him with means for the trip. The young man, besides a talent for music, possessed a faculty for making himself liked. He became the life of the American colony at Stuttgart, having a certain drollery about him, a quaint way of saying and doing things, which captivated every one he met.

Not having sufficient means to carry him through his course of study, Jackson appealed to the American consul at Stuttgart for pecuniary assistance. The consul was ignorant of the German language, while Jackson had become familiar with it. This led to his receiving employment as interpreter of American. In a year or two, at the request of the consul, Jackson was made vice consul, which at this time about the exalted position of vice consul was an assistance both pecuniarily and in the matter of social standing among Germans. The consulate of Stuttgart adjoins the open park near the king's palace, and Jackson always traversed the park in going between his office and his boarding place. He also used to walk in the park, where the king frequently promenaded. Jackson always saluted the king, who after a while came to notice the American and made inquiries concerning him. He directed that Jackson should be presented to him, and after a few meetings appointed him "reader to the king," a name for an office which enabled the king to make Jackson an intimate companion.

Another account of Jackson's first introduction to royalty says that Jackson's landlady was in the same building with the chancellerie of the queen. One day she met him on the stairway. Three days later he was appointed bookkeeper in the royal chancellerie, and was often seen in company with the queen. Then he came to an intimacy with the king, whereupon the queen dropped him and exerted all her influence against him. The king appointed him companion and then privy councilor.

The king was at this time over 60 years of age and very retiring. The queen was the Princess Olga of Russia, and is said to be, present year. When young she was considered one of the most beautiful women in Europe. At the time of the appointment above the scene there was an estrangement between the king and queen. They did not appear together in public even on state occasions. Indeed there was a tacit understanding that each was to be independent, without interference on the part of the other. Jackson succeeded in healing this breach. For the first time in twenty years the royal couple dined together, and thenceforward lived amicably. This was of course a blessing or a blessing bestowed by the diplomatic talent of Jackson who was seconded by the tact of both the king and the queen. Jackson received the honorary title of "Von" and soon after was made baron. Then followed the office of privy councilor.

Jackson, meanwhile, found it more profitable to renounce his American citizenship than to retain it. His old friend the consul, remonstrated, but Jackson felt that the king had done so much for him that he owed this much to the monarch. For five years Jackson has held undisputed sway over the king's will. Three years ago he introduced Woodcock. The king took a great fancy to Woodcock. Jackson has been described as a self-inoffensive person while Woodcock is a dangerous person, one who manages to gather in all the shekels which it is said are filched from the king. Hendry, another introduction of Jackson, is quite a boy.

Woodcock's influence seems to have become as great as Jackson's ever was. The king suffers from bronchitis, and an operation was recently recommended by his physicians. Last winter the king was at Florence, where he was taken very ill. The physicians agreed that the operation must be performed or the royal patient would die. Woodcock knew that if the king died he would lose his hold on the stream of wealth passing into his hands; he therefore made a bold effort to get the king to submit to the operation. He packed his trunks, intimating that he was going to America. This was too much for the monarch. he couldn't consent to part with Woodcock; he submitted to the operation, which was successful.

The residence of the trio, Jackson, Woodcock and Hendry—where it is said they live like cats and dogs, fighting for the king's favor—is a magnificent residence facing on the main streets and extending back to the palace garden. Between this house and the palace there is a covered way through which the king can go to and from his favorites. The house is furnished lavishly at the king's expense.

The people of Wurtemburg are too loyal to their king to discuss the matter of his infatuation openly. No paper in the kingdom has mentioned it, but in Bavaria a Munich paper—The Neuesta Nachrichten—has published a full account. The Wurtemburg ministry have protested against the Munich paper, which, though it is in another kingdom, they have a right to do under the constitution of the German empire.

* * *

It is not generally known in what manner the king spends his time with his favorites. It has been reported that some of them are perched upon pinnacles and are bringing up the king's ancestors for him to converse with.

THE COLORED CATHOLICS.

They Will Hold a Convention at Washington in January.

On the 1st of January next there will assemble at Washington, D. C., a convention of colored members of the Roman Catholic church. The announcement of this fact is a surprise to many Protestants, who are not aware that there are sufficient colored Roman Catholics in the United States to constitute a convention. The home missionary work done by the Catholics during the past twenty years, however, among the colored people has been remarkable, and since the civil war the Roman church has been quietly extending its influence among the negroes in the south, and its work has resulted in a large number of converts.

The colored people are not associated with the Roman church in the minds of the people of the United States. They are regarded as Methodists, Baptists or Presbyterians, especially the first. But it is not so elsewhere. The white inhabitants of the Spanish-American states are used to seeing their colored people worshipping at the altar of the Roman church. In the Spanish and Portuguese West Indies the negroes are all Romanists. In the United States before the civil war, except in Baltimore, New Orleans and in St. Augustine and Key West, there were few colored people members of the Roman church, but during the last quarter century many schools, orphan asylums, convents and seminaries have been established. There is at least one church in each of these cities, New York, Richmond, Washington, Kerwick, Petersburg, Lexington, Louisville, Bardstown, St. Louis, Cincinnati and San Antonio. Now for the cleans, Quincy, St. Paul, and in Chicago there are two churches. All these places also have colored Catholic schools. There are two orders of colored nuns in America. Two publications are devoted to the interests of Roman Catholic negroes —The St. Joseph's Advocate of Baltimore and The American Catholic Tribune of Cincinnati. Authority says there are 200,000 active colored members of the Roman church in America. The number who have been members and who have dropped away is supposed to be many more. The membership is growing every day.

There has been one disadvantage, however, in the matter of negroes entering the Roman church; this is that they have been without representation of their own race in the priesthood. This difficulty is now being overcome. A full blooded negro, the Rev. Augustus Tolton, has been ordained priest, and others have begun their studies with a view to taking their places at the altar.

Many of the leading prelates have expressed themselves in favor of the coming convention in Washington. Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Elder and others will attend the colored Congress. Words of cheer, and a large number of Roman Catholic journals have also indorsed the proposed assembly.

Michael Henry Herbert.

Hon. Michael Henry Herbert, who has been appointed British charge d'affaires at Washington, is the first secretary of legation. Mr. Edwardes, the first secretary, was absent when the appointment was made, and it was expected that he would be absent for several weeks. Mr. Herbert is a brother of Lord Pembroke, of England. Mr. Herbert is engaged to Miss Leila Wilson of New York. She is well known, in Washington society, having been the guest of Mrs. Secretary Whitney during the gay season last winter. The wedding is to take place on Nov. 29, and Mr. Herbert is still charge d'affaires after Miss Wilson becomes Mrs. Herbert, an American lady will be at the head of the social household of the British legation in Washington. The bride, who has been familiar with New York and Washington society, is very well fitted to preside over the aristocratic household of the brother of Lord Pembroke.

M. H. HERBERT. [From a sketch.]

Prayers of Domestic Bliss.

DeSmith—Have you seen the beautiful mottoes that Perkins has hung up in his house?

Miss Travis—No; what are they?

DeSmith—Well, the first one—hung up about three months after his marriage—is "God Bless Our Home."

Miss Travis—How charming! and so original, too.

DeSmith—The second, hung up some time later, is "Love Endures All Things."

Miss Travis—So beautiful!

DeSmith—And the third, hung up about a week ago, is "Looking Out for the Rolling Pin."

Miss Travis—Oh shocking!—Burlington Free Press.

SICK OF HER GOODS.

MARLBOROUGH'S DUCHESS TIRED OF HER FURNITURE.

It Is Somewhat Gaudy in Appearance, and Here Are Sketches of Some of the Pieces Made on the Spot by Our New York Artist.

The wife of "his glorious nibs," as he has been irreverently spoken of, the Duke of Marlborough, Marquis of Blandford, Earl of Sunderland, Baron Spencer of Wormleighton, Baron Churchill of Sandridge, Prince of the Mendelheim in Suabia, or whatever you choose to call him, has sent word to the United States to sell off some of her old furniture that has been lying around loose.

CLOCK, CABINET, ETC.

She and her noble husband concluded that it would be too much trouble to move her old furniture across the ocean a few thousand miles. "Bah Jove! ye maw." said his dukeship, "this moving business, ye know, is beastly, aw. Let's sell off." And so the Hammersly collection of furniture and bric-a-brac—somewhat gaudy, to be sure—worth thousands and thousands, was ordered to be sold at auction. The Louis XVI bedstead, with its sky blue back and its gold furnishings (number 12), is not to be sneered at. It looks like a common old piece of second hand furniture. The man who sleeps in it must have cash.

There were 649 pieces and sets of pieces in the whole sale. Crockery till you can't rest. Chairs of all kinds, bookcases, tables, clocks, vases, pottery, jewel boxes, rugs, tapestry, bronzes, everything you can think of. Here is No. 7, a Serres vase nearly five feet high. There is a pair of them and they are the finest ever seen in America. They were originally modeled for Queen Victoria at a cost of $15,000. Paintings on them represent the "Triumphant Return of Neptune" and "Triumphal March of Ceres," Old Roman ruins and landscapes, etc.

Inserted in the base of each vase are four Serres panels decorated by the same artist. But the duchess thought she wouldn't need them at home. She probably thought he could get along without them as long as he had a pair of tin cuspadores with scalloped edges and a brass lock. But these were not all the Serres vases. There were two more pair in the collection which are old, rare and valuable, Nos. 2 and 9. One very pretty suite of furniture, which would attract attention anywhere and is warranted to comfortably fill any second floor hall room, was an antique salon suite of nineteen pieces. The suite contains eight arm chairs and eight side chairs to go with them, a sofa and two bergeres. The style of the chairs is shown in Fig. 1. A man might subsist a long time on this furniture if he took out one piece at a time to his uncle and was careful not to scratch it going down the back stairs. The set is worth $16,000. Among other articles not especially enumerated or provided for, as they say in the tariff schedule, was number 10, a real Japanese bronze pail gold and silver inlaid figure, very expensive. But the duke's taste evidently doesn't run to Japanese pails. He had an old time tin pail with his coat of arms emblazoned on the side with the end of an old nail, and he had carried it for years. It was good enough for him. He didn't want the earth with a shawl strap around it, or his wife didn't, and the Japanese pail had to go.

Perhaps the most unique thing in the whole collection was an old black oak carved chime hall clock, No. 5. This clock stands about fourteen feet high. Every five minutes it chimes, but the duke didn't want it. A Waterbury watch, with steel clamps and a patent hydraulic winding apparatus, was good enough for him.

LOUIS XVI BEDSTEAD.

One of the really nicest things in the collection was No. 4, a Louis XVI sedan chair, Vernis Martin, gilt and carved, arranged with plate glass and shelves in it, so the duchess of a cash-girl can have gone out of date. They are not used any more. Those who have two or three old Louis XVI sedan chairs lying around that they have no use for should adopt this plan. A carpenter could chisel out a two headed hackney coach, can be hired for $1 an hour to do the job. If plate glass is not handy for shelves window glass will do, and if there is no window glass on hand most every one has two or three old shingles lying around in the back yard. Among other articles specified in Lot 11), is not to be sneezed at. The articles mentioned are only a few of the beautiful ornaments in the collection. But the duke and his well known wife decided that they could get along without them.

THE TRUE AND THE FALSE.

Fac-Similes of Parnell's Handwriting Compared with a Forgery.

Mr. Blakely Hall, the well known correspondent of The New York Sun, recently made a very strong point in favor of Mr. Parnell in the celebrated Parnell-Times libel case. By it Mr. Hall claims he has clearly proved that the letters published by The London Times as having been written by Mr. Parnell regarding the Phoenix Park tragedy are forgeries. The two fac-similes herewith reproduced from The Sun speak for themselves. One of the manuscripts was penned by Mr. Parnell in the form of an interview for The Sun. Mr. Hall had been traveling for thirty hours in the interest of the paper he represents, and when he arrived in London at midnight he was completely fagged out. But he had to get an interview from Mr. Parnell that night, and he went to the house of commons, where the Irish statesman was attending a late session. Mr. Parnell and he retired to the smoking room, where they sat down at a table and Mr. Hall endeavored to write out what Mr. Parnell said. But he was palpably tired out, and Mr. Parnell noticed it.

"Give me the pen," he said quietly. "I'll write a dispatch for you while you rest."

This he did. A division in the chamber above was momentarily expected, and his writing was hurried, but was a perfect a specimen of his handwriting as could possibly be obtained. The other letter is a fac-simile of the one The Times claims to have been written by Mr. Parnell.

Vassar Charities.

The will of the late John Guy Vassar, the nephew of the founder of Vassar college at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has lately been opened to probate. Being childless he disposed of his property, as he expressed it, "to do the most good and to forward the cause of humanity." This distributes his large fortune among various churches and institutions, the Vassar Brothers' hospital, the Vassar Brothers' Home for Aged Men and Vassar college coming in for the principal share.

Mathew Vassar was born in Norfolk, England, in 1792, and came to the United States with his parents in 1796. His father engaged in brewing and the son subsequently assisted him, continuing in the business. In 1861 he put $405,000 in the hands of trustees for the founding of Vassar college. He died in 1868, leaving $2,000,000 more for a picture fund, and $50,000 for a fund for aiding poor students of great promise.

lent institutions, gives Vassar Brothers' hospital $200,000; the Vassar Brothers' Home for Aged Men, $25,000, and other property; the Vassar Brothers' Institute, $15,000. To Vassar college he gives $100,000. Besides these bequests he left $100,000 for an institution to be called the "John Guy Vassar orphan asylum." The bequests of the two Vassars will serve to transmit their name in connection with education and charity to generations far in the future.

Brick the Best Building Material.

Insurance men, as a general rule, claim that a building which is largely constructed of iron is not necessarily fireproof. This may be true to a great extent, but it is also true that iron is very readily under weight, and therefore of itself cannot be called fireproof. There is much, however, to be said in favor of iron construction. It prevents fire from spreading, and unless there is a large amount of inflammable material within reach of the flames, there is little danger that fire will make very much headway.

Stone and granite are very little better than iron to withstand the ravages of fire. There is no material that can be used for construction equal to brick. Every brick bears its own weight. Bricks have already passed the fiery ordeal before they are used in buildings, and are tempered. Cast iron is not substantial enough, and wrought iron, which is an improvement, stands fire but little better. For a fire proof building we would construct one of fire brick. Then glass them and give them a good appearance, which is rather ornamental than otherwise.—American Builder.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

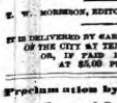
ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1888. PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS, THE NEWSPAPER OF PLAINFIELD AND VICINITY, IS PUBLISHED AT 4:30 O'CLOCK EVERY AFTERNOON, AT NO. 11 SOMERSET STREET,

E. W. MORRISON, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

IT IS DELIVERED BY CARRIERS TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY AT TEN CENTS A WEEK, OR, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, AT $5.00 PER YEAR.

Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its products bounteously; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employments, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation, State and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor:
ROBERT S. GREEN, Jr., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—If you want to make a friend advise your neighbor to use Pilsb soap, say the manufacturers.

—The Dunellen Republican League invite Plainfield Republicans to parade with them in Dunellen this evening.

—The M. E. church Chautauqua Circle held an interesting meeting last evening. Several new members were elected.

—A meeting for prayer will be held at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night and Thursday and Friday evenings at 7:30 o'clock.

—The mechanical drawing class will be held at the Y. M. C. A. rooms this evening immediately at the close of the evangelistic meeting.

—The Plainfield Camera Club is to give it's first exhibition of amateur photographs at No. 12 Park avenue from Nov. 19th to Nov. 24th, inclusive.

—The seats are selling well for "Rip Van Winkle", to be presented at Music Hall tonight. Joseph Jefferson will impersonate that delightful vagabond, "Rip".

—The reason that the residences on Eighth street were so decorated last night to welcome the Republican parade is because the passing through that thoroughfare was a change of programme not announced.

—The Central Railroad of New Jersey is putting the profits from its business for several months past into road improvements instead of calling on the bonds which might have been utilized for that purpose.

—Inasmuch as the certificates of the electoral votes will not be opened in Congress till Wednesday, Feb. 13th, 1889, and the official declaration of election will not be made till then, Mr. Harry Werner will not award his Presidential prize untill that time.

—Sixty years ago the returns of the election were not in until the 5th of December, more than a month after the election, but now the people are not satisfied to await the result as announced in the papers of the next day, but must remain up to hear it before they sleep.

—Mr. James C. Adams, of Brooklyn, the young Quaker evangelist—who will be remembered by all who were so fortunate as to hear him speak at a recent meeting of the Association—will conduct the meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night at 8 o'clock. The singing will be led by a male chorus.

—A horse owned by Mrs. H. S. Phillips, of Park avenue, ran away this afternoon and smashed the top of the buggy to which it was attached. It started at the corner of Fourth and New streets and ran down Fourth street and Park avenue to Front, where it was caught in the midst of other vehicles.

—"Harrison is elected,"—says The Flemington Democrat—"but all the same every tobacco shop in the State continues to sell a two cent cigar at five cents, and we hear that the hotels are asking the same old price for their fluids. We reckon the Democratic howl about free whiskey and tobacco was merely a canard, after all."

—Boys who aspire to the Presidency ought to remember that both President Cleveland and President-elect Harrison worked their own way in life by industry, honesty and constant plodding. Mr. Harrison began house keeping in a one-story building with two rooms and a kitchen, and will now live four years in the White House. The boys who commence in the big house and come down to the one-story house very seldom become Presidents.

EDWARD MILLER'S FUNERAL.

The Murdered Man's Remains Given Christian Burial.

The Rev. Dr. Potter, of South River, conducted funeral services at the Plainfield M. E. church and at Evergreen Cemetery, Saturday, over the remains of Edward L. Miller, the divinity student, who was murdered at Westfield last Spring and who had been unceremoniously buried in the Potter's field. The re-interment was made in the midst of a driving rain.

Members of the Alpha Omega, Philomathean and Calliogian Societies of Pennington Seminary were present. Several of the students made short addresses.

Resolutions of condolence were tendered the bereaved sister of the murdered man, who lives at South River. Chief of Police Keron, of Elizabeth, was present at the grave in Evergreen Cemetery for the purpose, it is said, of having a special interview with some of the students in relation to the habits of the deceased.

WANTS HER HUSBAND'S MONEY.

Insane Dr. Armstrong's Wife Suing for His Income.

Counsellor Willard Pick and Dr. W. W. Varick, as Lunacy Commissioners, have been looking into the mental condition of Dr. Henry A. Armstrong, formerly of Clinton avenue, Evona, now in the Morris Plains Asylum. The inquiry was held in the Hudson county Court House. Dr. Armstrong was a surgeon in the war, and was severely wounded. He received a pension. It is alleged that he became afflicted with an insane desire to kill his wife, in consequence of which he was taken to the asylum. Two men claimed that he was sane and was illegally detained. They had obtained a writ of habeas corpus from Judge Magie, of Elizabeth, and were about securing Armstrong's release when it was shown that perjured testimony was submitted to the Court, the intention being to get Armstrong out and get possession of his pension and other property. The Judge at once withdrew the writ. The supposed sane men went home.

Since then Mrs. Armstrong has not been able to draw the pension and has supported her husband in his retreat from her own means. The proceedings have been made to show Gen. Beach, Commissioner of Pensions, that Armstrong is insane and that his wife is his lawful heir.

Mrs. Armstrong testified that her husband had several times tried to take her life. In 1885 he became so violent that she could not control him and had him taken to the asylum. His Counsellor, aside from the pension, was $200 a year from an English estate.

No defense was offered. Armstrong was declared to have been demented since 1884. The decision will be reported to the Chancellor. If it be confirmed Mrs. Armstrong will be able to draw the pension and the English income.

THE BOY FIRE-BUG FOUND GUILTY.

12-Year Old Willie VanNest Convicted of Arson.

Thirteen-year-old Willie VanNest, the boy incendiary of Plainfield, who was indicted last month for having set fire to the laundry of Henry C. Drake, was convicted of the crime in Court of General Sessions at Elizabeth yesterday. The boy lived with Drake and was a brother of Horace and Luuis VanNest, who with John M. Jackson were convicted of a series of arsons in Plainfield about a year ago. Part of Drake's laundry had been furnished with kerosene. The boy afterward confessed to Chief of Police Carey that he had committed the offense, and a bottle which had contained the kerosene was identified by him Willie afterward denied the confession. Assemblyman Theodore P. Voorhees, of Bridgewater, and Mr. Smith, of Somerville, appeared as counsel for the boy. The defence was a denial and an attempt to show that Willie's confession was made under a hope of reward or release. The case was given to the jury at 2 p. m. and they were out only five minutes, when they returned with a verdict of guilty.

Judge McCormick remanded the youthful fire-bug for sentence and discharged the jurors for the term with the thanks of the Court.

THE Y. M. C. A. BUILDING PROJECT.

The Rev. W. H. Richards Preaches a Timely Sermon.

The following words in regard to the Y. M. C. A. building enterprise are taken from a sermon preached by the Rev. Wm. R. Richards at the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church last Sunday morning:

"Our special prayers are asked to-day and through this week for the work that our churches have undertaken in their behalf through the Y. M. C. A.

"I am sure that we shall not forget to offer such prayer fervently, and I do hope that our prayers for that cause and our faith in it will evidence their reality by our works. When we think only of the young men in our own families, that Christian Association may seem 'a sort of luxury, desirable but by no means indispensible, a good place for them to go in the evening. But why should it be necessary for them to go anywhere? They might be safe and happy at home. And I can understand how any father might hesitate whether it is wise for him to spend much money in fitting up attractively a sort of religious club house for his sons to compete with the attractions of his own home circle. But as Christia s we have no right to think of only the young men in our own families. There are many strangers in our own city, young men who have not, and never will have, some of them, an attractive home; young men in comfortless lodging-houses; so many of them that I feel pretty sure that if Moses—the man who could hardly write out a statute on any subject without inserting a clause about the stranger—were laying down the law for us to-day in this city of many homes and also of many homeless young men, he would say 'Let not another house be built in this town—not one—until you have provided liberally for these young men who are strangers among you, until the foundations are laid and the walls rising above them as fast as your means and opportunities can raise them for your Association Hall'. I do hope, and pray, my friends, that we and all the Christian people of this place will listen to such a command as if it were God's own law to us and to us we shall obey it speedily and ungrudgingly."

Elizabeth's Press Club.

The newspaper men of Elizabeth are about to make a determined effort to re-organize the Press Club, which expired two years ago. This time it will be a city club, pure and simple, instead of a county organization as formerly. Editor McBride will probably be tendered the Presidency of the Club.

Plainfield Leads the State.

There are in New Jersey 301 Baptist churches, valued at $2,600,000. Of these the First Baptist of Plainfield has the largest membership, 839, and ranks second in value, being worth over $80,000 when built and considerably more to-day.

A TRIUMPHAL MARCH.

IN HONOR OF THE ELECTION OF GEN. BEN. HARRISON PRESIDENT.

Great Rejoicing, Beautiful Illuminations, Clubs and Citizens, Old and Young, Democrats with Republicans, in the Grand Parade.

The pent up joy of the populace of this vicinity burst forth last evening in a Grand Bubble Parade in honor of the election of Gen. Benjamin Harrison to the Presidency of the United States by an overwhelming majority.

It was a clear moonlight evening, and the starry lanterns lit up the heavens as it contributing to the general illumination of the occasion. The weather was mild, and though there were a few perhaps of the opposite faith who felt too sore over their defeat to join in the general rejoicing, they were not noticeable.

The streets were filled with people, which was of course natural to expect under the circumstances. Every house along the line of march seemed to be illuminated and the illuminations were magnificent. Such a display from the humblest cottage to the most stately mansion was probably never surpassed here before.

Most interesting of all, however, was the great enthusiasm manifested by the people generally for him whom we so delight to honor.

The paraders comprised the uniformed clubs with torches as published yesterday and citizens on foot, in stages and carriages.

The editor of THE NEWS had been drawn into a wager with the leader of the Democratic parade, Major Flower, and Col. Julian Scott, another prominent Democrat. They lost. The terms of this wager were that the losers were to march in the parade of the victors. We understood that had we lost, the postmaster and his cronies intended to make our task as humiliating as possible, thus misrepresenting the more manly Democrats, of whom, let all rejoice, there is a majority in the party. As we won, however, we concluded to spare our vanquished friends all possible humiliation over their galling defeat. To this end we invited that sturdy veteran Republican, Uncle Daniel Roberts, to furnish a four-horse landau for our vanquished friends. He not only insisted on contributing the landau and horses, but himself held the reins. We also had in the landau, as our guests, Mayor Male, of Plainfield, now over 91 years of age, and Mayor Cooley, of North Plainfield, Chief Consul of the New Jersey Division of the League of American Wheelmen. We also had a guard of honor, led by the editor himself afoot, for those in the landau. It consisted of two Democrats and two torch bearers. The banner bearers were furnished by the U. S. Grant Guards, and the banners we had made for the occasion. One was a banner inscribed with the words of Mr. Flower, as first below, and the other, our reply, side by side:

We Are All AMERICANS Nevertheless.	Blest Be The Tie That Binds Us.

The torch bearers were furnished by the Tippecanoe Club, which "Gep: Old 49'er", who voted for Grandfather Harrison in 1840, claims was the first club organized in Plainfield this campaign, and that he organized it. In acknowledgment of the honor the club was given the right of the line, with Mr. Frazee (Gep) in the lead.

As an additional guard of honor there were two bicyclers on bicycles in unique uniforms, made up of blue helmets with white plumes, and coats formed of the stars and stripes. Belts of sleigh bells attached to the handles and the pedals of the bicycles made a merry jingle, while City Treasurer Titsworth in the landau, brightened up the company with red fire. Certainly there could be nothing in such an arrangement in any degree humiliating to our vanquished adversaries and the whole was intended to show the spirit which characterizes Republicans and we hope the better element of the Democracy. We had intended going further and have a detachment from a Democratic uniformed club, to form part of the guard of honor and march side by side with the Republicans. Some were willing, but others were not, and so it was thought best to omit this part of the well-intended programme. The Langston Guards of colored men were also to act as a contingent, but failed by accident to do so.

Twenty-six gray-beards, representing by their aggregate ages over twenty centuries, constitute Plainfield's "Tippecanoe Old-Timers".

All of the are those whose names are marked with stars turned out in the parade last night, most of them occupying a stage. Those who found it impossible to join send regrets, but in their hearts rejoiced, as openly rejoiced the others, in the election of Benjamin Harrison, their candidate, to the Presidency. The combined ages of these two baker's dozen is 2,068 years. They all voted for Wm. Henry Harrison in 1840; and Mr. Smith was so sorry that he didn't cast his ballot for the same man that he attempted some atonement by voting for old Tippecanoe's grandson. Mr. Morse is the oldest Mason in New Jersey, and was born in 1800. Mr. Wooden was born in 1799 and cast his first ballot in 1820.

The Fourth Ward Guards, which presented their usual handsome appearance, stood and heartily cheered in passing the most beautifully illuminated Potter mansion, and later on at the Democratic banner on West Front street, as a tribute to Grover Cleveland as President of the United States, showing a magnanimous spirit highly commendable.

THE NEWS building was decorated with over 150 lanterns and flags festooned all over the front of the building and over the street. These illuminations were done for us and them, by Messrs. Carney Bros., Democrats. The effect was heightened by beautiful illuminations of several other buildings in the vicinity, including French's carriage factory, Blimms' hotel and Giese's restaurant, and red fire. Cheer after cheer lustily went up in front of THE NEWS office as each uniformed company, or body of citizens went by. Messrs. Carney Brothers had in their illuminated show window on a large American flag inscribed "Our President, Too," which was especially cheered by the Cavalry Corps. The Grant Guards, led by Capt. Smith, cheered all around. Their fine marching was especially praised.

At Mr. Truell's on Central avenue, besides a profusion of fire-works, lanterns and flags, there was a live rooster, which one lady held up and somehow contrived to make it do quite some crowing. But it would require this whole page to tell of all the grand displays, and we must therefore leave something to the imagination. There was enthusiasm everywhere in city and borough, and at about eleven o'clock the paraders were dismissed by the able Marshal, Capt. Hand, and brought to a close the Presidential campaign of 1888, the most hotly contested, in the opinion of some, since Grandfather Harrison ran for President in 1840, with a like result—an overwhelming victory.

And now, that the campaign is over, let all bitterness end, business be resumed as formerly, and let each do his utmost to contribute to the prosperity and the welfare of the people generally, in which THE NEWS will try to do its part faithfully and true as ever, and we are sure all will say with us, Amen. (So be it.) And agree that "Of all glad words of tongue or pen, The gladdest are these: 'We've elected Ben.'"

Voters Thank the Women.

The ladies of the Women's Relief Corps (No. 10) on election day, Nov. 6th, furnished to the voters of the Fourth Ward Township of North Plainfield eight hundred and thirteen cups of coffee besides other refreshments. In consideration of the above facts the U. S. Grant Guards last evening passed the following resolution unanimously:

Resolved, That the sincere thanks of the U. S. Grant Guards be tendered to the Women's Relief Corps (No. 10) for their kindness in furnishing refreshments to the voters of the Borough and townahip of North Plainfield on election day, Nov. 6th, 1888.

WM. C. BARTS, Capt.

New Jersey State Canvassers.

Governor Green yesterday appointed Senators Wertz, of Morris; Edwards, of Hudson; Baker, of Cumberland; Nevius, of Monmouth; and Rue, of Gloucester; as the State Board of Canvassers. They will meet in the Executive Chamber at the State House Tuesday, Nov. 27th, to canvass the Electoral and Congressional returns.

That's So.

As Phelps did not elect a Republican state senator in Plainfield and Sewell did do nobly in his county for Harrison and the state ticket, Sewell ought to be Harrison's member of the next from New Jersey.—Elizabeth Herald, (Dem.)

A New Post-Office in Union.

Two New Jersey post-offices have been established as follows: Alliance, Salem County; Postmaster, George S. Seides. Berkely Heights, Union County; Postmistress, Hannah Wahl.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Wm. Seigrist, of New York, returned home this morning after a pleasant visit to his friend, Mr. Robert Whittaker, of East Fifth street.

The Rev. H. C. Applegarth, jr., of the New Brunswick First Baptist church, assists today in the installation of the Rev. George E. Horr, of Somerville, as pastor of the Baptist church of Summit.

Mr. Harold Conover, of Plainfield, and Miss Minnie E. Smith, of Piscataway township, were married at Princeton last week Wednesday. The bride is the daughter of Mr. Peter A. Smith, and the groom is a brother of Mrs. Joshua Myers, of Middlebrook.

—The present annual crop of potatoes in this country is estimated by The Farmers' Review at 216,000,000 bushels, against 124,000,000 bushels in 1887.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The new bridge across the Delaware river at Milford is to be finished by February next. The bridge will cost $15,000

Several thousand Republicans celebrated the Presidential victory last night in Newark. Arches, arcs of triumph, and streets all the houses along the route, both those of Democrats and Republicans, were beautifully decorated and illuminated.

There has been a wholesale murdering of chickens at Bridgeton by minks, during the past four weeks. A few nights ago, at Union Grove Jacob Cramer, lost all but three of every chicken he had. A half-dozen minks got into his henhouse and soon made it clear as day. There are reports from all over the county of wholesale slaughtering done by the pesky creatures.

The identity of the woman who was found dead in the Secaucus swamps two or three weeks ago has finally been established. Her husband identified the body as that of Mary Reilly, age sixty-five, of No 42 Camden street, Newark, and he received permission yesterday to take it away. Mr. Reilly says that she was partially demented and disappeared from home four weeks ago.

John L. Mason, of Vineland, whose name has become familiar in every household because of his invention of the Mason fruit jar, has just begun a suit for $75,000 against the Consolidated Fruit Jar Company, who have been using his twenty-one patents over six years and have never paid him a cent. The case will shortly be tried in the United States District Court. There will be a brilliant array of legal talent on both sides.

Selina Shetlick, of No. 40 West Park street, Newark, and her child are being protected by the constables of Justice Otto's Court until her husband is arrested on a charge of cruelty. He was compelled to marry her when she was only sixteen years of age, and is her uncle by blood. Under the laws of New Jersey, he does not recognize such a marriage. Mrs. Shetlick has to work to support herself and pay the insurance premiums on her husband's life.

Austin A. Myatt and James Cavanaugh, cutters employed at the Trenton China Works, have had a standing quarrel two years over the right of possession of a rowboat. They had a fight over the ownership of the boat, and last Saturday night is reported Myatt stabbed Cavanaugh in the shoulder with a clasp knife, and the latter soon the men renewed the hostilities at the china works, when Mantz whipped out a revolver and shot Cavanaugh three times, one ball penetrating his left lung. Myatt ran out of the shop with the smoking revolver in his hand and was brought back by John Beech, the foreman. Later a police officer appeared on the scene and Myatt was taken to the police station. At noon Cavanaugh was believed to be in a dying condition. His ante-mortem statement was taken and Myatt was committed. Cavanaugh has the reputation of being a quiet, peaceable citizen. Both men are married and have families.

Jane Hussy, who died at her son's home on Park Terrace, West Orange, Saturday night, would have been 100 years old the thirteenth day of next month. She was a native of Old Castle, County Meath, Ireland. She was married in 1812 to Mr. Hussy, and one of the sisters died at the age of 101 years and another at 103. Her brothers were killed in battle in the Crimean war. Mrs. Hussy came to this country with her husband twenty-six years ago and settled in Newark. Four years later she became a widow. For the last fifteen years she had resided at West Orange in the home where she died. Her children are Mrs. Ellen Cavanaugh, of Newark, and three sons. Two of the sons went to Australia many years ago and are supposed to have died there. The third son bears the aged woman had been weak-minded and had to be kept under the care of her son and daughters. An old family Bible in possession of the son contains the record of her birth. The funeral will be held from St. John's church, Orange, to-morrow with a solemn High Mass of Requiem. The remains will be interred in the Cemetery of the Holy Sepulchre.

The residence of J. C. Graham on Highland avenue, Bloomfield, was visited last night by a man who entered by the window, climbed to the second-story window, and began to tap on the window of a room in which Mrs. Graham was about to retire. She was so frightened that she fainted. As soon as she recovered she called her husband and the man just were unable to get the slightest clue to the fellow. A little later W. R. Rowland, of Ashfield avenue, was sitting in his parlor reading a paper, when he heard his bloodhound growling. He went into the kitchen where the animal was, but before letting him out asked who was there. He received no response, and let the dog out. Two minutes later Mr. Rowland heard a man yell. He called the dog back, and it came back with a piece of cloth in its mouth. Mr. Rowland thinks now that the man may have been the "peeper" who has so alarmed Newarkers recently. Last Wednesday night Mr. Morgan on Ridgewood avenue, near the Orange line, was visited later, but the man was chased away by Mr. Yorkston, who heard a ladder fall against the house.

ELECTION AFTERMATH.

Gen. Harrison's Mail Arrives by the Wagon Load.

CONGRATULATING MR. MORTON.

The President-Elect Has Done Nothing Toward Forming His Cabinet Yet—News from the Doubtful States—Indications That the House Will Be Very Close.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 13.—The president-elect passed the day very quietly at his residence, receiving a goodly number of neighbors and home friends who called, and reading the letters and telegrams that poured in from all parts of the country. Since the day of his election Gen. Harrison's mail has steadily increased, until it has now reached mammoth proportions. Yesterday morning it required an express wagon to haul the bundles of letters and packages of newspapers that had arrived since Saturday. About 1,500 letters and several bags of newspapers comprised the mail.

Seventy-eight telegrams were also received, mostly of a congratulatory character, to answer all the letters. Secretaries Gen. Harrison is almost in reply to every letter, if only to acknowledge its receipt, but with such an extraordinary increase in now finds that the task of replying to each letter will be a long, if not a laborious one, as it would more than occupy his entire time.

One or two callers were near political men, and newspapers, with whom he talked about politics, but only somewhat, but was himself very reticent, expressing no opinions, but saying that he was now listening to all that came to his ears, and was anxious to hear the voice of the country upon matters connected with the administration he was to form and control. The great mass of his correspondence is of course congratulatory, but there is a large share of it devoted to politics, and this he will study and read for himself or have his brother-in-law read to him, as he can peruse personally acquainted with its character and suggestions.

That much can be positively said, that as yet the general has not fixed his mind upon any one for a position in the cabinet, or for any prominent post of honor or service. Already a number of letters from citizens in the south and other portions of the country asking for recommendations, and with his present feeling he can hardly be glad to give the representatives, but of course he cannot have his time restricted or frivolously exhausted by parasitic or unworthy seekers. The general is a very methodical man in his proceedings and has a will as well as usual equipoise of manner.

The strain of the campaign has been very great upon him, and it is not unlikely that he may take a brief vacation before his inauguration, though where or when is not yet outlined even in his own mind. The general is organizing his force of clerks, and has appointed Mr. E. F. Tibbotts of this city as chief-grader. He spends all his time at home, taking his recreation in the shape of work, some of which he is very fond, and for which he has always been accustomed. The routine of the home is, of course, greatly interrupted, for the general is "not house" with his accustomed courtesy and good nature.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. MORTON.

Telegrams From Prominent Republicans Expressing Satisfaction.

RHINEBECK, N. Y., Nov. 13.—Hon. Levi P. Morton and family have left their country residence for New York.

The following are among the large number of telegrams of congratulation received by Mr. Morton:

James Morroney, Richmond, Va.: "Accept the congratulations of the Irish-American National Republican Tariff league."

Hon. Thomas Cornell, Rondout, N. Y.: "The result clearly gives evidence that Americans are for America."

J. Sullivan Rogers, Indianapolis: "Indiana has redeemed her pledge. The faithfulness of the Irishman has been well shown in this election."

H. H. Brown, Jersey City: "I congratulate you over the greatest victory the American people have had or will have in the history of the country."

John H. Starin: "Protection being settled in the American mind for a generation or more, I congratulate you."

Gen. Lew Wallace, Indianapolis: "Above all I am glad the American people have escaped the great danger which threatened them."

Hugh Dorsey, Indianapolis: "Congratulations from the state of Indiana Democrats she myself, who voted for you openly."

Senator Allison: "Accept my sincere and hearty congratulations. The victory is great."

Joel A. Erhardt: "Before you have finished your work for policy of the Republican party will have placed a mill on every stream in every southern state, and will have the right to vote will be able to do so without let or hindrance."

West Virginia Still in Doubt.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 13.—The election returns from this state are very close. Republicans claim Goff's election as governor, and two congressmen, but the correspondent from Lincoln county gives Jackson (Dem.) for congress, 200 majority, which will elect him by a small majority. Fleming (dem.) for governor, through his attorneys, has instituted the canvass of the returns of Kanawha county that he desires a recount. The Republican vote increased here but little, and the county the Democrats polled a slight increase over two years ago. Senator Kenna expresses the belief that the legislature will be Democratic by two or three majority on joint ballot, and consequently hope that Gen. Harrison will accept.

A Feast of Oratory.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—A banquet will be given at Delmonico's to-morrow evening, in which the participants will be the Republican senators and leaders in the late presidential campaign. Chauncey M. Depew is to preside, and Col. W. W. Dudley, Prof. Albert Pushey, "The Tribune" man, Whitelaw Reid and others are on the reception committee. Among the speakers announced are Gen. Ed. S. Bragg, Col. Ellis H. Shepard, Robert P. Porter, Gen. George A. Sheridan and Rev. R. S. MacArthur. Hon. I. P. Morton and Hon. Warner Miller have signified to be present.

Discussing Cabinet Possibilities.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The indications appear to a Republican majority of from five to seven in the next house of representatives. There is still doubt about West Virginia and California. The Democrats may have elected Thompson in the First district of California. This would reduce the majority, otherwise appearing to be seven, to five. The Democrats claim from three to four in West Virginia. Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, figures that a Republican majority of from one to three. There seems to be no room for doubt that the Republicans will organize the house.

Gen. Harrison's Opportunity.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 13.—A curious paper is circulating here. It is addressed to Mr. Harrison, reciting that he now has an opportunity of making a national administration that will break all sectional distinctions and unite a united country. He is urged to appoint good officials in the south and to give to the south liberal and enlightened treatment. It is signed by prominent business men irrespective of party.

Parade in Brooklyn.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—The Republicans of Brooklyn held a big parade last night in honor of the recent national victory. It is claimed that 25,000 men were in line. Among those who reviewed the parade were ex-United States District Attorney A. W. Tenney and Hon. Warner Miller. There was a fine display of fireworks and much enthusiasm.

Mudd Claims a Majority.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 13.—Sidney E. Mudd, the Republican candidate for congress in the Fifth district, asserts that he has been elected by a majority of six. He will apply to the courts for a mandamus to compel Governor Jackson to issue to him a certificate of election.

Preparing for Inauguration.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Judge Cusey, chairman of the Republican national committee, has appointed Mr. A. T. Britton, of Washington, chairman of the committee on arrangements for the inauguration of President-elect Harrison.

RUNNING DOWN THE ROBBERS.

Two Arrests and the Principal Will Soon Be in Custody.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 13.—Leon Pounds, arrested Saturday for mail robbery, was arraigned and committed in default of bail. Letters were found on him that were stolen in the Northeastern railway train robbery Nov. 3. Cora Ellis, passing as Mrs. Girard, of Tyler, Tex., who had arrived here on her way from Lexington, La., the place where Pounds was arrested, to Texas, was arrested, and $300 of the stolen money was found sewed in her clothing. She has been living with E. P. Bunch, who committed the train robbery. The woman confessed that Bunch gave her the money.

Bunch is credited with the capture Bunch within two days. He secured $10,300 cash from the express car. He is 45 years old, was born in Noxubee county, Miss., is six feet two inches tall, has red hair and features, was once school teacher at Amite, La., and later clerk of Cook county, Tex.; resided at Gainesville, but was indicted for forgery, and for three two years ago; was also with the Burrows boys in the Texas Narrow Gauge train robbery near Texarkana; was arrested, but released on evidence, was bailed out by the Southern Express company, disappeared and was not heard of again until the robbery ten days ago.

Among the articles found in "Mrs. Girard's" trunk was a package containing eight dynamite cartridges. She also had two heavy revolvers which, she stated, she always carried, and slept with them under her pillow.

GOLDEN GATE SPECIAL.

The Most Complete and Fastest Long Distance Train in the World.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—Arrangements have been completed by the Union and Central Pacific roads to put on a fast limited Pullman train between Ogden, Ut., and the "Golden Gate Special," to run weekly between Council Bluffs and San Francisco. The service will be inaugurated on the 18th prox., and the train is to be the most perfect in all its appointments in the world. It will be lighted with electric light, heated by steam from the locomotive, have a barber shop, separate bath rooms for ladies and gentlemen, and a ladies' maid in attendance on women and children.

The train will consist of a baggage car, two sleeping cars, one dining car and one composite car, divided into sleeping, library, smoking and observation room. Many other novel features will be introduced. The run is to be made in sixty hours—leaving Council Bluffs every Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, and reaching San Francisco every Saturday at 8 p. m. Returning the train will leave San Francisco at 7 p. m. and arrive in Council Bluffs every Tuesday at 9. The rate between Council Bluffs and San Francisco, including everything—railroad ticket, sleeping berth, meals en route and service—will be $100.

Jachne's Last Hope Gone.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The United States supreme court held that the consolidation act of the state of New York, under which a whole district, the Fifth, New York, was convicted, is not retroactive, and that there is no reason for the discharge of Jachne, and says: "A general law for the punishment of acts committed before its passage is not void by its retroactive operation acts before committed, as well as to prescribe a rule of conduct for future offenses, would be void in so far as it was retrospective, but such invalidity would not affect the operation of the law in regard to the cases which were within its terms and provisions." The order of the circuit court refusing the writs was right, and it is affirmed."

He Cut His Throat.

BOSTON, Nov. 13.—Patrick Monahan, aged 55, has been found lying dead in his house at the corner of Dudley and Bolton streets, Cambridge. He committed suicide some time between Saturday and Sunday night by cutting his throat with a razor. Monahan was a well-to-do man, supply together for some years, and three weeks ago, after an unusually violent brawl, she left him, and has since been living with a lodger. He had been an industrious laboring man, and in his pockets were found $912.02 in money.

Wiggins Records a Compliment.

OTTAWA, Nov. 13.—Professor Wiggins, the Canadian weather prophet, has received from the Ananias Club of Boston, celebrated for its lies in the matter of fabrications on this continent, an honorary membership ticket, accompanied by a handsomely illuminated address, in which in consideration of the eminence he has achieved for false statements in his record as a weather prophet. The professor records the membership as an honor.

The Methodist Bishops.

BOSTON, Nov. 13.—The board of Methodist Episcopal bishops continued in session yesterday, and last evening there was a reception to the bishops by the methodist ministers of this city and vicinity. The meeting has only been announced by the members of the board. The next session will be held at Delaware, O., next May.

ALL LONDON DELIGHTED.

A Long Desired Change in the Chief of Police.

WHY SIR CHARLES RESIGNED.

He Anticipated Removal at a Coming Meeting—Scotland Yard Joins in the Rejoicing—A Socialist Outbreak Feared in Consequence.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Sir Charles Warren, chief of the Metropolitan police, has resigned.

It transpires that Sir Charles Warren had not intended to resign, despite the popular clamor for his removal, until in the latter part of last week he heard, from what he seemed to him excellent authority, that the government had decided to make of him a vicarious sacrifice in the interest of his colleagues or two of his superiors in official life. Knowing that the cabinet would hold a council on Saturday, presumably with the object of making his case the chief subject of discussion, Gen. Warren wrote a letter to Home Secretary Matthews on Friday evening, tendering his resignation, ostensibly because the home secretary, a week previous, had mildly censured him for having written a magazine article defending the administration of Scotland Yard, the writing of which was a violation of the civil service rules. It is undeniably a fact that until the receipt of Sir Charles Warren's letter Mr. Matthews was not aware that the former had written the article mentioned, but being fully aware that he was the principal person for whose shortcomings the chief commissioner of metropolitan police was to be made a scapegoat the home secretary made haste to accept the resignation and secure in its acceptance the acquiescence of his colleagues.

The police as well as the general public are delighted at the retirement of Gen. Warren, whose arbitrary administration has rendered life miserable to them, but all fear that the sudden change in the head of the police department will involve temporary trouble with the Socialists, who are correspondingly jubilant over Warren's departure from Scotland Yard, and already discussing plans for a demonstration in celebration of the event. Every Socialist, and, to his sorrow, almost every shopkeeper in the vicinity, remembers that to-day is the anniversary of the bloody Sunday, when Sir Charles ordered the troops to force its way into Trafalgar square in defiance of Gen. Warren's prohibitory proclamation. Throughout London to-day, before, and many persons express fear that the retirement of the man whose prompt action averted a terrible and prolonged riot that occasion will embolden the lawless element to violence.

Since the announcement of Gen. Warren's resignation it has leaked out that he carried his habitual meanness to the length of squabbling about the terms of hiring the bloodhounds which were brought into requisition in the attempt to run down the Whitechapel murderer. This so disgusted the owner of the dogs that he removed them to the country a fortnight ago, and no hounds have been employed since, the assertion of the police officials to the contrary not withstanding. It is probable that either Assistant Commissioner Monro, Chief Constable Wood, of Manchester, or C. E. Howard Vincent, member of parliament for Central Sheffield, will succeed Gen. Warren, though Home secretary Matthew will ignore Chief Constable Farndale, of Birmingham, for the position.

At the inquest on the body of the Kelly woman a witness testified that he saw the woman leave the house with the woman shortly before the killing. He noticed that the man's face had a curiously blotched appearance.

Released from Wexford Jail.

DUBLIN, Nov. 13.—Commoner John E. Redmond has been unconditionally released from his imprisonment in Wexford jail, three weeks in advance of the expiration of his sentence. He was discharged on the advice of the prison doctors. He has lost thirteen pounds during his confinement.

Crispi Conciliatory.

ROME, Nov. 13.—Signor Crispi, prime minister, has assured France that Italy will cease its friendly relations with Germany on the occasion of the visit to Marianna, the new French ambassador. He also intimated a desire to remove all present misunderstandings between the two countries.

Bernhardt Prosecuted for Taxes.

VIENNA, Nov. 13.—Distraint has been laid upon the wardrobe and other personal property of the Sarah Bernhardt, who is giving a series of performances in Austria, for the collection of 5,000 florins income tax.

Natalie Buys a House.

WARSAW, Nov. 13.—Queen Natalie of Servia has purchased an estate at Kutmo, in the government of Warsaw, paying therefor 1,800,000 roubles.

Sale of Fine Horses.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—The auction sale of high class horses that were exhibited in last week's horse show at Madison Square Garden began at the garden this afternoon. The prices obtained were in some cases good, but in other cases far below their value. The highest amount paid for any of the animals was $2,300 for W. E. D. Stokes' chestnut team of high steppers, Erebus and Wheeler. A pair of cream colored ponies belonging to Mr. Stokes was sold for $1,700, and a pair of E. D. Stokes' roan mares Barbara sold for $1,150. The others were sold for an average of about $300.

Protected by a Squaw.

OTTAWA, Nov. 13.—The mounted police department has been officially notified of the capture, north of Calgary, of Bob, alias Jack, murderer and horse thief named Godin. After the prisoner delay the despatches will be brought to Calgary, where the trial of Godin and three other murderers made their escape from jail a few days before the date fixed for their execution. The desperadoes were temporarily captured by a squaw, who separated. Godin has managed to avoid arrest for many weeks, owing to the faithful work and devotion of an Indian squaw, who, when the police were closing in on him, would hold a council of war with the other Indians, and by this means would delay the approach of the police. The squaw is said to be very handsome.

Digging Out the Victims.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Four more of the victims of the fire here have been identified as James H. Forbes, R. Banchle, Carlos Richardson and Jacob Maurer. Work was resumed on the ruins all day, and two more bodies were found. They are unrecognizable. The safe of the lantern company was taken out and its contents, which were found to be unharmed. The missing have only been released by the manufacturers.

WIFE MURDER IN CONNECTICUT.

A Discharged and Drunken Workman Imitates Jack the Ripper.

PORTLAND, Conn., Nov. 13.—Mrs. Ellen Cooper, aged 32, wife of a tenement maker, who has been working in Meriden, was found dead in bed, her body frightfully hacked and mutilated. Her husband returned from Meriden two weeks ago, and said he was on a strike, but she doubted it, and on investigation learned he had been discharged for not attending to business.

Cooper was drunk Friday and Saturday, but was sober Sunday. He had been reading the accounts of the Whitechapel murder, and was greatly excited. In his sense of his acquaintance said he would fix his wife before Monday, so that she should trouble him no more. A light was seen in his house late Sunday night, but no noise was heard by any person on side or by the children in the house.

Mrs. Cooper received a letter Saturday night, and went to the postoffice and declared it had been opened there. The postmaster told her the letter had been delivered to her son all right a few minutes before. She created a scene on the street, quite a crowd around her. Before she left she made an insinuating remark to the postmaster.

Cooper was arrested in Middletown. He asserts that the letter which his wife received came from an East Hampton business man, and proved that his wife was unfaithful, which justified his killing her. Cooper said he was sober when he went to bed, and had the ax at hand to use when his wife went to sleep. The couple came here from Hartford last April.

AXWORTHY'S EXPLANATION.

He Claims To Be the Victim of a Conspiracy—Making Restitution.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 13.—Mayor Babcock gave to the press the following letter by him from Thomas Axworthy, written prior to the former's hasty departure for Montreal, where the mayor was unsuccessful in his attempt to secure an interview with the defaulting city treasurer. The letter bears date Oct. 28, and in it the writer says that his downfall was caused by loaning on call, at the suggestion of prominent Cleveland parties, large sums of money on which he received the interest regularly. Greatly to his surprise, however, the same principal was demanded it was not forthcoming, and investigation proved that the men, whom he supposed to be worth millions, could only have paid the loans within four months after they were made.

There was a combination to ruin him, the writer says, and it succeeded admirably. Mr. Axworthy then gives a list of his entire belongings, estimated by him to be worth $250,000, and authorizes the mayor to act as his attorney in the transfer of his property to the city, to make good, as far as possible, the loss sustained. His wife, he says, will give up all claim to the same for a nominal consideration. The list of his assets includes stocks, bonds, notes, etc., many of which are pronounced by bankers to be worthless or of trifling value. Mr. Axworthy left Cleveland only make another trip to Montreal in the hope of having a personal interview with the defaulter.

Rough Weather on the Lakes.

MONTREAL, Nov. 13.—On Saturday the Bossiere line steamship from Havre put in at St. Pierre Miquelon disabled. On Thursday night, when she was off the Bird Rocks, her piston rod broke, stopping the engines. The steamer bronched to and the waves washed over her. Before she could be brought into the wind the starboard and bow boats were smashed, and almost every moveable thing was swept away. One seaman had his leg broken. It isreported from Rimouski that the steamer Canada, with thirty-six men missing from the gulf fishing fleet, belonging in Gaspe and the lower part of Quebec. They may have been disabled and have put into Green bay for repairs.

A Young Lady Disappears.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 13.—Miss Lizzane Fairweather, a young lady of prepossessing appearance, has since Oct. 21 been visiting the Rev. J. F. King and family of this city, during which time she left Mr. King's residence to attend services at St. Joseph's cathedral, saying that she would return by 6 p. m. As she did not return that evening Mr. King called at the cathedral and found that she had not been there and no trace of her has yet been obtained. The lady had been heiress to an extensive property in Kansas, which she recently lost in a peculiar way. It is feared that this loss and ill health has left her to commit suicide.

Mr. Chamberlain Arrives.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Mr. Joseph Chamberlain reached Washington at 9 o'clock last night. He drove at once to the Endicott home, and remained there for an hour. Mr. Chamberlain's valet took the baggage to the Hotel Arno, where Lady Herbert, of England, is living. Mr. Chamberlain said that as he had come to this country on private business only he did not care to discuss the political issues. He declined to say anything concerning the approaching nuptials. It is unofficially announced that the wedding will take place before the close of the present week.

A Texas Court House Blown Up.

HENRIETTA, Tex., Nov. 13.—At 1 o'clock in the morning the city was awakened by a terrific explosion, but as it was supposed that the Republicans were still celebrating, no investigation was made at the time. An hour later it was discovered that a portion of the court house had been blown down. An examination disclosed the fact that dynamite had been placed under the corner of the building, and almost totally destroyed it. Buildings adjoining on the public square were also damaged. It is believed that a desire to destroy the records was at the bottom of the affair.

Rumored Assassination of Governor Guy.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 13.—A special from Gainesville, Tex., says: News was received here yesterday from Henrietta, the capital of the Chickasaw nation, that Governor Guy was assassinated last Saturday night. Although the report is meager, it appears that serious trouble is brewing between the followers of Governor Guy and his opponent in the late election, Byrd. The report of the assassination of Governor Guy has not yet been confirmed.

Arrival of China's Minister.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Chang Yen Hoon, the Chinese minister, reached Washington last evening after an absence of several months. He was met at the depot by the members of the Chinese legation. The minister was accompanied by Sir Liang Liuan, charge d'affaires at Peru, who is on his way to China by way of Europe. Wong Kai Kah, consul general at San Francisco, who has come west to see the minister on business.

Big Improvements Schemed.

MONTREAL, Nov. 13.—A New York, Canada and English syndicate has purchased the Lachine canal and Lachine locks and will spend $2,000,000 in improvements. The purpose of developing water power for furnishing electric power and lighting for the city, the widening of the canal, new docks, bridges, etc., is to be commenced at once. The improvements will cost $500,000.

HORROR UPON HORROR.

A Crazed Wife Incinerates Herself and Children.

SEQUEL TO THE MINE DISASTER.

Marie Berthune Looks Upon the Charred Remains of Her Husband, Goes Home and Saturates Herself and Sleeping Little Ones with Oil and Lights It.

PITTSBURG, Kan., Nov. 13.—Marie Berthune, wife of one of the victims of the mine disaster, set fire to herself and five children, and all but the eldest daughter were burned to death. Among the bodies recovered from the fatal shaft was that of Louis Berthune, and when his wife recognized the mangled remains a shriek was heard and the grief stricken woman fell in a swoon. When she recovered she refused to speak or notice any one, and it was evident that her reason had gone. As she evinced no disposition to become violent this attention was paid to her, and all day long she sat at her door, regardless of the cries of her five children, the youngest a babe of 5 months old.

In the evening she was apparently roused from her stupor, and took her children to the improvised morgue, where lay the body of her husband. She led each child up to the ghastly corpse, and still with that awful silence which had marked her from the beginning of her bereavement, led them away to the little hut which had sheltered them in the past.

No attention was paid to her by those who were busy with the dead and dying, but about midnight a cry of fire from the village of Frontenac gathered a crowd of workers from the mine to the streets. It was soon that the Berthune cabin was in flames. Two willing hands went to work to save the inmates. The oldest child, a girl of 9 years, succeeded in escaping from the fire, which devoured the entire family, and her story was one that sent a thrill of horror through her hearers. She said that her mother sent each of the children to bed with a kiss, and then she went down near the stove.

The girl could not sleep and lay watching her mother, who, after sitting for some time, arose, went to the corner of the room over herself and the bed clothes of the children. The grief stricken woman then set fire to some paper and scattered it about the room, and soon the flames leaped to the bed. The daughter struggled a short time with her mother in an endeavor to get away, but the burning oil on her mother's clothes caused such intense heat that she soon relaxed her grasp. The girl finally managed to get out of the door, where she fell exhausted and frightfully burned. The cabin burned like timber, and soon nothing was left but the glowing embers from which were raked the charred bodies of the insane mother and her four children.

Reduced Carrying Rates.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—The Erie railroad insists on the differential rates, and has put in force rates from New York to Chicago ranging from forty-five cents to nineteen cents, or from five cents to one cent per 100 pounds below the cut rates made by the New York Central. Advices from Philadelphia state that the Pennsylvania road has met the cuts and issued a reduced schedule.

Disastrous Explosion.

SHARON, Pa., Nov. 13.—A large gas tank, the property of the Sharon Gas and Water company, exploded with terrific force. The buildings and the machinery at the works were destroyed. An employee named Charles Smith, and a tramp, whose name could not be learned, were killed. The damages are large. Every house in the town was shaken and some of them badly shattered.

Phil Daly Acquitted.

FREEHOLD, N. J., Nov. 13.—Phil Daly, the pugilist, and the Sharon Gas and Water company, exploded with terrific force. The buildings and the machinery at the works were destroyed. An employee named Charles Smith, and a tramp, whose name could not be learned, were killed. The damages are large. Every house in the town was shaken and some of them badly shattered.

It is understood that a niece of the dowager Empress has been offered as consort for the emperor of China.

CONCERNING ALASKA.

Its Population and Its Possibilities As an Agricultural District.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Governor Swineford, of Alaska, in his annual report says the white population has greatly increased during the past year owing to the extension of mining operations and the development of the salmon canning industry. He says that the number of the native population shows a gradual decrease, and estimates that there are 25,000 natives. The total population is 49,850, and of this number there are 6,500 whites, 1,900 creoles and 2,000 aleuts.

The governor says but little has been accomplished in the way of agricultural development. The only obstacle in the way of agriculture, in the opinion of the governor, is that the lands are not available for settlement. He says that the climate is favorable and the soil rich, and he sees no reason why Alaska may not ultimately rival Montana and Wyoming as a cattle country.

A Train Completely Burned Up.

CHARLOTTE, S. C., Nov. 13.—Passenger train No. 53, from Atlanta, was thrown from the track by a broken wheel near Toccoa, Ga. Every car but the engine and tender and mail was burned, not so much as a plank of the whole train being left. Several passengers, a baggage and expressman were badly hurt, but none fatally.

Thompson Defeats DeHaven.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 13.—Returns from two northern counties change the plurality in the First congressional district from De-Haven (Rep.) to Thompson (Dem.). The latter now has a plurality of about 110, with one small county and parts of two counties to hear from.

STORIES OF THE STAGE.

One of the Late Lester Wallack's Interesting "Memories."

After Garrick had brought in a great deal of wise reform in the way of dress there was a lull again, and no one dared to do anything new. Many generations later my father was cast for the part of Tressel in Cibber's version of "Richard III." Tressel is the youthful messenger who conveys to King Henry VI this news of the murder of his son after the battle of Tewkesbury.

My father, a young, ambitious actor, came on with the feather hanging from his cap, all wet, his hair disheveled, one boot torn nearly off, one spur broken, the other gone entirely, his gauntlet stained with blood and his sword snapped in twain, at which old Wewitzer, who was the manager, and had been a manager before my father was born, was perfectly shocked. It was too late to do anything then, but the next morning Wewitzer sent for him to come to his office, and addressed him thus: "Young man, how do you ever hope to get on in your profession by deliberately breaking all precedent? What will become of the profession if mere boys are allowed to take these liberties? Why, sir, you should have entered in a suit of decent black, with silk stockings on and with a white handkerchief in your hand." "What! after defeat and flight from battle?" interrupted my father. "That had nothing at all to do with it," was the reply. "The proprieties, sir, the proprieties!"—Scribner's Magazine.

A Harmless Comedy of Errors.

Morris E. Ward, formerly of the press of this city, but now agent of a paper car wheel concern on the Hudson, is charitable, gallant and absent minded.

He has a poor relative up the country to whom he sends all his old clothes. There are many ladies in the city to whom he sends invitations for the theatre.

The other day he wrote to his poor relation: "I send you my last pair of pants but one; they may be a trifle small, but you can let them out in the waistband. If they are too long you can turn 'em up. Don't mind the patch."

The same day he wrote to a lady:

"Since you were kind enough to accept my invitation to the theatre, leaving it to me to select the play and evening, permit me to say the Columbia, this evening."

In an hour Mr. Ward received the following from his lady acquaintance: "As you did not send the pants by the messenger who delivered your note, I am, of course, unable to do anything to them. However, this need not interfere with our engagement for the theatre."

Mr. Ward went to the theatre, but he was very uneasy.—Chicago Mail.

The Parrot and the Owl.

The Question being arisen: "Why Do We Eat?" the Parrot Challenged the Owl to a Discussion and left the Decision to the Serpent. The Parrot went back several Thousand years to Prove that Adam Ate and was Obliged to Eat, and that all Men who came after him had been Obliged to Eat, and used up the best part of two hours in drawing comparisons, Making Deductions and Clinching his Points. When he finally sat down wet with Perspiration, but Flattered by his own Arguments; the Serpent asked the Owl to begin. Particulars of "Gentlemen," said the Bird, as he slowly arose, "I have only a word to say. It is my opinion that we Eat because we were built that way."

The Serpent promptly Decided that the Owl had the best of it, and when the Parrot raised a howl over it the Fox chucked him under the wing and said;

"Blab is a good thing, but Brevity and Common Sense most always hit a Jury."

Sam's Poetical Effort.

Sam's teacher, upon dismissing school Friday afternoon, requested each one of her pupils to bring Monday morning one or more verses of original poetry as a composition. Now, Sam could easily have cut up a cord of wood or ridden an unbroken colt, but to compose poetry was beyond him. He tried unsuccessfully all day Saturday and Sunday. Late Sunday afternoon, worn and miserable, he strolled down to the river side, seeking inspiration. There he saw a half sunken boat. The divine afflatus came and Monday morning he appeared at school and triumphantly presented his teacher the following couplet:

A boat went down into the water;
It went down deeper than it oughter.

Hard Luck.

"O I had such a lovely dream!" said Minnie to her little brother one morning as they were going down stairs to breakfast. "Did you? What did you dream about?" asked Bob, stopping on the landing and eyeing his sister suspiciously. He was an only son among five daughters, and never had dreams. "Well, I dreamed that I was in a candy store, and that I was eating caramels and taffy." "And I," what was I eating?" cried Bob, getting red in the face at the thought of it. "You!" "Yes, I." "Why, you weren't there at all." "I wasn't there at all, and you went and dreamed that you were there doing that without me!" and he burst into tears and went down yelling to his father."—Boston True Flag.

A WELL-KNOWN JOURNALIST DEAD.

Napoleon L. Thieblin, Whose Signature Was "Timothy."

Napoleon L. Thieblin, who died in New York city the other day, was a man with an eventful history. He was a soldier, author, war correspondent and editor, and he passed his life in many lands.

He was born in 1834. His family was French and one of the oldest royalist families of Lorraine. His family was driven from France during the first revolution, and settled first at Bologna, Italy. When he was a boy his father was appointed court architect at St. Petersburg. Young Thieblin was sent to a Russian military school, and finally entered the Russian army as sub-lieutenant of artillery. He had just completed his education at the outbreak of the Crimean war, in which he distinguished himself. Before he left the service, in 1857, he was commanded forty men, and at the fall of the city was decorated and transferred to the Imperial guards. He withdrew from the service in 1857, and set about the study of philosophy and literature. He eventually went to England, and found a warm friend in the great Thackeray. He was also intimate with Herbert Spencer, and many other of the famous literary men of the day. He was given charge of the foreign department of The Pall Mall Gazette, on which journal he did some admirable work, especially during the Franco-Prussian war, when he wrote some strong and picturesque letters from the seat of war. These letters stamped him as an acute observer, a bold forager for news, and a clear historian. After the war and downfall of the commune, Mr. Thieblin increased his reputation by contributing to The Pall Mall Gazette a series of letters over the signature "Anamet Bank," which were afterward published by the editors of Punch under the name of "A Little Book About Great Britain." He also contributed to several magazines. He translated and edited in the Russian tongue all the works of Macaulay, Buckle, Darwin, Huxley, Guizot, and several of the works of the German philosophers. He visited Spain and wrote two volumes on that country and the Spaniards, which were published both in England and the United States. He became the Paris correspondent of The New York Herald, and was subsequently the Madrid correspondent of the same journal. He was afterwards sent to join the army of Don Carlos, the Spanish pretender, as war correspondent.

At the close of the war Mr. Thieblin determined to make a tour of the world, depending upon correspondence with English newspapers for the means with which to travel. When he arrived at New York he found his calculations at fault, and accepted a position on The New York Sun. This was in April, 1874. He made his first mark in a series of articles called "The Stranger's Note Book," in which he discussed American men, manners, customs, and events, from the foreigner's standpoint, and in the caustic picturesque style that was peculiarly his. In 1878 he began his famous financial and business articles under the name of "Rigolo," which he kept up until a year and a half ago.

and carries a single turret twenty-two feet in diameter. In this turret are mounted two forty-five ton breech loading guns. She has also four six inch guns, on sponsons, twelve quick firing and several machine guns. The armor plating is twelve inches on the sides and fourteen inches on the turret. The dimensions of the ship are: length, 370 feet; beam, 58 feet; displacement, 6,300 tons. She has engines of 6,000 horse power, which give her a speed of between fifteen and sixteen knots an hour. The bunkers will carry 620 tons of coal, which, at a ten knot speed, will carry her over 5,000 miles She behaved admirably in the recent English naval maneuvers.

Minister Alfred De Clapared.

The new representative of the Swiss government at Washington, Capt. Alfred de Clapared, is a diplomat of long standing, having been engaged in the service in Berlin and Vienna for twenty years. He is by descent a Huguenot, and in appearance he is a distinguished looking man of about 45 years, and is eminently well suited to represent his government. He is highly esteemed by his countrymen, and is noted for his philanthropy, which is widely reaching and effective. Besides having been engaged in MINISTER DE CLAPARED.

a great number of Swiss charitable he is president of the Aid Union of Swiss societies in Europe. When in Berlin he was honored by the degree of Doctor of Laws. He is also captain in the Swiss army. Capt. Clapared is a married man and the father of five children. His family, however, will not live in Washington, and his wife will not have an opportunity of entering Washington society during the coming season.

Making a Quick Trip.

The following conversation took place in Detroit one day:

"I would rather live in Paris than any other place in the world."

"Why don't you go to Paris, then?"

"Economy. If I had $2,000 I would be in Paris to-morrow."

TROUBLE AT HAYTI.

IT HAS LED TO THE SEIZURE OF SOME AMERICAN VESSELS.

They Have Been Detected, So It Is Charged, with Carrying Arms and Munitions to the Insurgents, and the Kearsarge Goes to Look After Them.

When President Grant attempted to annex the San Domingo end of the Island of Hayti, and was vig rously opposed by Senators Schurz, Sumner and others, the American people were suddenly awakened to the fact that they had at their very doors, and waiting to be taken, one of the richest and most interesting islands in the world. They were literally surfeited with information about it; for annexation was made an "administration measure," and fought over in the senate during all of 1869, and early in 1871 a commission sent to the island by vote of congress was accompanied by a corps of keen eyed correspondents. All agreed that the province was literally full of undeveloped wealth, but it was assumed that, "We really do not want the country if we have to take the people with it."

The excitement ceased as suddenly as it rose, and for seventeen years Americans ignored Hayti. Then it was announced that they had had another revolution there and the two districts of the island were united under one government, and now it appears that there is an insurrection, that the Haytian rulers have seized some American ships on the ground that they took arms to the "rebels," and that Secretary Bayard has sent thither a naval cruiser, the famous Kearsarge that destroyed the Alabama. So interest is revived in the black-and-tan republic.

Hayti is historically the most interesting of islands, for on the first islet off its coast was land in the New World sighted by Columbus. He landed there in December, 1492, and named it Hispaniola, meaning "Little Spain." The simple and primitive natives died off rapidly under Spanish rule, and were replaced by negroes to such an extent that the latter grew to be strong to be kept down. In 1622-1697 the French obtained possession of the west half of the island, and developed it so rapidly that it long furnished all the cotton and other products consumed by France, and a surplus was sold to the rest of Europe. The division between French and Spanish sections continued till this year, the former known as San Domingo and the latter as Hayti. This was in April, 1874. He made his first mark in a series of articles called "The Stranger's Note Book," in which he discussed American men, manners, customs, and events, from the foreigner's standpoint, and in the caustic picturesque style that was peculiarly his. In 1878 he began his famous financial and business articles under the name of "Rigolo," which he kept up until a year and a half ago.

There has since been, on the average, a revolution once in seven years, and two or three short wars between the two governments. The whole area of the island is about 28,000 square miles and its total population 750,000, of whom nearly 200,000 are whites or nominally so, the rest of all shades from pure black down through griffe, mestif, mulatto, quadroon and octoroon to melanoid and leucomelanoid, the last two known to have African blood only by their traditions, but as none but an expert could trace the trituration.

No other tropical island can compare with Hayti for general healthfulness; the average of life is equal to that of the United States. Only once in ten years the mercury rose above 95 degs. on the central lands, but it has gone to 104 degs. at Port au Prince. The soil is of inexhaustible fertility; the forests abound in the most valuable hard woods, the mountains are rich in minerals of all kinds, and the gold mines were once so productive that from a single district the viceroy of the Spanish province sent home the annual tax of $500,000, and enough was retained to defray all local expenses. There is no deep mining now, and only a little washing of gold sands by the poorest class of people. The island is easily capable of supporting ten times its present population, and in great comfort, but there must be a more efficient government.

The last lets difficulty appears to have grown out of the fact that the Haytian authorities declared a blockade of the ports held by the insurgents without giving other governments the notice required by international law. The British schooner Alta sailed from New York Oct. 19 with a cargo largely composed of arms and other munitions of war, which were supposed by the firm that furnished them to be designed for Venezuela. She was found cruising in Haytian waters, and was seized by the Haytian man-of-war Toussaint L'Ouverture. When the Haytians found that she had on board 196 boxes of rifles and a corresponding amount of fixed ammunition and six guns began a vigorous hunt among other vessels from the United States and seized the Haytian Republic, a steamer owned in Boston. The officers charged against this vessel was that of carrying some armed insurgents from one port to another. Other American vessels were put under an embargo pending surveillance, and the relations between the two republics became, as diplomatists would say, "strained." Hence the dispatch of the Kearsarge, ordered by Secretary Bayard.

The American steam sloop Kearsarge is the same that, under command of Capt. A. Winslow, won such renown by sinking the famed privateer Alabama, Capt. Raphael Semmes, near Cherbourg, France, on Sunday, June 19, 1864. Even for that time the Kearsarge was not a war vessel of the first class, and Capt. Winslow had armor plated her middle section by the naval device of wrapping her with cable chains, which were planked over. Capt. Semmes afterwards complained bitterly of this "deceit," as it practically drew him into a fight with an armored vessel, in which he having but wooden sides. But it is not for a civilian writer twenty-four years afterwards to decide how far fair, and how deeply may be ornably go in war. The public applauds the man who succeeds.

JUDGE WILLIAM K. MACALLISTER.

His Death Recently Occurred in the City of Chicago.

There is no man whose loss is of more importance to any community than that of a wise and conscientious judge. A common consensus of opinion makes the bench sacred. Chicago, in Judge William K. MacAllister, senior judge of the appellate court, has lost a man and a jurist of whom she was justly proud.

The name Mac Allister seems to indicate Scotch or Scotch-Irish stock, and there is none better for physical and intellectual vigor, though Judge MacAllister's ancestors were born as far back as can be traced in America. Judge MacAllister, himself, was born in Hudson, Washington county, N. Y., in 1818. He secured a collegiate education, studied law and was admitted to the bar when he was 23 years old. In 1854 he went to Chicago where he soon made a reputation as a lawyer. Two of Chicago's most prominent lawyers, Jno. N. Jewett and I. N. Stiles, became his partners. In 1859 he was elected to the recorder's court judgeship, and in 1870 was made one of the five circuit judges of Cook county, but he had meanwhile been elected to the supreme court of Illinois, and held that position till 1873. In that year he accepted an election to the circuit court of Cook county, Chicago, and resigned his office in the supreme court. On the establishment of the appellate court he was appointed by the supreme court one of the new judges.

Judge MacAllister was not only liked and admired for his talents and his kindly qualities, but was pleasing in his personal appearance. He was of medium height. His forehead was large, and bespoke the intellect within. He did not wear any beard, and this exposed his brown features, which with his blue eyes gave a kindliness to his countenance. Few men have ever possessed a better combination of faculties for the bench. He was fearless, he was sincere, he combined the better qualities of a practicing attorney.

The criminal classes of Chicago so hated Judge MacAllister that on one occasion several men waylaid him to murder him. He went home by a different route from his usual one, and so escaped them, but they got into his house and into the cellar. The judge got up in the middle of the night, armed himself with two revolvers, and went in search of his would be murderers. He found two of them in the cellar and opened fire.

Judge MacAllister had no dread of death. He was 70 years old, but vigorous when he died.

THE KING OF WURTEMBURG.

He Is in Trouble, and All About an American Friend.

The old king of Wurtemburg is in trouble. A certain American named Jackson has for a number of years been the companion of the monarch, and Jackson was afterwards joined by his friends, the Rev. Charles B. Woodcock and Donald Hindry, both Americans, the former of whom is said to have formerly been assistant rector of a church in New York city. They resided with the king with a handsome house in Stuttgart, where they live, and the king spends nearly all his time with them.

The monarch is very old and infirm, and it is supposed by his subjects that his mind is giving way. There is great jealousy of Jackson and his associates, who claim to be spiritualistic mediums, and the ministry have resigned because Jackson was not dismissed from his position as counselor. The newspapers of Wurtemberg have respectfully kept silence, but a paper in the neighboring kingdom of Bavaria, The Munich Neuste Nachrichten, has printed an account of the matter. For this the council of ministers at Wurtemburg have ordered proceedings against the Munich journal. The two kingdoms are distinct, but under the constitution of the German empire such proceedings may be instituted.

It is claimed that the king, by his munificence to his three friends, is impoverishing himself; that he is obliged to curtail his expenses when he goes to Nice, which he does every winter for his health, and that he has also been compelled to sell some of the horses from the royal stable.

The monarch being very old and infirm, and his nephew the heir apparent to the crown being of unsound mind, the people are alarmed for the succession. In case the king and his nephew are both incapacitated, the crown goes to another branch of the royal family who are Roman Catholics, while the bulk of the inhabitants of the kingdom are Protestants.

port, it is possible to purchase nearly every imaginable article, from a bunch of radishes to a horse and buggy.

He is 54 years of age, and is an active, energetic looking man. He was educated at the Aldersgate Grammar school. He has twice unsuccessfully contested a district in Westminster against the Hon. W. Lowther. He was elected alderman of Cheap ward in 1882, and served the office of sheriff of London in 1884-'85.

He is a follower of Gladstone and a believer in Irish home rule.

The inauguration of the lord mayor elect is an event of great state, splendor and general flourish of trumpets, and the same ceremonies have been observed for centuries.

Let Him Come Out.

Exert your talents and distinguish yourself, and don't think of retiring from the world until the world will be sorry that you retire. If you follow some profession, or avocation, or business, retire into a corner, and who does anything when he is there but eat and drink and sleep. Let your talents come out and be seen and known.—Dr. S. Johnson.

KING GEORGE OF GREECE.

He Has Recently Celebrated the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of His Reign.

King George of Greece has announced his intention to abdicate as soon as his son reaches the age of twenty-one; and the Greeks appear so willing to let him go that they are actually counting the months of his reign unusually splendid. There are good reasons for all this. King George himself is a Dane, but his wife, Queen Olga, is a Russian and a niece of the czar and very much beloved, not only because there is an affinity between Greek and Russian, which is lacking as to the Dane, but because she is a woman of rare ability, piety and charity. Add that her son, the Prince of Sparta, is a born Greek, and it is plain why the Hellenes should wish him to court celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of King George's accession. All classes joined heartily, and the wealthy Greeks of the neighboring countries contributed liberally. In the morning the king and crown prince took in state to the cathedral where the Te Deum (that is, the hymn in the Greek church which corresponds to the Catholic Te Deum) was performed in the presence of the royal family and many guests. At the palace the king appeared on the balcony to an immense crowd in the street, thanking the people for their loyalty. The day closed with a grand reception in the throne room of the palace of all the foreign representatives and distinguished guests. Among the rest Mr. Fearn, United States minister, presented a congratulatory telegram from President Cleveland.

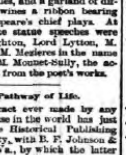
The Palace of Athens, the royal residence, is among the most striking buildings in the renewed and half modernized capital. It is a magnificent three story dwelling of white stone, near Mount Lycabettus, and its architecture and general style are those of a pleasing compromise between the modern and the classical or antique. One of the interesting facts about the Greece of today is that the Greek kingdom itself contains less than three million people, of whom nearly half are non-Hellenic, the neighboring countries contain about six million pure Greeks, and they all look to Greece as the land of their patriotic pride. Thus Greeks (or, more properly, Hellenes) who have lived in Smyrna, Alexandria, Constantinople and other ports for several generations still look on Hellas as the "the house of the soul," the fatherland. So it was, their eldest historians say, 2,500 years ago, when the Greeks of Gaul and Libya, Egypt and Asia Minor, and the ports of the Black sea, spoke of themselves collectively as "sporadic Hellas," and were proud of their privilege to contend in the Olympic games. Among these Greeks of neighboring countries are very many wealthy merchants, who contribute liberally to the institutions of Athens, the result is that Athens is now more fully furnished with schools and libraries than any other eastern city of its size.

Shakespeare's Statue in Paris.

If the European traveler and lover of Shakespeare, when he stays over in Paris for the conventional eight seeing, will take a walk down the Boulevard Haussman to where it is intersected by the Avenue de Messine, his eyes will now be greeted by a statue of the immortal bard. This statue of Shakespeare, recently erected, was presented to the city of Paris by Mr. William Knighton, and is the work of Paul Fournier. As is shown by the cut of the statue given herewith Mr. Fournier has represented the poet as he is commonly known to us. It is conventional. Shakespeare holds in his right hand an open book, and stands upright, with the mantle draped over his left arm. On the front of the statue are the words "William Shakespeare, 1564-1616." The sides are ornamented by four sickles, and a garland of different fruits entertwines a ribbon bearing the names of Shakespeare's chief plays. At the unveiling of the statue speeches were made by Mr. Knighton, Lord Lytton, M. Jules Claretie and M. Mezieres in the name of the Academie. M. Monnet-Sully, the actor, recited passages from the poet's works.



SHAKESPEARE IN PARIS.

Talmage's Pathway of Life.

The largest contract ever made by any book publishing house in the world has just been closed by the Haverdell Publishing company, of this city, with B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., by which the latter purchases 250,000 copies of the "Pathway of Life" as from the pen of the world's most eloquent preacher, T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., all of whose works that are published in the next several years will be brought out by them, a contract having been signed a few days ago to that effect. The book is now in now in press, to be ready about Nov. 1. The magnitude of this purchase will be better understood when it is known that the book retails at from $3.50 to $5 per copy, according to the style of binding, so that the transaction represents nearly $500,000.—Philadelphia Telephone.

IT IS DELIVERED BY CARRIERS TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY AT TEN CENTS A WEEK, 45c. IF PAID IN ADVANCE, AT $5.00 PER YEAR.

JOTTINGS.

—Gamble Engine house is being fitted up with steam-heating apparatus.

—The Democrats have hauled in their Plainfield banner and have torn down their borough wigwam.

—Van Emburgh & White offer special inducements to buyers of dress goods for Thursday. Their advertisement bespeaks this fact.

—Do not put too much trust in the grocer who advises you not to use Tulip soap. His object is to sell you some other soap at a larger profit to himself, according to the manufacturers.

—At a meeting of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society held Monday evening the members decided to tender their friends an evening sociable in the T. A. B. Association Hall, Thanksgiving Eve.

—The original line of march of Monday night's Republican parade was officially furnished to THE NEWS by the City Executive Committee, who failed to give notification of the changes subsequently made.

—Mr. H. E. Taylor, of New York city, has been engaged to lead the Gospel and song service at the Y. M. C. A. rooms Friday evening. Members and friends are urged to begin at once to secure the attendance of some other man at this service.

—The Central Railroad of New Jersey has been experiencing a wonderful increase in passenger traffic since the first of this year. It is claimed, in fact, that the Company handled 7,000,000 excursionists in that time on its various divisions.

—Mr. W. E. Taylor, of Newark, will lead the gospel and song service at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-morrow evening. Mr. Taylor has had large experience in evangelistic work, and his words earnest address will be remembered in connection with a recent meeting at the rooms.

—Several stage-loads of Plainfield Republicans participated in the Harrison jubilee parade at Dunellen last evening and speak very highly of the procession, the illuminations and the enthusiasm exhibited therein. Some ugly Democrats attempted to make trouble by following with banners inscribed "Free Whiskey" and "Free Tobacco". The Republicans smashed the banners and drove the offenders away.

—At about this time the earth crosses the meteoric stream which it annually encounters during this month, and the display of "falling stars" may be a grand spectacle if the atmosphere is clear. The belt is not very broad at the point of contact this year, yet some displays may be brilliant. Two years hence the whole of the star stream will be encountered and an unusually attractive exhibition may be anticipated.

—At least half a dozen prominent Plainfield Democrats have declared since election that they will never again vote the Democratic ticket, because of the elevation of such a man as Hill to the Governorship of New York and his knifing by Democrats of Cleveland. The Evening Post suggests "David B. Hill for President, Harry Hill for Governor of New York in 1892." Such a ticket would raise Hill generally. Isn't that pleasant to contemplate!

PERSONAL.

The family of Mr. Theodore French, of East Fifth street, will spend the Winter in the South.

Mr. R. F. M. Chase and wife returned yesterday from their Summer trip to Europe, and are again domiciled at their beautiful mountain home, Edgewood.

Prominent citizens are urging Mayor Job Male to accept re-nomination. He has said to those who have waited on him that he will accept if the nomination be made unanimous.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Martin I. Cooley, on Rockview avenue, North Plainfield, will be thrown open to the young people of the North Baptist church this week Thursday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wheeler, of Madison avenue, celebrated their golden wedding last Thursday evening. The gifts were all of gold, including a purse of $2,500 in gold coin from the four children.

Mr. Lewis Morris Timpson, formerly of New York city, will be married to Miss Mary Frances Waring, daughter of ex-Councilman Orville Taylor Waring, in Grace church this evening at seven o'clock.

Judge Louis F. Wadsworth, of Plainfield, who has grown white-haired in political work, was Chairman of the Union County Board of Assessors at Elizabeth Saturday, when table of election returns published in to-day's NEWS was declared official.

In a valedictory address to President David J. Hill, late of Bucknell University but now about to succeed Dr. Martin E. Anderson as President of the University of Rochester, Chauncey B. Ripley, LL.D., on behalf of the alumni of Bucknell, says: "I voice the sentiment of both colleges, of their alumni, their patrons and friends, when I say that 'We can wish you no greater success at the University of Rochester—we can wish the University of Rochester no greater good—than that you attain to the exalted station among college presidents which your illustrious predecessor has so long and so worthily held. Or, as you yourself have so well expressed a kindred sentiment, 'May the old and the new be united in the most perfect manner and that the two administrations form coherent parts of a higher unity.'"

The milk dealers of Salem have announced that they will serve no more customers on Sundays during the next four months. The reason for the change of front is a general one in part of the people of Salem to have a blue law observance of the first day of the week.

CHESS, CHECKERS AND WHIST.

A New Plainfield Club to Welcome State Players.

The Plainfield Chess Club has become the Plainfield Chess, Checker and Whist Club with headquarters at the rooms of the Camera Club over Crane's hat store, No. 12 Park avenue. The chess, checker and whist players of Plainfield are invited to be present Thursday evening, Nov. 15th to complete the re-organization. It is desirable that as many as can will come. If any wish to join who cannot then be present they may send their names and addresses to Mr. C. L. Murphy, Secretary. In view of the fact that the New Jersey State Chess Association will hold its next annual meeting here, it is hoped that the Club will become a strong and prosperous one in the interim and be ready to extend a hearty and warm greeting to the players from other parts of the State, and show them at the same time that Plainfield is still worthy of the name it has always held.

THE PLAINFIELD CAMERA CLUB.

The First Annual Exhibition.—A Splendid Display.

What have our friends of the Camera Club been doing the past Summer—since we saw the work of some of them at the Y. M. C. A. parlor? What records can they show us of their outings by sea or lake or mountain?

An interesting answer to these questions will be found hanging on the walls of three rooms on Park avenue next week, each evening and each afternoon, except Monday. Let all take a peep at the exhibit and encourage the Club to even greater efforts. Some of the landscapes and a few of the portraits and instantaneous effects are among the finest to be seen anywhere.

At about nine o'clock each evening flash-light pictures of those present will be taken by some one of the Club's members.

KEEPING UP POLITICAL STRIFE.

Hot Blood Still Runs in Bernardsville.

The Democrats of Bernardsville, Somerset county, have been much annoyed of late by the persistency of their Republican brethren in arranging processions to celebrate the election of Harrison. The central figure on these occasions have always been effigies of President Cleveland in the most grotesque shapes. The Democrats now propose to retaliate by holding a procession to-night with an arrangement in the shape of a large boat containing the effigy of Oscar Spalding, the present Republican Assemblyman from that town, who was a week ago defeated for re-election by Joseph Klotz, of Belle Meade. The whole outfit is to be painted "Off for Salt Creek".

Mrs. Shaw Gets a Divorce.

Mrs. Alice J. Shaw, the professional whistler who has taken up her home in Plainfield, has been granted by Judge Barrett, of New York, an absolute divorce from her husband, W. H. Shaw, to whom she was married at Elmira, N. Y., in 1873. Mrs. Shaw's maiden name was Horton. She says that Mr. Shaw set out three years ago, after a business failure, to make another fortune, and adds that she had not heard from him since. She has four daughters.

He Wears Her Hat to Church.

A young man and young woman of Westfield made a peculiar agreement. If Harrison won the young man was to wear the lady's hat to church, and if Cleveland were elected the young lady would wear the young man's hat to church. It is said that the young man intends to keep his part of the contract.

Republicans to Re-Organize.

There will be a meeting of the Republican Clubs of Plainfield at Headquarters over the City National Bank to-morrow night to effect permanent organization.

A post-office has been established at Allenhurst, Monmouth county. This is the famous Russian Refugee colony established in the Jersey pines in 1882 by the Hebrew Aid Society, when the Jews were forced to leave Russia on account of hostilities. The post-office has been long needed. Alliance has of late been formed into a prosperous little settlement with several stores, schools and a synagogue. The Forges have been established their mail at Vineland a distance of three miles. The new postmaster is George S. Seldes.

"RIP VAN WINKLE."

Jefferson's Company Please a Large Plainfield Audience.

Washington Irving's romantic Catskill legend of "Rip Van Winkle" entertained a large audience containing many people of culture in Stillman Music Hall last night. The delightful vagabond, "Rip", was of course impersonated by Mr. Joseph Jefferson, who has grown white-haired in his many years of faultlessly acting the part. The support was good, from Emma Vaders as "Gretchen" of little Harold Kidder as "Meenie" and little Van Winkle as "Hendrick". The baby actors were thoroughly pleasing, especially at that point where "Gretchen" catches them talking of ghosts and love-making and where they hastily leave their childish embraces and un-comically walk home.

Edwin Arrey—known in private life at his home in Plainfield as Mr. Phillips—was as admirable an actor in the role of "Derrick Von Beekman" as "Derrick" as a man is repulsive. One of his Queen City friends threw him a handsome bouquet.

The other parts were as follows: "Cockels", George Denham; Nick "Vedder", H. J. Goodwin; "Jacob Stein", E. Waters: "Clausen", Joshih Warren; "Hendrick Hudson", Charles Duval; "Dwarf", James McCann; "Seth", Joseph Arrey; "Schneider", Genevra Ingersoll; and the grown-up "Meenie" and "Hendrick", May Woolcott and Geo. F. Nash.

There was the closest attention to the play, which has been so long a favorite; and resounding applause followed breathless silence from the audience.

Rip Van Winkle Cadmus, who saw "Rip" when it was first produced on the stage, nearly fifty years ago, was again an interested spectator last night.

THE Y. M. C. A. GYMNASIUM.

The Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham Advocates the Project.

The following is an extract from a sermon delivered by the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham last Sunday on "The Claims of Young Men".

"It will be said by many of you that the urgent need of our young men is not for any material structure but for spiritual endowment. Undoubtedly that is true. But is it reflected on the relation of the spiritual to the material; and, more, the dependence of the spiritual on the material? Is not religion in truth and grace? Have you remarked that the fathered and immortal God depends on a physical body? Have you remarked that the sight benevolent societies of our own church have to be demolished for and devoted to the simple erection of material churches, and this because experience has shown — and shown beyond all controversy—that the redemption messages and resources of Heaven and the redemption wants of men alike wait on a material building? Have you remarked in your own present experience as a church the wise and glad liberality of some of our number and the cordial congratulations of all our intelligent friends in the community at large as to a material structure, because in this its due prosperity and power as to God or men depended on such a material structure? Have you remarked the passionate zeal of David and Solomon over a material temple? —a zeal expressed in burning words of exhortation, prayer, praise, and, better yet, in richest gifts and endeavors—and for this reason: that God was God in Israel, as his Temple was; that Israel was God's Israel, and God Israel's God in a Temple in which God could speak and if which men could hear and worship. And so you may be sure that in lamentable measure the spiritual mission of our young men will be compromised and their spiritual opportunities lost to what of God and to sight of men, until they have a suitable structure for their work and worship—to say you called, as in you lies, in all cheerful liberality to respond to their appeal in this respect."

Elopers Pass Plainfield.

Charles Ruggaber, age sixteen, a clerk earning four dollars a week in a Trenton carpet store, has eloped with Lena Holz, age thirteen, daughter of Anton Holz, a wealthy German in the produce commission business. The boy and girl have been neighbors for several years. They were first missed Sunday night. They have been traced as far as Jersey City, whither they went by way of the Jersey Central, passing through Plainfield.

To Connect With the Central.

Engineers of the Baltimore and Ohio and the New Jersey Central Railroad Companies will meet some time this week to decide on the connection between the Jersey Central and the Baltimore and Ohio's new line to the Arthur-Kill bridge. The tracks will be connected at some point between Roselle and Elmora, the first station beyond Roselle.

VOORHEES OR FOWLER?

The Courts to Decide Which Is Congressman.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Nov. 13.—There will probably be a contest in the courts over the Congressional seat in the Fourth District of New Jersey between Fowler (Dem.) and Voorhees (Rep.). The official returns give Fowler forty-two plurality over Voorhees, but it is claimed that the returns were tampered with before they were canvassed by the Board of Canvassers. Before the official count was made Voorhees had 103 plurality over Fowler.

WESTFIELD DETECTIVES.

A War Association That Still Thrives.

At the last meeting of the Westfield Thief Detective Association the following officers were elected: Dr. Gale, President; Levi Cory, Vice President; J. S. Irving, Treasurer; James M. French, Secretary. These officers will be in power until next March, when the charter expires, and the organization will then be reorganized.

The society has quite a history. At the close of the war a band of thieves was infested by horse thieves and robbers, men who had been discharged from the army, that the governing council passed a law granting permission to all towns to organize detective societies for mutual protection. Members of these societies had the power not only to arrest a thief, but they could also, if necessary, follow him throughout the State without regard to county lines. Westfield, then only a cluster of houses, availed itself of this opportunity for protection and obtained a charter for twenty years. Since then the society has held together wonderfully, and some very effective work has been done by its members in the way of ridding the town and surrounding country of horse-breakers and horse thieves.

ASSAULT ON A SIX-YEAR-OLD GIRL.

A Serious Charge Against an Elizabeth Married Man.

John Weston, an Elizabeth foundryman, lies in jail at New Brunswick, charged with attempting a criminal assault on Nellie McElroy, the six-year-old daughter of James McElroy, of Prospect street, New Brunswick. Weston was apprehended by the police while attempting his nefarious purpose, and before after the crime had been committed. The little girl, who had unfortunately the father of the attempted outrage as soon as she made her escape from Weston's hands, rehearsed the story to her parents, and Weston was quickly incarcerated in the jail. An inquiry will be made in the case to-morrow. The prisoner denies the charge in every particular. He is a married man and, is said to have a family in Elizabeth.

Foot-Ball Thanksgiving.

The Plainfield Foot-Ball Team have arranged a game with the Summit eleven, to be played the morning of Thanksgiving Day on the East Front street grounds.

"The Only Newspaper"—Of Its Kind.

If Benjamin Harrison is the choice of the people against Grover Cleveland and the Tariff Reform principles he advocates, then the public school system of this country, its colleges, the C. L. S. C., and other schemes of education, are failures.—Plainfield Press.

To a man who could get such stuff at that every scheme of education must have been a failure of the most dismal character, and he himself a monumental proof of his own assertions.—Elizabeth Journal.

We found that out long ago, as have the people generally in this vicinity.

But that, for the paper which could print such stuff, there is a faint glimmer of hope seems evinced in the following from its edition of yesterday, concerning THE NEWS's banners, although it was evidently due to ignorance of the fact, that the paper gave itself away so badly. However, that it was capable of even appreciating the underlying motive which prompted us gives the faint glimmer of hope referred to. Here is what it says:

A commendable feature of the parade, and one which showed the general good feeling among the two parties and gained much applause, was a banner containing the words: "Grover Must Go." Mayor Cooley, of North Plainfield, Alexander Tilsworth, Julian Scott and Sidney L. Flower, the latter two Democrats. On the left of the carriage was a banner with the words: "We are all Americans, Nevertheless," and on the right was a banner, bearing the inscription: "Blest be the tie that binds us."

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The Republicans of Chatham township held a grand jollification meeting at their headquarters at Madison on Monday night. After addresses in the hall they formed in line and paraded through the streets, a number of residences were beautifully illuminated.

W. H. Applegate, of Elberon, lived in New Brunswick in 1884, and was one of a number of men who vowed they would not leave until a Republican was elected President. Blaine was defeated but, so far as is known Applegate is the only man who has kept his vow to die. His beard had grown very long in the meantime and Saturday he appeared in town with his whiskers cut off and his face shaved.

State Comptroller Anderson is still confined to his home in Somerville, Somerset county. His fractured ankle is entirely knitted and in good condition. He is now convalescing from a severe attack of pneumonia. It will be a month before he can be about. He is out of bed and goes about the house in an invalid chair. He is cheerful and frankly talks of the time when he will again be on duty at the State Capitol.

To-day, for the first time in thirty-eight years, old Mose Fitzpatrick, the veteran switchman at Trenton, has taken a vacation. He is one of the oldest and most faithful employes on the Lehigh Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad. He has for the long period of thirty-eight years been at his post of duty at five o'clock every morning. Attire I in his best to-day to this morning he took a train for Philadelphia to visit relatives.

A man who gave his name as Frank Longstein was arrested at Summit, on his way to sight by Policeman Walsh while acting in a very strange manner. Longstein is now a raving maniac. He tried to hang himself in a number with a bed-quilt last night, but Policeman Walsh cut him down. He now has a brother named Michael at 128 Prince street, Newark, and claims to belong in Pittsburg. He is still locked up pending an investigation.

Walton Bros., coal dealers, of 35 Market and Essex Railroad avenue, Newark, who were recently acquitted of the charge of selling short weight coal, preferred by John Miller, of 58 South Orange avenue, have instituted proceedings against Miller, claiming $20,000 damages for false and malicious prosecution. A. Q. Keasbey & Sons represent the firm. Miller's trial, which resulted in the acquittal of the Waltons, took place in the Quarter Sessions Court Oct. 31st and Nov. 1st.

The body of a man was found hanging to a tree on Elwood avenue, near Mount Prospect avenue, Woodside, at 11 o'clock this morning. The police were at once notified. The man seems to be a German about forty years of age, and from his appearance had but lately arrived from Germany. No clue to his identity could be discovered, save a pawn ticket and some lunch were found in his pockets. He must have hanged himself during the night, for a person passing by saw him there at about seven o'clock this morning, but having thought that he was asleep under the tree. The rope used was thin, and so long that the suicide's feet just cleared the side-walk. County Physician Hewett was informed of the matter.

The Republicans of Morristown held a jollification Monday night which far eclipsed all previous efforts in this direction. The parade comprising 600 or 800 persons, with big bands of music and a number of fine historical floats, marched over the principal streets. Hous s and places of business along the line of march were handsomely illuminated. Just as the procession started a horse attached to one of the floats became frightened and ran away, throwing the load of boys and effects along the route. At Geiger & Smith's corner he took the sidewalk, knocking down and trampling upon a number of boys, two seriously hurt being Thomas Langdon, Recorder Cheesman's coachman, who had an arm and several ribs broken, and who is in a critical condition.

Elizabethtort was well represented in the Vice-Chancellor's Chambers in Newark yesterday morning, when Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet listened for an hour to a detailed analysis of the chemical properties of glue. The Board of Health of Elizabeth, through City Attorney Ryan, applied for a permanent writ of injunction to restrain James E. Hedges, manager of the Elizabeth Glue Company, from continuing the manufacture of glue. The Board of Health, through City Attorney Ryan, claims that the manufacture of glue is a nuisance, and Weston was quickly incarcerated in the jail. An inquiry will be made in the case to-morrow. The prisoner denies the charge in every particular. He is a married man and, is said to have a family in Elizabeth.

The funeral of Frederic A. Potts, deceased President of the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad, and formerly a resident of Plainfield, took place yesterday morning, at Zion Protestant Episcopal church in New York city. The services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. C. C. Tiffany. The body was taken to Woodlawn for burial.

The church was filled to the doors with friends and business associates of Mr. Potts. The directors of the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad occupied seats together, and the Rev. Dr. Tiffany read the Lesbeth. N. J., attended in a body. A large number of Union League Club members were also present.

The pall-bearers were: Garret A. Hobart, N. J. Gates, Charles Parish, H. Holden, Edwin Gould, George G. Haven, Alexander Dodd and E. K. Wright. Among those present were: Ex-Senator William J. Sewell, William Walter Phelps, S. V. White, James M. Hartshorn, R. K. Dow, Henry Sanford, John King, F. H. Leggett, J. H. Parker, Alexander Lesley, Charles Scribner, George S. Hart, Joseph T. Moore, F. S. Tallmadge, James M. Montgomery, Henry E. Leroy, John B. Ireland, William G. Hamilton, W. H. Starbuck, S. G. French, Albert Darling, John D. Wilson, G. F. Herbert, F. A. Sperry, John Case, R. B. Hoyt, C. K. Cree and H. B. Coxe. James Seligman, Joseph H. Harris and F. B. Olcott.

SHOT FOR SILVER COIN.

Uncle Sam's Money Stolen While in Transit.

DETECTIVES DEEPLY PUZZLED.

In Spite of Great Precaution and Double Guard the Coin Is Extracted and Replaced with Lead—Inaugural Preparations and Other Washington Gossip.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14. — The treasury officials have discovered that they have been robbed of new silver dollars. "It is not a theft by any means they do not yet know. The secret service detectives are making an investigation. The mint at New Orleans has been overflowed with new silver coin, and to relieve it the department is shipping millions of dollars to Washington to be stored in the new silver vault in the treasury courtyard. The money is shipped in sealed wooden boxes, each containing two bags of $1,000 each. When one of these bags was opened at the department, a day or two ago, it was found to contain nothing but shot. A second box was opened and one of the bags in it was found to contain nothing more valuable than shot.

The matter was at once reported to the secretary of the treasury and by him referred to the secret service officers, who are making a most rigid and searching investigation.

The boxes are carefully sealed before they leave the mint, and guarded on the train. They are taken from the train to the mint and into the treasury in a large express wagon, ringed in on all sides with heavy steel wire and guarded by representatives of the express company and of the treasury, who are heavily armed and sit on the wire inside the cage. Every care that can be thought of is taken to guard against a loss, and the detectives say that so far as they know it was possible to substitute the shot for silver dollars.

It is impossible at this time to tell how extensive the robbery has been. The loss was first brought to the attention of Acting Secretary Thompson on Wednesday morning, the day after the election, and he put the detective force to work on the case.

Investigation showed that small amounts had been taken from each of a number of boxes. The department will probably hold the express company responsible, but it will take some time to learn the extent of the loss. The robbery was discovered when the seals of the boxes were examined. It was found that instead of the government seal put on at New Orleans the wax bore the impression of a silver quarter. The original seal had been broken, the money abstracted and this method of hiding the fraud had been resorted to. Mr. Bell, chief of the secret service, believes that the thieving was done after the boxes left the mint and before they were delivered at the treasury department. He says that the express company is responsible; that if the seals of the locks do not agree the packages had done the stealing they would certainly have used the government seal to fasten the boxes again.

INAUGURAL PREPARATIONS.

Mr. A. T. Britton has appointed Mr. George B. Lemon chairman of the committee on finance to receive subscriptions for defraying the expenses of the inaugural ceremonies. Mr. Lemon at once prepared a subscription book, and before noon had $3,000. Mr. Britton has also appointed Mr. Hilary A. Herbert, president of the Columbia National bank, as treasurer of the inauguration committee.

Postmaster Ross arrived home yesterday afternoon, and the first thing he did was to call on his stepdaughter's illness. Among the first persons he saw upon his arrival here was a committee of citizens, composed of Messrs. Cox, Parker and others, who called on him for the purpose of securing his cooperation in the plans looking to a postponement of the inauguration of the city pending the pension building, so that the inaugural ball can be held there. Mr. Ross expressed his desire to further the wishes of the public in this matter, and said he would at once have an interview with the postmaster general on the subject.

SACKVILLE-WEST FAMILY PLANS.

The Baroness Sackville-West and the Misses Sackville-West will be unable to accept Lord Stanley's invitation to visit him at government house in Ottawa. They will sail direct for Paris when they reach New York from here. There they will visit Mr. and Mrs. Gabriel Saloman for a few days. Then they will go to London, and will be the guests of Lady Derby, and Lord Sackville will consider some arrangements about the possession of Knole. It has not been decided whether they will spend the winter at Cannes, in the South of France, or accept an invitation from Lord and Lady Lansdowne to visit them in India.

THIS WEDDING TAKES PLACE THURSDAY.

It is officially announced that the marriage of Miss Endicott and Mr. Joseph Chamberlain will take place at 2 o'clock on Thursday afternoon at St. John's Episcopal church across Lafayette park from the White House. Everything about the wedding will be solidmly quiet. Invitations have been issued only to the president and Mrs. Cleveland, the members of the cabinet and their families and to the immediate friends of Miss Endicott. Miss Endicott will be married in traveling costume.

ANOTHER POSTMASTER RESIGNS.

Dr. A. D. Markley, postmaster of Hatboro, Montgomery county, Pa., went to Washington with his resignation in his pocket. He is an old time Democrat, and thinks it time for him to go when the Republicans are vested with power. Before sending in his resignation he said that he wanted to go out at the head of his party, and he believed his was the first Democratic resignation to follow the defeat. He took his resignation to the post-office department, and then called at the White House.

A CANE FOR THE PRESIDENT.

A delegation from the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer of New York presented Mr. Cleveland with a cane voted to him at a recent church fair.

President Cleveland Eulogized.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The County Democracy, at its meeting last night, adopted resolutions eulogizing President Cleveland for showing the dictates of duty in attempting to reduce the surplus as a part of the reasonable burden of unnecessary taxation; declaring that the attempt had aroused the hostility of monopolists, whose contributions to the Republican funds, and whose published statements to workmen caused the defeat of the proposed policy, and expressing confidence in his future usefulness. The resolutions declare that New York city cast an increased vote for the ticket, and if the rest of the country had done as well President Cleveland would have been re-elected.

Killed by Dynamite.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 14.—Michael Gormley, an ex-policeman, and John Hayes, a local politician, while working in their stone quarry attempted to remove some dynamite adhering to a drill, when the exploded, Gormley was instantly killed, the discharge blowing off the right side of his head. Hayes, who is fatally injured, had both legs broken and his body terribly mangled.

GATHERING OF BISHOPS.

Annual Session of the Protestant Episcopal Missionary Council.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Epiphany church was the scene of a notable gathering. The missionary council of the Protestant Episcopal church convened there for its annual session. Shortly after 10 o'clock the clerical and lay members of the council began to enter the church and take the seats reserved near the altar. Presently the music of the processional was started from the organ. From a side door in the chancel issued the long procession of the bishops. They all wore the bishops' gown of white lawn and black silk, that of Bishop Doane having the full cape of Oxford university. The solemn service of the church was at once begun. Among those in the chancel were the following: Bishop Williams, of Connecticut; Watson, of North Carolina; Knickerbocker, of Indiana; Whitaker, of Pennsylvania; Thompson, of Mississippi; Peterson, of West Virginia; Gilbert, of Minnesota; Coleman, of Delaware; Doane, of Albany; Walker, of Dakota; Johnston, of West Texas, and Burgess, of Quincy.

The sermon was delivered by Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota. He is regarded in the church as the apostle of the Indians, and during his long episcopate of twenty-nine years has done a great deal for the cause of the red men.

In beginning his discourse the bishop repeated some of the Bible promises as to the glory and success of the church. He spoke of the growth of the missions in Australia and in the islands of the South Pacific. He reviewed the work done in China and Japan, and commended the heroism of the missionaries in the vicinity of the Hudson Bay. In conclusion, he commended all to greater diligence and faith.

The communion service was then held, which was participated in by the members of the council.

In a few moments Bishop Williams, who is the presiding bishop of the council, came upon the altar, followed by the secretary of the council, Rev. Dr. Langford, of New York. The council was called by the secretary. After recess the reports of the various organizations of the church were read.

Another session was held this evening. At the evening session a resolution was passed looking to the establishment of a school for the education of colored men to do mission ary work among colored people. Nashville and Washington presented claims, but no site for the school was determined upon.

K. OF L. GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Auspicious Opening of the Annual Session—Organization Quickly Effected—Mr. Powderly Chokes Off T. B. Barry.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 14.—There are 308 accredited delegates to the Knights of Labor general assembly, which began its session this afternoon. The assembly was called to called to order by Grand Master Workman Powderly, who did not arrive until morning, the committee on credentials reported that contests and protests concerning delegates District Assembly 49, of New York, presents the most serious case, arising out of the contention between James R. Sovereign and Philip J. McGraff, both of whom claim to be master workman of the district. Quinn represents the Home rule faction, and favors Powderly administration. The trouble between the factions began over heavy expenditures made years ago by the Quinn people in purchasing a home. The assembly has used the district many thousand members, but in settling the question as to delegates temporarily a union representative was allowed. A protest was also presented through the mail from A. Schilling, of Chicago, who represents the Socialists. He a denied admission to the hall until the question is settled.

A large number of ex-general officers attending the convention are entitled to the floor of the assembly, but they were ore ated from participating in the discussions. In regard to this action T. B. Barry, who is leading the opposition to Powderly, said his case was one of appeal from the action of the executive board in which he was tried and had resigned. He proposes to carry the fight to the furthest limits. Out of this may grow a new organization, or may not. But account the Federation of Miners and Mine Laborers is watching the proceedings with great interest.

Before the assembly, also, will come the appeals on the action of Master Workman Kilcsmith in suspending Armstrong and Commercial assemblies of this city for the disagreeing fall out. Hall, who, it is charged, was employed to circulate the charges against Gen. Harrison relative to his position in the railway strike of 1877, as well as other matters of similar character. Powderly, in the delegate from district assembly 100, over which Kilcsmith presides.

In the afternoon session a prolonged discussion occurred on the advisability of appointing a legislative committee, the opponents to the proposition maintaining that it would conflict with the duties of committee of that character which meets in Washington during sessions of congress. It was decided, however, to appoint the committee, but its province is confined to investigating questions for transmission to the regular legislative committee.

Committees were appointed on laws, appeals, grievances, finance, state of the order, secret work and press.

Hugh Cavanaugh, of Cincinnati, is chairman of the finance committee.

Today the annual reports of the officers were taken up in order of business that will likely consume two days.

Public Bequests.

BOSTON, Nov. 14.—The late B. F. Conant, of Boston, provided in his will that upon the death of Helen E. Granger there shall be paid to the town of Winchester $20,000 for a library. The late Joseph W. Conant's estate is to go to the New England Hospital for Women and Children.

The supreme court having decided that under the will of the late John Tyler Morgan his estate is to be distributed among charitable institutions, there was a hearing before Judge Allen on Saturday on a general scheme recommended by the attorney general. Several institutions presented their claims, and Judge Allen will consider the matter. The attorney general recommended that $5,000 be awarded to the Sailors' Snug Harbor, Quincy, $5,000 to the New Bedford Port society, $5,000 to the Seamen's Friend society, $5,000 to Salem Marine society, $2,500 to the Salem Marine society and $1,500 to the Home for Little Wanderers, Boston.

Insanity and Suicide.

GLEN FALLS, N. Y., Nov. 14.—Lachs Bullard, aged 72, hanged himself in a barn owned by his nephew. Mr. Bullard had shown signs of mental weakness, and he told some friends that his relatives had put him out of doors because he had voted the Democratic ticket at the last election. He was probably influenced by this delusion to commit suicide.

To Inspect Signal Stations.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Second Lieut. W. D. Wright, of the signal corps has been ordered to inspect the signal stations at Block Island, Mass.; Manchester, N. H.; Portland and Eastport, Me.; Northfield, Vt.; Albany, N. Y.; New Haven and New London, Conn.; and Providence, R. I.

CABINET MAKERS BUSY.

Many Men Suggested for Few Places.

ALL ARE WORKING IN THE DARK.

The President-Elect Has Nothing to Say. A Statement That Mr. Blaine Will Not Be In the Cabinet—Suggestions As to Who Will Be.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—President-elect Harrison is about the only man in the country now who is not making cabinet suggestions. All the politicians and newspapers are discussing Mr. Blaine's desires and chances, suggesting places for other prominent Republicans and anticipating a general scramble. All the papers of this city are theorizing on the subject, and yesterday the Tribune (Rep.), which is probably as well informed as any other, owing to its standing in the party, discusses the situation as follows:

"Junius G. Blaine is the material of one picked up first by most of the cabinet makers. He will not be in the cabinet. It will be high, and the time enough for him, and perhaps satisfactory enough for his friends in and out of the party, to know that he might, if he chose, be the secretary of state. Nor is it at all probable that Mr. Blaine will go abroad. He will spend the winter in Washington engaged in building up his private resources and the preparation of another book. It is a possible, too, that with Frye or Hale in the cabinet, or out of the country, Mr. Blaine might sit in the senate. Senator Frye likes his present place well enough, and Senator Hale has refused cabinet positions. Perhaps he would prefer an important foreign mission to the humdrum of Washington life; Mr. Blaine would be popular in the capital city than some others do, he could find it lively abroad most likely.

"Senator Hawley and Senator Platt are spoken of as members of the cabinet somewhere they are. Morgan Bulkeley, late candidate for governor, evidently has the start in him for any high place, and there is Butterfingers.

We sat together at the game
(The sad remembrance lingers),
A foul was knocked—my hands—it dropped—
She called me "butterfingers."

That night I breathed to her my love
(The sweet remembrance lingers),
I asked her madly for her "Yes;"
She gave me—but her fingers.

—Harvard Lampoon.

Where They Go.

Miss De Smith—Did it never occur to you, Mr. Peachey, that there were musical tones in the murmurs of the trees?

Mr. Peachey—Certainly; and they are all finally transposed into cords of wood.—Burlington Free Press.

No Assets.

"Grindstone, I am sorry to learn that you have been compelled to make an assignment. Will you be able to save anything out of the wreck?"

"All I can save, Kilfordan, will be my own self respect, an incorruptible name."

"Grindstone, you shock me. I had heard it was a bad break up, but I didn't know it was a total smash."—Chicago Tribune.

Where Brains Don't Count.

A St. Louis doctor has removed the brains from a dozen different frogs and healed the wound and let them go. They went away as if nothing had happened out of the usual, and it was plain that they had lost nothing of value. A frog which depended on his brains instead of his legs would stand a mighty poor show in a puddle near a school house.—Detroit Free Press.

What the Doctor Pronounced It.

"What did the doctor pronounce your ailment?" inquired the wife, with a tremor of anxiety in her tone as she came into her husband's sick room.

"He pronounced it as if it were spelled bronkeetus," exclaimed the indignant Bostonian, straightening himself up in bed, "and I requested him at once to make out his bill and go."—Chicago Tribune.

A Discriminative Taste.

Tom was reading a book in which each chapter was headed by a quotation from some poet. Many of these quotations were marked "Shakespeare" and others "Old Ballad." These scraps of poetry interested Tom greatly, and he remarked that "Shakespeare could beat Old Ballad writing all to pieces," thereby showing that his discrimination was ahead of his information.—New York World.

A Fatal Time.

Maud (who has answered the door bell herself)—George, you must not come into this house to-night! If you love me, darling, fly at once and do not let my father discover your presence!

George (tragically)—Oh, Maud, my darling! What serpent has entered our Eden to wreck our happiness? Speak, girl, speak!

Maud (tearfully)—Father has just come home with the gas bill.—Lowell Citizen.

Reduced to a System.

Two vagrants called on a kind lady in the suburbs of New York.

"To which of you two shall I give this chicken?" she asked.

First Tramp—Give it to him, madam. He has purchased the route from me, and I am just taking him around to introduce him to the customers.—Time.

Rich Late in Life.

Thurlow Weed, the eminent New York politician, never made a dollar until after he was 50. Horace Greeley was poor as a church mouse until about the same age—or until after The Tribune became a success.

How They Got There.

The metal balls inside the round sleigh bells are placed inside of the sand-core, which occupies the space inside the bell. In casting the sand-core is burned away and the piece of metal is closed in the bell form.

First German Newspaper.

The first German newspaper was Das Frankfurter Journal, published at the beginning of the Seventeenth century at Frankfurt-on-the Main.

The First Patent.

The first patent in America was issued in 1790 to Samuel Hopkins, of Philadelphia, for an improvement in the manufacture of potash.

Green Tomato Pickle.

For a pickle of green tomatoes slice one peck of green tomatoes and one dozen onions, sprinkle with salt and let stand until next day to drain. They may be drained by tying in a large cloth and hanging them up. The next day add one box of ground mustard, one and one-half ounces of black pepper, one ounce of mustard seed, one ounce of allspice. Half an ounce of whole cloves. Put in a kettle in alternate layers of tomatoes and onions. Sprinkle over the spice. Put the mustard in the vinegar and put on vinegar enough to cover the whole. Let it boil twenty minutes.

SLOW ADVANCE OF GENERAL LEARNING AMONG THE OSMANLI.

How Education Is Conducted in Stamboul. An American Traveler Inspects an Institution of Learning—Strict School Discipline—Only a Glimpse.

After the destruction of the janissaries, which some one reviewing the terrors of their reign called "only the execution of 40,000 murderers," their remarkable monarch, Mahmoud II., began the task of molding Turkey somewhat after a European model, and, though the country was distracted by internal feuds and burdened by wars with Russia, he set on foot many needed reforms and did not overlook the cause of education.

Academies were established in Constantinople, Adrianople, Trebizond, Salonica, Smyrna, Brousa and Bagdad, where literature and the sciences were to be taught. Military and naval schools were also instituted, some of which still exist. One, the college of Artillery and Engineering at Constantinople, is divided into four sections of twenty-five students each; the course of study extends over four years and is said to be remarkably good, as is also that of the military college at Pancaldi. The supply of students for these colleges is drawn from the preparatory schools above mentioned. There are also several elementary schools in Constantinople where the languages, writing, drawing, mathematics, geography and a little history are taught. Inquiry has shown me that the means of education—for those especially who are to be military boys—are not wanting; but the masses of pupils are confined still to the mosque schools, where instruction is limited to oral lessons from the Koran, which the presiding imam (teacher) delivers to them in the original Arabic, perfect gibberish, of course, to the children until explained, and he, I am told, is sure to translate only the most dogmatic and indolent portions.

AN INSTITUTION OF LEARNING.

It was our fortune to stumble into a large Turkish institution—part orphans' home, part school—one day when exploring old Stamboul, where we found so much to interest us that I am tempted to draw the picture for you. We were told that the imposing building before whose massive iron gateway we drew up was a school for girls. An air of mystery surrounded the exterior. The gate at which our driver was knocking looked as if it had never been used, and our effort to gain admittance there proved vain. At length another gate was found, and after a few raps of the knocker we succeeded in arousing a sleepy looking porter, who scanned us leisurely and then announced that "School is in session, but I will go and see if you can be admitted." During his absence we looked about and decided that though surrounded by high walls of solid masonry this was no girls' school, for the windows had neither curtains nor blinds, and were devoid of those close lattices which always screen the Turkish woman from the gaze of man.

Soon the porter returned and conducted our entire party up the well paved walk and a flight of marble steps and, without waiting for words to be exchanged introduction, we were shown into the private office of the director, who received us very courteously, even before he learned that we were a party of Americans. It was most gratifying to our national pride to see his face brighten and note the pleasure with which he extended to us the hand of welcome as soon as he knew our nationality. He escorted us through the establishment and informed us in pretty good French that they then had 400 orphan boys, besides a large number of day scholars, all of whom were required to don a uniform and submit to a rigid discipline. He showed us the dormitories, each with a long row of mattresses were hanging, all numbered, and we loitered walking through an immense dining hall where covers were laid for more than 400, he pointed to a table at one side where "the naughty boys were fed on bread and salt alone."

STUDENTS "IN DURANCE VILE."

He then took us to a prison on the ground floor, where they had at that time five irrepressible students "in durance vile," confined in box like cells, giving just room for one person, with a small ventilator near the top through which a few rays of light could enter. While we passed through the high empty halls, and from room to room, we saw no one but the two servants, who with heavy bundles of keys in hand followed the director and watched every move and motion with lynx eyed vigilance. We were shown through so many empty class rooms that we began to wonder if the porter had not been mistaken when he told us that the school was in session, when suddenly a door was thrown open and before us were about twenty lads with books and drawing material on their desks, and a teacher demonstrating to one a blackboard a simple problem in geometry. All stared at us with immovable features, and we as silently returned. We were then taken across an open court to a modern looking building, most beautifully and conveniently fitted up for a chemical laboratory. This, it was quite evident, was the pet and pride of the director. Here we were pressed to be seated, and coffee and cigarettes again offered the entire party.

When leaving the laboratory to return to our carriage our attention was arrested by a suppressed murmur of voices, and looking up to the windows of the long wards of face pressed against the panes. We stopped into our carriage and drove away, leaving all those motionless heads covered with the red fez always worn by the Turkish subjects and curious young eyes watching us, and yet perfect silence reigned! Such privacy, such stillness and order about a great institution like this I had not supposed could exist. Then we recall the fact that we spent more than two hours in the building and heard no sound but one or two footsteps and voices that of the director, and, except the one class of twenty youths and five we found ill in the hospital ward, saw no sign of life or activity. We might not have been surprised at hearing the 400 or 500 students the director had told us of, if we had not seen those faces in the windows. We could not learn but little regarding the course of instruction in this institution, but were greatly impressed with the rigid discipline.—Constantinople Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

More Dangerous Than Sewer Air.

Sloane recently reported an analysis, made at Dundee, Scotland, of the air of sewers and that of the close rooms of some of the well inhabited houses of the city, turned out to the advantage of the latter. And that is, the analysts found in small and ill ventilated houses more carbonic acid, more organic matter, and far more micro-organisms than in the sewer air they examined; so that, if the experiments were to be taken as final and conclusive, the inhabitants of a small room would inspire a higher position by living in the chimney of a sewer. This supposition is, of course, not to be thus taken; but it is worth while to point out to which the inference would be correct. It would be that drawn from it would be, not that sewer air is less dangerous than it is thought to be, but an admonition of the necessity for improving the sanitary condition of small houses.—Popular Science Monthly.

LOVE.

I love, too, to be loved: all loving praise
Seems like a crown upon my life—to make
It better worth the giving, and to raise
Still nearer to your own the heart you take.

I love all good and noble souls. I heard
One speak of you but lately, and for days,
Only to think of it, my soul was stirred
To tender memory of your every praise.

I love all those who love you: all who owe
Comfort to you: and I can find regret
Even for those poorer hearts who once could know
And once could love you, and can now forget.

Will you be jealous? Did you guess before
I loved so many things?—Still you the best—
Dearest, remember that I love you more,
Oh, more a thousand times, than all the rest!
—Adelaide Procter.

TWO PROFESSIONAL BEGGARS.

They Do an Act That Appeals to the Sympathies of Many.

"Come in, old fellow; you need something to warm you up. You are weak, and the night air is bad for a man in your condition."

The speaker was a young man who looked like a mechanic, and he was addressing a seedy looking man who appeared to be about 50 years old. They stood in front of a well known down town bar room, the elder leaning against a lamp post. His chin drooped upon his breast and his shoulders hung down limply. He looked like a laborer. When a party of gentlemen entered the store the pair followed them, the young man the while assuring the unemployed that he would do everything in his power to aid him.

"I guess some ale will do you more good than anything else," he said. The other did not reply, but drew his hand across his forehead and heaved a sigh. After drinking the ale he grasped the young man's hand and said: "My dear man, how can I ever repay your kindness? I'm out of work and I haven't got a cent. This is the first thing I have put in my stomach today. I haven't got a home or any friends to speak of. God bless you, young man; God bless you!"

"Oh, that's all right," answered the younger of the two, "I'd do the same for any one. You'd better come down home now. I'll get you a supper, too. I only wish I could buy you a new suit of clothes. I'll take you home with me tonight, and maybe I can get you a job somewhere."

They had been talking in a loud tone and apparently paying no attention to their surroundings. Hawking paid for the drinks, the young fellow with the big heart turned from the bar and approached a prosperous looking man who was reading a paper. He began to tell of the misfortunes of his companion and said he wanted to start a collection for his benefit right there. He had not talked long, when the latter took his hand and ran him out of the place in double quick time. The old man did not wait for any assistance, but left hurriedly.

"I know that pair well," said the bartender. "They are professional beggars and are making plenty of money out of that snap. But they can't work it in this place." The two men didn't seem to be at all crestfallen on account of their failure, and went directly to another bar room to try it again.—New York Tribune.

His Name Was Hill.

It is not often that Henry N. Willey, the polite assistant clerk at the Grand Pacific is nonplussed by any gag or trick perpetrated by the would be funny guests that quarter themselves at this popular hotel, but the evening that he was he was compelled to own up beaten. A serious looking individual, one who, it would seem, did not even know the nature of a joke, came in with satchel and umbrella, and, taking the pen the ever ready Willey always hands with a bow and a smile that twists his blonde mustache into a spectacular curve, he made nine perpendicular dashes on the register. It may be said right here that Mr. Willey has the reputation of knowing everybody, but it is only his cunning that has earned for him. He always watches a man registering, and has accustomed himself to reading letters upside down, so that when he catches the first few letters of a man's name he guesses at the rest, and when the guest has finished writing and looks up Mr. Willey at once calls him by his name, though he appears to be looking at anything else than the book. In this way it makes no difference if a man comes there for the first time in his life, Mr. Willey will surprise him by putting out his hand and calling the proper name.

On the occasion in question, however, Mr. Willey was done up; he had never seen the man before in his life, and the name struck him out of the straight lines. With his pet flourish he swung the register around and said "What price room do you want Mr.——? By the way, what do those lines mean, anyway? Might I ask your name?" "Oh, excuse me," said the stranger. "I neglected to sign my name, I see," and, taking up a pen, made a horizontal dash at about the middle and in between the first three pair of uprights, when the signature read, "H. H. Hill." Mr. Willey owned that for once that he was beaten.—Chicago Herald.

India's Upper Class Society.

Every person belonging to the European races, an Englishman, especially, well knows how much common meals tend to social sympathy; how powerful a factor they are in promoting pleasurable family existence, and in educating the young to good manners. There is nothing of this sort in Indian upper class society. There the men and women dine strictly apart, the women greatly on the leavings of the men, and that, too, in messes of degree very like those in a royal naval ship. Paterfamilias dines by himself, then the other men together in groups, according to standing, waited on by the women under fixed rules; and lastly the women, when the men have done, or poor young bride comes in for the remains, and should that of the director, and, except the one class of twenty youths and five we found ill in the hospital ward, saw no sign of life or activity. We might not have been surprised at hearing the 400 or 500 students the director had told us of, if we had not seen those faces in the windows. We could not learn but little regarding the course of instruction in this institution, but were greatly impressed with the rigid discipline.—Constantinople Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

FAVORITE HYMNS.

THE COMPOSITION OF WORLD FAMOUS DEVOTIONAL SONGS.

Phebe Cary's Poem, "Nearer Home," How "He Leadeth Me" Was Written. "I Would Not Live Always"—Origin of Cowper's Masterpiece.

Among modern hymns there is probably no greater favorite in Christian households than Phebe Cary's beautiful poem entitled, "Nearer Home." The circumstances of its composition are simple, and were told by its author in a few words in a letter written to the friend in whose dwelling the verses had their birth. "It was written," says Miss Cary, "in 1842. I composed it in the little back, third story bedroom on Sunday morning after coming from church, and it makes me very happy to think that any word I could say has done a little good in the world."

Among the many sweet and helpful hymns sung at devotional meetings in this country, few have taken a stronger hold than that beginning: "He Leadeth Me." It was wedded by Bradbury to one of his tenderest and purest melodies, and the words and music appear in almost every church collection of hymns and tunes. The author of "He Leadeth Me" was Rev. J. H. Gilmore, who wrote it in Philadelphia many years ago. It was after the author had delivered a lecture on the Twenty-third Psalm at an evening service, and while one of the leading members of his society were developing the subject still further in the parlor of one of their number, that Mr. Gilmore jotted the hymn down in pencil precisely as it now stands, save that the refrain has since been added by another hand. The poem was handed by him to his wife, who sent it, without his knowledge, to The Watchman and Reflector, in which paper it was soon after printed.

A DOUBLE CLAIM.

The history of the beautiful hymn, "I Would Not Live Always," affords one of the most remarkable instances of a double claim to authorship on record. It is almost universally accredited to Dr. Muhlenberg, and to this day a surprise is felt by many that strong evidence has been adduced to prove it to have been written by Henry Ward, a private soldier and poet, who died in Litchfield, Conn., in 1871.

It is claimed that this was one of several original compositions which were bound into a small pamphlet, in manuscript, by Mr. Ward, and given to the Rev. Isaac Jones, a former rector of the church in which the printer post was reared, who took it to an Episcopal convention held in 1826, where it was probably sung for the first time. Until his death Mr. Jones strongly upheld the truth of this account of the hymn's origin.

A warm controversy was waged in 1853, in the newspapers, between the friends of the claimants in regard to the matter, and in 1878 an extended and able argument in support of the claim of Mr. Ward was printed in The Boston Transcript in reply to one published in The New York Sun on the opposite side. The claim of Henry Ward was carefully investigated during the same year by O. H. Hurpel, the editor of a handsome and unique book entitled "Poets and Poetry of Providence," who became convinced of the justice of Ward's claim before admitting it to a place in his collection.

COWPER'S MASTERPIECE.

Among the older hymns which still retain their place as masterpieces in modern collections, one of the most sublime is Cowper's:

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

An interesting and pathetic story of the origin of this composition is related by John Newton, a contemporary and intimate friend of the man who was well acquainted with the circumstances:

As is well known, Cowper was subject to deep melancholy, which at times even amounted to insanity. During one of these fits of depression, while in London, the poet was seized with the sudden impulse to drown himself. He immediately ordered a hackney coach to be brought to his door, and upon its arrival he rushed down stairs and into it without giving the driver any time to ask to be driven. On the driver asking him where he wished to be taken he replied excitedly: "To the Thames!"

The manner and look in which these words were uttered convinced the man that all was not right. He drove off, but not to the river, as Cowper had ordered him. He drove up one street and down another for a long time, while Cowper sat back in his seat in mental abstraction, which convinced the driver that the poet had escaped him.

After a long, roundabout journey he at length drove up to the poet's lodgings and told him he had arrived "where he was ordered," a statement which the landlady, entered the house and went to his room. Then, in his returning consciousness, the truth of the entire transaction entered his mind, and he found that he had not sent the river at all, nor had he drowned himself, as he intended when he left the chamber, two hours before. In the confusion Cowper plainly discerned the hand of Providence, and immediately composed the famous hymn, which will be sung as long as hymns are sung in the Christian worship.—Charles F. Adams in Detroit Free Press.

The Injudiciousness of Charity.

He who sells all he has and gives to the poor may, if he is very badly eaten up with greed for money, discipline himself in the right direction, but in selling all he has deprived himself of the means of self support in sickness and endangered the care of his family. But all this subjective wrong might be perpetrated to curb a grasping spirit through the loss of property. That, however, which he had no right to do he has done. He has pauperized the poor. The evil inflicted upon sources, and perhaps hundreds, is in their lessening of self respect, the cultivation of indolence, the enfeebling of their already weak determinations, the putting further away of that day when the poor shall be properly paid for their work, and the fostering of that reckless spirit, 'The world owes me a living and I'm going to have it.' If in the next rich man does not sell out and distribute also, he will be blamed for his riches—perhaps for his blood. If some of his wealth is ill gotten, as is the case with many rich men, they will consider it all so.

Now note this most remarkable fact—that every single precept pointing to non-resistance and self abnegation, while subjectively attractive, ignores the objective and ultimate effect; that is, they all seem to be of benefit to the doer, but make not an iota of discrimination as to the effect upon others; while, in fact, as far as the world is concerned, they are more and more beginning to know, both are injured, but the greatest harm is done to the supposed beneficiaries.—Charles W. Smiley in Popular Science Monthly.

How Little Pleasure!

It is not until a man becomes rich in money that he learns how little value and pleasure does money alone confer. It is not until he finds out how little comfort and pleasure and how very few true friends gain for a rich man, that he learns to estimate them at their true value.—Jewelers' Weekly.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1888. PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS,
THE NEWSPAPER OF PLAINFIELD AND VICINITY, IS PUBLISHED AT 4:30 O'CLOCK EVERY AFTERNOON, AT NO. 11 SOMERSET STREET,

E. W. MORRISON, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

IT IS DELIVERED BY CARRIERS TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY AT TEN CENTS A WEEK, OR, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, AT $5.00 PER YEAR.

Proclamation by the Governor.

I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its produce bounteously; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

It is recommended that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation State and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor:
ROBERT S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—The Plainfield Republicans are to meet at Headquarters for permanent organization tonight.

—The man who thinks the world owes him a living as a rule never collects the bill or uses Tulip soap, say the manufacturers.

—Said to be especially adapted for ladies' use is the Sulphur and Glycerine Hair Tonic advertised by Field & Randolph and prepared by them after an improved formula.

—A special meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club will be held at the Club house Monday evening, Nov. 19th, at eight o'clock, to transact the business of the postponed November session.

—The Prohibition banner which still hangs in midair over West Front street has unwrapped itself from the wire around which it was entwined and flaps disconsolately in today's dismal rain, giving the portraits of candidates Fisk and Brooks all the cold water the heavens can provide.

—The Gospel and song service this evening at the Y. M. C. A. rooms will be of a most interesting character. Mr. W. E. Taylor will be the leader. Friday evening the meeting will be led by Mr. C. E. Tyler, formerly leader of the Berean Class at Warren Avenue. Every man in Plainfield is invited to these services.

—There are frequent complaints against the "supernumeraries" who fill the unimportant parts at Stillman Music Hall. These amateur stage-ornaments elude Manager Mattox at every chance they get and make themselves prominently interested at the wings, crowding conspicuously forward and destroying the effect of good acting and scene-setting. Sometimes, too, they talk loudly. "Supes" are all very well in their places, but their obnoxious qualities ought to be suppressed.

MUST MARRY HIM OR DIE.

Michael Bennett's Ultimatum to the Girl He Loved.

Michael Bennett, a young bricklayer residing at Somerville, occupies a cell at the Hoboken police station, charged with threatening the life of Miss Fredericka Verdin, a comely seventeen-year-old blonde who resides at No. 501 Washington street, Hoboken. Bennett became acquainted with the young woman about a year ago, and frequently visited her home. Tuesday night Bennett approached Miss Verdin as she was about to enter her home and asked her to elope with him. This, he declared, was his last appeal, and should she refuse to comply with it she would suffer, as he had decided to blow her brains out. The frightened young woman fainted and had to be carried into the house. The attention of the police was called to the case and Bennett was arrested.

A Dinner to Congressman Kean.

The Elizabeth Republicans gave retiring Congressman Kean a big spread at the Republican Headquarters last night. Covers were laid for one hundred guests, and when the signal was given to begin an attack on the viands every seat was filled. Toasts were given, speeches made and songs sung. The dinner lasted until near midnight and those Republicans who attended it had the satisfaction of knowing that if they failed to carry New Jersey they could at least carry away pleasant memories of the night's banquet.

Those present as guests from Plainfield were ex-Postmaster Pope and Editor T. W. Morrison, and from Westfield Senator Miller and the Hon. Chauncey B. Ripley.

The Horse War Ended.

Justice Crosley last night dismissed the case of "Deafy" Baldwin, a Washington Valley farmer, against George Walton, of Plainfield. These two men traded horses Wednesday, Oct. 24th, and Thursday the horse transferred by Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Walton ran away and smashed things generally. Then Mr. Walton, fulfilling an alleged condition of the trade, re-exchanged horses during Mr. Baldwin's absence, and Mr. Baldwin had him arrested on the charge of confiscating the Baldwin animal. Justice Crosley decided that there was no cause for action.

German Carp at Westfield.

Mr. Chauncey B. Ripley has been negotiating with the U. S. Commission of Fisheries nearly two years for stocking his pond in Westfield. He also applied for enough to stock Postmaster Addison S. Clark's pond. Monday two packages arrived containing fifty carp in all. A few were dead. The rest, about forty, were deposited in four different ponds for breeding.

TIMPSON—WARING.

A Fashionable Wedding in Grace Church Last Evening.

A fashionable wedding took place in Grace Episcopal church last evening, at seven o'clock, when Miss Mary Frances Waring, daughter of ex-Councilman Orville Taylor Waring, was married to Mr. Lewis Edward Timpson. The bridegroom is the great-great-grandson of Judge Richard Morris, of New York, whose brother, Lewis Morris, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The decorations of the church were handsome, many fine flowers being used. When the bridal party entered the church they were met by the surpliced choir of boys and men, who preceded them to the chancel singing the nuptial chorus from Lohengrin. Archdeacon E. M. Rodman officiated. The bride wore a rich gown of white faille francaise, trimmed with point lace and orange blossoms, and a veil of tulle. Her bouquet was of bridal roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Two sisters of the bride, Miss May Waring and Miss Florence Waring, were the maids-of-honor; they wore white silk Empire dresses carried Marmet roses. The bridesmaids, Miss Alice Fairbairn, Miss Caroline Knowland, Miss Elaine Massett, of Plainfield, and Miss Madge Poole, of Wilmington, Del., wore pink Empire dresses, carrying roses of the same color. The "best man" was the bridegroom's cousin, Edward Morris Van Buren, and the ushers were Orville G. Waring, brother of the bride; Robert Heifenstein and Frank P. Van Buren, cousins of the bridegroom. A reception and banquet followed at the home of the bride's father, No. 142 Park avenue, after which the young couple left for New York. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Stiger, Lewis Gouveneur Morris, Miss L. Morris, Mrs. Charles B. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick R. Lefferts, Mr. and Mrs. Fordham Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Herman H. Cammann, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Timpson, Mr. and Mrs. Percy H Brundage, Mrs. and Mrs. W. Miller, Miss Marie L. Holt, Miss Marie L. Brundage, James H. Brundage, of New York; Mrs. William H. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis E. Griffith, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Smith, of Troy, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Byram, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Heifenstein, of Elizabeth, N. J.; the Misses Crary, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Richard E. Edsall, jr., of Hamburg, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Waring, Miss Metta Waring, Miss Vine Waring, General and Mrs. Daniel T. VanBuren, Miss Elizabeth C. Morris, Laurens H. VanBuren, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. David J. Yerkes, the Misses Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. Walter McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Howard O. Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. Frank O. Herring, Mr. and Mrs. W. Augustus Kleinecke, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Depew, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dana, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wadsworth, Dr. and Mrs. George W. Endicott, Archdeacon and Mrs. E. M. Rodman, Mrs. Massett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fairbairn, Robert Fairbairn, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Potter, jr., Col. Mason W. Tyler, Mr. Robert Burnett, of Plainfield. Many costly presents were received.

Three sets of invitations were issued—to wedding, reception and banquet. They numbered in all nearly fifteen hundred.

The wedding tour will include a journey in the South.

A PROPHET IN THEIR MIDST.

More Unique Attractions at St. Mary's Fair.

The attendance at the fair for the benefit of St. Mary's parochial school last evening was even larger than on any previous night, and the receipts increased accordingly. The attractions offered are more unique every day. Last evening the old apple-woman and fortune-teller drew considerable attention, and many a young woman and young man visited the wizard's and rejoiced or uttered regret at her prophecy of their future. The fair will be open to-morrow afternoon from three to six o'clock for the children, and it is expected that a large number will be in attendance. The contest for the suit of furniture will be decided Monday evening, and the one for the gold watch Tuesday evening. Several other prizes will be awarded during the present week. A large frame portrait of the Rev. Father Stafford adorns the young men's booth.

THE CENTRAL'S HEAVY LOSSES.

The Discharge of Employees Said to be Compulsory.

Wholesale discharges of employees were made Tuesday night at the Central Railroad machine shops at Elizabethport. Seventy-five men, or one-quarter of the entire force, were laid off and were told that their services were no longer needed.

The only reasons assigned by the Company officials for this action is that a reduction of expenses is absolutely necessary. It is rumored that the recent series of disastrous wrecks on the road, together with the sinking of the steamer Atlas by a Central ferryboat, has occasioned losses to the Company and has crippled the road financially.

Another Smash on the Central.

Another big smash-up occurred on the Central Railroad at North Branch yesterday, by which twelve line cars, two gondolas and two box cars were totally destroyed. The wreck delayed the regular road for some hours. No one was injured. The Central is of late the victim of a series of misfortunes, scarcely a day elapsing that there is not a wreck on some portion of the road.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Wm. N. Iler, of Bank place, is receiving the congratulations on his marriage yesterday to Miss Clara Louise Edwards, of Brooklyn. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Cornelius Schenck at the residence of bride's father.

Mr. John V. Farwell, of Chicago, says that "The results of twenty years' experience in Young Men's Christian Association work prove that no other destinctive work has been so productive of good to the church of Christ on the money invested."

A SERIOUS QUESTION.

SALOON-RULE IN PLAINFIELD AND IN THE STATE GENERALLY.

The Views of Different People—No License Threatened.

It was the prevailing sentiment among Republicans the day after election that the saloon must go; and it was said that a new Board of Council would be elected to that end by the Republicans who had hitherto favored license, voting with those opposed to license. Two ex-Councilmen who had voted for license openly declared their determination to do all in their power to favor this scheme. What particularly aroused them was the efforts made by the saloon-keepers to defeat Republicans, particularly Judge Ulrich for the Assembly, on account of his vote for the Local-Option bill.

There are some Republicans who are opposed to granting licenses at all, because they regard it as wrong in principle to countenance the evil in any shape, and to this extent they are virtually Prohibitionists, though despising the latter as unreasonable cranks only less than they despise the saloon-keepers themselves for being engaged in a business which, as Gladstone truly says, "causes more ruin, misery and death than war, famine and pestilence combined".

There are some prominent Republicans who favor increasing the license fee to $1,000, instead of keeping it at $500, which is the fee at present.

But has it ever occurred to the latter class that atoom two years ago the people of Plainfield voted against the election of Councilmen—made unofficially, of course,—to pay an increased tax-rate with the distinct understanding that by so doing the saloons hereabouts were to be abolished? That is the case, and with that understanding those men who had always voted for licenses was urged in these columns and was carried. We do not believe that these gentlemen intended to deceive the public. We are satisfied that they are all men of honor. But in view of the fact that it is now about two years since the people so voted and that nothing has been done, the delay, to say the least, looks bad. Certainly the disgusting scenes about the saloons election day, and as a result of them, ought to be sufficient to arouse the public to protect themselves. Never before within our knowledge has the Republican party of Plainfield been apparently so unanimous in its purpose respecting the evil. We have met but few prominent Republicans who are not in favor of putting an end to the traffic in intoxicating liquor for the election of a new license Council, and by strictly enforcing the law against all who dare to violate it.

The saloons have arrayed themselves against the Local-Option bill because that bill gives to the people the right to decide for themselves where shall be located the respectable people of all parties would out-vote the class of people who favor the saloons.

This class oppose the Republican party because it is the friend of the family against the saloon, and as a consequence the saloons and the Democratic party are allied together to deprive the people of the power to say whether or not they want the saloons in our midst, and while this is the case the battle ought to be fought to the bitter end. No compromise. No quarter. And so with any other right attempted to be taken away from the people.

In the recent election the saloons organized and contributed money for a bribery fund to put into each Assembly District that they deemed necessary to give them a majority in the State Legislature—$5,500, according to the statement of a Hudson county brewer. In addition to this the boast is openly made that upwards of $1,000 were used by the saloon-power in each of several wards in Elizabeth.

Another claim made by the brewer referred to is that the saloon-power through their allies, the Democracy, propose to abolish the law requiring the signatures of twelve respectable freeholders to an application for a license, so that a saloon may be started on every corner regardless of the wishes of the people in the neighborhood, so long as the saloon-keeper pays the license fee. The high license feature of the law it is intended to retain, abolishing only the Local-Option clause, and thus take away from the people the right to decide for themselves in the most immediate affairs, but lamenting wont cure it. It may yet be necessary to call Congress to relieve us by placing restrictions on the emigration of the classe which comprise the majority of the half million people imbruded upon our shores yearly, making this country a sort of sewer into which the most densely ignorant, the most criminal, and the pauper classes are dropped from all the countries of Europe, and from which the Democratic ranks are recruited and Democratic majorities come, enabling that party to outnumber the intelligent and patriotic people, who bear the great burden of the expense, and who naturally gravitate toward the Republican party for just laws and good government.

There are a few Democrats in South Jersey who voted for the Local Option bill and are pledged to fight the saloon power in their opposition to it. These with the Republican minority are the only hope of the people. Their numbers are now

It will perhaps surprise people to know that leading Democratic politicians in Union county are anxious to see the practical workings of the Local-Option law and that a vote be had under it. The NEWS reporter recently conversed with one of these politicians that there were people who believed that on account of the Democratic majority at Elizabethport it was likely that the majority would be in favor of the traffic.

"Not by a long shot," was the reply; "you will find that there are enough Democrats opposed to insure the defeat of the saloons. We cannot get Democrats of any account to accept office, because it costs too much money to live all the saloons in Union county. Even after we buy the saloon-influence we have to spend just as much more money election day to buy votes. Now if we can down the saloons as a political factor it will cost just that much less for a Democrat to secure an office. The saloon-keepers don't give the money to the miserable specimens of humanity who are purchasable, but pocket it and use cheap whiskey to bribe with.

"Is it reasonable"—he continued—"to expect office-holders to be honest to the taxpayers under such circumstances? Do you suppose that a man is going to spend so much money to get elected and not take all vantage of every opportunity to get the money back, even if it is at the expense of the taxpayers? I guess not, and it will always be so while the saloons rule the roost as they do at present."

There is much in that Democrat's views to think about. But, coming back to our city affairs, we repeat that the views of Mr. A. C. Baldwin, which are at least unique.

"No license"—says he—"unless an overwhelming majority of the people are ready to enforce the laws, is a failure. It has been tried here without success. I am in favor of increasing the license fee to $1,000, and using the money thus obtained to relieve the poor, whose poverty in most cases is caused by the saloons. Good men in Common Council will prevent disreputable places being licensed, and the other places ought to pay a fee in some degree commensurate with the misery they caused. The abatement of the evil will accomplish more practical good than the attempt to suppress it in the present state of public opinion."

From the above contrary views, showing that the people are becoming aroused in the matter, we trust that some practical good will come that will result in annihilating the saloon in politics and as much as possible in generally destroying its power for evil. The result is with the people. Does it not also rest with our city? Reflect, and you cannot conscientiously say nay.

Some Things Omitted.

The drawing last evening for two tennore brooch-loading shot guns resulted in the good fortune of Messrs. Harry Conklin and Frank Smith, who each got a gun.—Plainfield Press.

There are some things omitted from the above paragraph which might make it more interesting. It is not stated, for instance, that raffling is unlawful; that one of the guns referred to was owned by the Postmaster; that the raffle was got up at his request by the saloons to raise money for him; that the money was needed because he had been getting head over heels in debt; that in spite of his post-office salary, and the silly boasting in his paper, he had been running behind for a year; that he would be compelled to suspend unless the saloons came to his relief; that one of the firm recently stated that but for appearance sake he would have given up the daily long ago as a losing investment; that the failure was because the sheet had no standing in the community, was utterly devoid of truth or good moral principles, and that it was therefore regarded unsafe to allow it in the house; that the influence of the young people because it had influence was likely to counteract the good influence of home teachings to inculcate a love for all the cardinal virtues necessary to make good citizens—noble men and women. This and much more of the same sort were, we understand, omitted. We can only conjecture why, and possibly our conjecture might be that they were too near the truth; and that the truth and our neighbor were long ago divorced from each other, apparently forever. The raffle took place in a saloon.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The Clyde Line steamer Evona, from Philadelphia, loaded with miscellaneous merchandise for New York, last night passed through the canal at New Brunswick and shortly afterward struck a rock in the Raritan river, near the mouth of Cronsilin's Creek, filled with water and sank. To-day a tug which went to the Evona's relief struck upon another rock and sank.

The community of Perth Amboy was thrown into a state of great excitement yesterday over the shocking crime committed by a boy named Jacobus, who was arrested and is now securely locked up in the town jail. Johnson, who is a married man, is charged with abusing his step-son by the name Fathergill Johnson's wife, whose name is Louise, is alleged to have aided him in accomplishing the ruin of the child.

A farmer living along the Millstone in a quandary about the game law. His farm lies on both sides of the brook, and it will be difficult for him to show a rabbit in Middlesex to-day. But if the first barrel misses and the rabbit crosses the brook the farmer must wait fifteen days before he can shoot with the second barrel. Or even if he kills his game in the shot, he must not cast on that side of the brook fifteen days before it will be lawful for him to take it home to cook it.—Trenton Gazette.

A movement is now on foot looking to the incorporating of Mount Holly, and it is backed by some of the largest property owners there, who think that the interests of the place would be benefited by incorporation. Mount Holly is over 200 years old and is governed by three town committemen who are elected annually. The people now believe that the town has outgrown this primitive mode of government and want a change. A public meeting will be held next week, when the proposition will be fully discussed.

Marion D. Newman, who was arrested at Washington, D. C., last Saturday on complaint of Miss Kate Smith for having trifled with her affections, has had many escapades with women, a number of which occurred in New Jersey. If the letters found in Newman's room belong to him, he has not only figured as a matrimonial adventurer and a much-married man, but has also played the also of a Methodist preacher. From letters it appears he was ordained a deacon in the Methodist church, by Bishop Haven, in Lewistown Pa., under the name of Dallas DeHughes, in 1875. Another certificate shows that two years later DeHughes had been transferred to the New Jersey Conference, and in 1879 he was ordained an elder by Bishop Simpson at Burlington, N. J.

The rumor that the New Jersey Legislature is to give Jersey City a new charter is exploded. The Democratic Assemblymen, the Boards of Public Works, of Finance and Taxables, Fire and Police, are all to be abolished. It is said, and the Board of Aldermen is to take entire charge of city affairs, assisted by Commissioners appointed by the Governor. The Republican city officers, who manage to hold their places in spite of the Democratic majority in the city Boards having the appointing power, will be dismissed and their places will be given to Democrats. It was said yesterday that Judge Dixon has been retained by Democratic managers to draft a new charter. He is to have it ready by the first week in January, and it is to be one of the first bills to come before the Legislature when it meets.

DOUGHERTY'S DELUSION.

He Has Loved Many Anderson for Six Years and Thought She Loved Him.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—James M. Dougherty, an awkward looking countryman from the vicinity of Salem, N. Y., was arrested for assaulting Miss Mary Anderson by persistent attentions. Dougherty, who seems to be weak minded, says he first saw and fell in love with the actress six years ago at Rimira, where she played in the "Lady of Lyons." He tried to obtain an interview, but failed, and followed her to New York, and then to England, sending her notes and bouquets innumerable, but being always debarred from an interview, as he believed, by rivals who conspired against him. A big revolver found on his person was doubtless intended for use upon those jealous rivals. He believed that Miss Anderson was as much in love with him as he was with her, but prevented from seeing him. Miss Anderson, who remembered having seen Dougherty but once during his six years' adoration, went to Inspector Byrnes' office, after the arrest, and talked kindly to Dougherty, telling him that he was suffering from a delusion, and that if he would go home accompanied by others his attentions Dougherty seemed dazed by this statement and said that some one just like her must have deceived him, for he was sure he had received her notes and knew her handwriting. He promised never to follow her any more, and Miss Anderson begged Inspector Byrnes to let the man go, but the official thought it best to hold Dougherty until an examination as to his sanity could be made.

Episcopal Convention in New Hampshire.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 15.—The eighty-seventh annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal church in the diocese of New Hampshire has opened here. The bishop's address showed the diocese to be in a highly prosperous condition and with a large increase in the number of communicants. This evening's session will be devoted to the missionary cause.

Reward Continued.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—The $20,000 reward for the capture of William B. Tascott, the alleged murderer of A. J. Snell, has been extended for sixty days—until Jan. 17. The consignments, Nos. 64174; value, $9,237.98. For the month of October, 1887, one consignment, No. 59241; value, $2342.45. For the month of November, 1887, six consignments, Bs. 993, 507; value, $10,013.20. For the month of October, 1887, three consignments, to the Boston and Colorado Smelting Company, Ago, Colorado, Bs. 60164; value, $4,144.63. For the month of November, 1887, Bs. 41584; value, $16,901.26.

FIGHTING FOR CONGRESS

It Is Very Close and Both Parties Claim It.

BOTH MAKE CHARGES OF FRAUD.

Great Anxiety Manifested in Republican Circles Over the Latest Democratic Claims—Senator Quay Confident—General Washington News.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Increased interest is felt now in the result of later returns unfavorable to the Republicans, over the organization of the next house of representatives. Hard work has been almost universally done by Republicans and they would have a right to be inflicted by the returns. Democratic claims are now being made that, if allowed would give them the organization of the house. The last report received from Ohio leaves declared that it was now settled that the Democrats had carried West Virginia and elected all four of the congressmen they voted for. The Democrats also claim the election of Simmons in North Carolina. This would give them a majority of one in the house. In view of the apparent danger the Democrats are trying to steal the polls by certifying men from the south. There is great anxiety on the part of Republican members to know what has been done. That any fraud has been committed in the Virginia congressional districts. The Republican majority is being pared down by clever manipulation and insidiously the Democrats are making to undermine it entirely. Mr. Quay, one of those in this danger, and it was on account of it that he came to Washington to take personal charge of the congressional matters. A good many additional inquiries have been made at the Republican Regina headquarters. To all who have asked, Mr. Quay responds that the Republicans are sure to carry the house. He admits that the Democrats are scheming the best they know how, but he has confidence in the ability of the Republican managers to baffle their every move. All those interested do not be as confident as Mr. Quay.

There has been some difference of opinion among Republicans as to whether it was desirable to make a fight for the organization of the house. Two considerations weighed against each other. One was that it was better to give the Republicans full responsibility for the government, with the full measure of embarrassment attending, than to hold that body by a majority too small to be of any practical use out of power everywhere else. The other consideration was that if given control of congress the Republicans could increase their Republican territorial representation and thereby by a new apportionment as well. This last consideration, together with a natural reluctance to yield any power they may be able to hold, has led to the determination to make a fight for it and hold the house if possible. They do not, of course, confess to the accusations of the Republicans that they will attempt to hold it by fair or by foul means. They have a claim of a democratic majority in any district go by default. Upon their face shows the Democrats appear to have a majority of one or two.

The matter can be settled until the official returns are in, and then, whichever way it goes, there will be a cry of fraud.

The Democrats, on their side, declare that Quay and Dudley are conspiring to steal Virginia and all of Virginia and to control the house.

IT MAIS BEAT THE WORLD.

The annual report of the third assistant postmaster general, Harris, which has been submitted to the postmaster general, shows that the cost of the postal service for the fiscal year inclusive of the amount earned by the subsidized Pacific Railroad companies for mail transportation was for the first time in the history of the order exceeded amounted to $52,905,176.79, leaving a deficiency of $5,043,827.88. This deficiency is accounted for mainly, the report asserts, by the increase of the free delivery service, under a modification of the old law, and the increase of railway mail transportation.

The postal service has grown considerably over the report of the previous year, showing a very gratifying business. The total number of registered mail matter transmitted during the year was 15,677,109; of special delivery, matter the number of pieces transmitted was 1,124,490. The total number of pieces of the various kinds of matter transmitted was 2,700,655,170, the value being $69,958,421.

Complete data given showing that in the classes of postage, the number of postal offices, extent of mail routes, miles of mail service performed, postal revenue and postal expenditures, the number of letters and other pieces of mail matter transmitted in the mails the United States is now conceded to be the most extensive in the world. The statistics of letters, etc., transmitted during the year, which are the first accurate statistics of the character ever published in this department, are as follows: Letters mailed, 1,703,850,000; post cards mailed, 372,300,000; newspapers and periodicals mailed, 1,000,000,000; books, third and fourth class matter mailed, 372,900,000. Total, 3,579,000,000.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

The president has made the following appointments: Of New Jersey, to be collector of the customs at Bottercliffe, district of Maryland, to be surveyor of the United States customs at Baltimore. William H. Chandler of Pennsylvania, David Urquhart, Jr. of Louisiana, Charles E. Richards of Connecticut, Howard A. Clark of Rhode Island and David Kinch of Rhode Island, to be assistants to the commissioner general of the United States to the international exposition to be held in Paris, France, in 1889.

THE INAUGURAL BALL.

Chairman Britton of the inaugural committee, accompanied by several prominent men, called on Postmaster General Dickinson and requested his aid in an endeavor to accomplish one of the pension building ball rooms for the inaugural ball. The matter was discussed pleasantly and at some length, and the postmaster general promised to do everything possible to delay the removal of the city postoffice into the hall.

NO OFFICIAL INFORMATION.

Assistant Secretary of State Rives says the department has received no official information of the seizure of the custom house building at Matamoras, Mex.

They Emptied Their Revolvers.

SPOKANE FALLS, W. T., Nov. 15.—A telephone message from Bardin, a mining camp in northern Idaho, announces a serious shooting affray there. Charles Garrett, colored, and Jim Morgan, white, were drinking in Lagrange McDonald's saloon and engaged in an altercation. Both men drew revolvers and opened fire. Though the combatants could not get each other on account of a dense smoke, they emptied the first few shots, they stood away until their revolvers were emptied. James Simmons, a bystander, was shot in the stomach and cannot live. William Lyman, another spectator, was shot through the shoulder, and Garrett's arm was almost shot off. Morgan came out of the fight without a scratch and escaped.

THE SPELL BINDERS' BANQUET.

Notable Gathering of Republican Orators in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The speakers and managers whose exertions helped to win the recent Republican national victory, and who are now disbanding their forces, participated in a banquet at Delmonico's, at which nearly every Republican of note in this vicinity was present, and many in other localities were represented by letters or telegrams of regret. Among the latter was President-elect Harrison, who telegraphed: "I am compelled to regret that I have to inform you of my inability to be present at the banquet in honor of the Republican speakers. The honor it is your purpose to show them is thoroughly well earned. To the able manner in which they set before the people the principles adopted by our convention at Chicago, and the spirit in which the party has so long maintained, is due the large measure of success, especially in New York state, over which we are now all rejoicing together. It would have given me great pleasure to express to them in person my warmest thanks, but as I cannot do this I beg to convey to them the cordial greeting and assurance that my high appreciation of their successful efforts."

Chauncey M. Depew presided, and spoke to the toast, "The Leading Ideas of this Movement." Other speakers were: Col. Elliot F. Shepard, on "The Influence of the Press on the Campaign;" John S. Wise, on "The New South;" Gen. Benjamin F. Ingersoll, on "How It Happened;" Col. George A. Sheridan, on "The Soil Under Our Feet;" R. F. Porter, on "The Bowery Parrot," and W. D. Guthrie, on "The Young Men in the Campaign."

Prominent among those present were: President Foster, of the League of Republican clubs; Gen. Horace Porter, Daniel Butterfield, Gen. Joseph C. Jackson, President Smith of the Republican State league; H. E. Thurber, Jacob Hess, Ingersoll, Merritt Teall, Col. S. V. R. Cruger, C. C. Shayne, Col. Fred Grant and John F. Plummer.

LABOR TROUBLE IN PITTSBURG.

Workmen Object to a Change in Their Hours of Labor.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 15.—Twenty-five hundred employes of Jones & Laughlin's American iron works declared a strike against a proposed change in their hours of labor, claimed by the firm to be necessary owing to a scarcity of natural gas during the day time, while at night there is sufficient gas for all departments. The employes held a meeting and appointed a committee to wait on the firm and ascertain if the new arrangement was a temporary accommodation to the proprietors or a notice of the Natural Gas company to increase its earnings at the expense of the workingmen. It an accommodation to the firm and they were not asked to continue the new hours longer than ten days, they would agree to the change. The firm's reply gave no guarantee that the new rule would not be permanent, and the men declined to return to work until permitted to do so at the old hours.

Gas is very scarce at all of the iron mills and glass houses on the south side, but none have entirely closed down from that cause.

Another Crisis Impending in France.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—The chamber of deputies committee on the revision of the constitution has adopted a resolution in favor of abolishing the presidency. The resolution declares the importance of this decision on the part of the bureau of the chamber of deputies, specially elected to consider the much discussed question of the revision of the constitution, will be realized by the fact that it is totally at variance with the revision bill submitted by Prime Minister Floquet, which was of a far less sweeping character than that of the resolution of the bureau indorses in the fullest manner the demands of Gen. Boulanger and his followers. M. Floquet declares that, therefore, likely to resign at an early date.

Lively Shooting on a Train.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 15.—The Journal's West Superior, Wis., special says: As the Omaha train from Duluth was crossing the bridge here a quarrel broke out among several occupants of the smoking car. A fist fight ensued and then one of the combatants drew a revolver and commenced firing. The shooting became general. The man rushed into the baggage car and fired several shots, one of which hit Frank Beggert, of Superior, in the leg. In the excitement the man who had the first shooting jumped off the train and escaped, although three shots were fired at him. Four men in all were wounded, but none fatally.

The Silver Robbery.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The treasury department has received a report from Denver the amount of standard silver dollars stolen from the New Orleans mint shipments to the department of the interior. The stolen bags were shipped daily for the past month at the rate of about $500,000 a day, or about 250 bags, each containing $2,000. The contents of the bags when received at Denver will be counted as soon as possible after the boxes reach the department, and an examination of the few boxes in the treasury yesterday that remain are open and counted will show that they have not been tampered with, and no further losses are feared.

Virginia's Vote.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 15.—From official returns received at the capitol the vote for governor in Virginia is: For Cleveland, 133,647; Harrison, 125,561; Cleveland's plurality, 8,086. The vote of the following counties has not been received: Botetourt, Buckingham, Campbell, Fluvanna, Louisa, Mecklenberg, Nansemond, Pittsylvania, Russell, Russell Scott, Southampton, Wise and Wythe. The counties, according to the unofficial returns and estimates, will give Harrison a majority of 2,000, making the Democratic majority in the state 2,008.

Celebrating Harrison's Election.

BOSTON, Nov. 15.—The victory of Harrison and Morton was celebrated with speeches, illuminations, parades, fireworks, etc., in the Republican wards of this city and towns: Milbury, Waltham, Lowell, East Weymouth, Plymouth, Whitman, Auburndale, Maplewood, Hopedale, Milford, East Hampton, Amherst, Hyde Park, North Adams, Dover, in Massachusetts; Concord and Manchester in New Hampshire; Bradford in Vermont, and Gardiner and Belfast in Maine.

The B. and O. Presidency.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 15.—There is some whispering of going on in the board of directors of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company. The annual meeting of stockholders will be held on the 20th inst., at which time a board of directors will be elected for the ensuing year. The president will be chosen by the directors about a month later, and there is a movement on foot to elect United States Senator A. P. Gorman at the head of the company.

FRESH CABINET GOSSIP.

Mr. Blaine Will Be Offered the State Portfolio.

PARTY LEADERS IN CONFERENCE.

It Is Said That New York's "Big Four" Are Pulling Together for Harmony. What Is Mr. Evart's Future? — Gen. Harrison to Visit New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The Press says: The news comes to this city, in a semi-official way, that Gen. Harrison has determined to invite Mr. Blaine to a seat in his cabinet, and that the Maine statesman will accept. Of course, the state department is the one offered him. The reason that has prompted the president-elect to this action, aside from his high regard for Mr. Blaine's abilities and experience, is that all of his predecessors have invariably tendered the state portfolio to a recognized leader in the party. Senator Sherman and Mr. Blaine are the only men who could be placed in this rank, and Gen. Harrison has chosen the latter. This can be stated positively on the authority of a gentleman who is closely associated both with Gen. Harrison and Mr. Blaine. The latter is expected at this city within a week.

The famous dinner party which Mr. Depew arranged on the eve of the Chicago convention, and which resulted in the duplicate, as far as results are concerned, in a series of conferences now in progress here, with Warner Miller, Chauncey Depew, Senator Hiscock and ex-Senator Platt as the participants. Everybody will recall the Depew dinner to New York's seventy-two delegates, and how they all left the festive board swelling with enthusiasm and harmony with a tremendously big H.* From that day to this there have been no Platt men, nor Miller men, nor Depew men. All Republicans have been Harrison men and victory has rewarded their united effort. The motto still is "pull together."

This is the secret of the meetings which the "big four" have been holding under the Fifth Avenue roof the last day or two, and the result of their interchange of thought and opinion will largely determine the attitude of the Empire state toward men and measures under the Harrison administration. There has never been a time in the history of the party that in this state so many Republicans felt such a settled determination to get along without factional troubles. The feeling is overwhelming that Gen. Harrison's administration shall have a united party behind it in this state.

The first evidence of this is found in these conferences, which, it is unexpressed perhaps mistakenly—are the result of a suggestion from Gen. Harrison himself. Gen. Harrison is coming on here himself early next month for this purpose. Men from all parts of the nation will be here also to meet him, and to urge the claims of their individual states for places in his cabinet. He knows nearly all the leaders of his party, and has no pledge to redeem to any of them. He wants to get their judgment, however, and while he has a right to ask his own, he will undoubtedly give it, he does not propose to make his decisions until he has had a careful survey of the field.

Now for the present conferences here. The New York men are getting themselves into position. It is said that they telegraphed Gen. Harrison last night fixing a date for the meeting here, but they are keeping the secret to themselves. It has not been settled though that New York will present the name of Warner Miller as its candidate for the treasury portfolio. Mr. Miller would rather resume his old place in the senate. Our own Evarts, now occupies that place. His term expires three years hence. He wants to lay down the lines of his long public career after that, but he is not anxious to do so before.

Senators Platt and Chauncey Depew have been comparing notes together up in the Grand Central station every day this week. What if the senior senator would resign his seat to open the way for the return of the secretary of state from Washington that he would be transferred to the supreme court bench cannot be true, because Mr. Evarts is too far advanced in years for that position. The cabinet is no longer a temptation to the veteran statesman, and it may be that he would look with favor on the highest diplomatic post in the gift of the nation.

There are not enough people in the secret yet to get at the full meaning of the frequent and mysterious visits of senators, two ex-senators and Mr. Depew. That it affects the future of Warner Miller and Senator Evarts there can be no doubt. If the latter would like to go himself Mr. Miller will succeed him, and New York will have another candidate for the cabinet.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 15.—The latest bit of cabinet gossip connects Senator Sabin, of Minnesota, with the administration. It is reported that he has declined to be a candidate for re-election to the senate, after having prepared the way for his return. Even as late as week ago, it is said, he was looking after the Minnesota legislators whose vote he might desire, and he had succeeded in getting pledges from more than half of them. The only explanation for his change of mind is that he has been given an intimation that there is a higher position awaiting him, and that it would be just as well to let some other worthy man go to the senate. The gossip comes from Minneapolis, Sabin's home, is of foreign manufacture. It is said Mr. Sabin will be in Indianapolis shortly, but there are no indications that his visit is on invitation. When in the senate Senators Sabin and Harrison were good friends.

Oak View for Sale.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Real estate agents are just now greatly agitated over the report that the president is about to offer his country home, Oak View, and all the land attached to it for sale. Within the past few days at least a score of them have attempted to interview the president on this point, and several of them have been to see him, but Senator

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

Combined Result of the Maternale and Paternal Education.

A little 5-year-old girl, who lives in northwest Baltimore, the pride of a jolly papa and devoted mamma, was sent to a kindergarten the other day. It was her first experience at school, but her composure was remarkable under the circumstances. The teacher asked her what she had been taught at home, and she replied:

"I can sing."

"What can you sing?" inquired the teacher.

"Oh, lots! My mamma and papa make me sing lots of hymns."

"Then let us hear one," said the teacher.

The 5-year-old didn't hesitate a minute, but began as follows:

"If a body meet a body
Tramping through the snow,
There are no flies on Gallagher
Because he let them go."

The teacher was dumfounded. On inquiry she found that while the mamma tried hard to teach her offspring such melodies as "Scotch Land," the wicked papa's instruction proved more effective.—Baltimore Herald.

She Was Sassy.

A little Minerswille tot was found by her papa at the window calling "Nigger, nigger!" to a colored man on the street. The gentleman reproved her and said he would have to chastise her if she repeated the offense. He then went into an adjoining room, but presently he heard the little girl saying "Nigger, nigger!" softly to herself.

"You mustn't say that," said her nurse. "Your papa will whip you."

"Will he whip me real hard?"

"Yes, real hard."

The tot then went to the window again and called out, as best her little lungs would permit, "Nigger, nigger!" Then, turning to the nurse, she said:

"Now I tell papa in and let's have this thing over."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

A Completed Transaction.

The ability of little folks to arrive at logical conclusions was well illustrated in a Lawrenceville primary school recently. A teacher in one of the lowest grades had been impressing the meaning of easy fractional terms upon the minds of her little pupils. Her statements were clear and so easily comprehended that even their infantile intellects seemed to grasp all that was given them. One little fellow, however, was a little slow, and the teacher repeated her explanation for perhaps the fifteenth time. Holding up four pennies, by way of illustration, she said: "Now, Charlie, if I have four cents and give you half," suiting the action to the word, "how much will I have left?" "The other half," replied the tot, with an air of deepest conviction.—Pittsburg Press.

One on the Professor.

The chemistry professor had been expatiating at considerable length upon the impossibility of creating or annihilating anything—the indestructibility of matter. Every convenient illustration had been brought into play, and the professor closed with the positive remark, "You absolutely cannot make anything." As he paused to note the effect of his remark, a small lad rose in the back of the room and asked timidly, "But, professor, can't we make a noise? That didn't exist before."—Albany Journal.

Her Own Messenger.

A rain storm is really no excuse for keeping a healthy, strong child from school, at least country scholars think so. Some time ago a teacher, on answering a knock at the school door, found one of her pupils well wrapped up to protect her from the rain. "Teacher, mother says I needn't come to school today, 'cause it rains," and down stairs the little maid fled like a frightened deer.—Albany Journal.

Night Prowlers Both.

Precocious—Mamma and baby have stepped out on the terrace to see whether cook has forgotten to give the cat its dinner. They find pussy engaged in cleaning up its plate, in which operation it is assisted by an immense tom cat.

"Wherever can that creature have come from?" inquires mamma, and baby makes answer:

"Why, that's pussy's policeman?"—Kindergarten.

Providing for the Dark Days.

Thrifty Mother—Ellen, why will you persist in eating the soft part of your bread and leaving crusts under the edge of your plate? Some day you may be glad to get even crusts to eat.

"I turn it down," said the young lady who was playing euchre with a gentleman who had called upon her. "What do you make it?"

"Hearts," was the response.

"Hearts seem to be a favorite trump with you young men," she said, archly.

"What trump would you prefer?" he inquired.

"Diamonds—or," she added in an abstracted way, "seal skin sacks."—Merchant Traveler.

WOMAN AND HOME.

TEACHING CHILDREN THE LAWS OF HEALTH AT HOME.

How a Plucky Woman Won a Lively Bread—Cold Weather Hints for the Nursery—The Real "Woman Problem." Household Servants—Useful Suggestions.

We are creatures of imitation. Example counts for more than precept. The parent knows the law, and the child knows it too. When the parent forgets it, then the children will keep it also. It does little good for a child to learn at school that the food should be properly masticated, when three times every day at home he sees a hungry group crowd about the table like pigs around a trough, and bolt their food as nearly whole as it can be made to go down. The child whose mother gives it a bite of something to eat every time it cries for it, will not be in a condition to profit from an understanding of the law that food should not be taken between meals, until it is too late for the knowledge to be of much service.

The law of pure air and proper ventilation may be taught never so plainly in the text books, but to the boy who is brought up to sit and to sleep in a close, unventilated room, foul with the exhalations of living beings, and to drink fresh air as he would a plague, the knowledge will be of little avail. While his father's cellar is filled with decaying meat, vegetables, and all manner of filth, and the noisome smells to heaven from beneath the kitchen window, all the teachings of the schools will not prevent his having typhoid fever, or diphtheria, or some form of filth disease, when the summer sun calls into activity the germs of disease which are latent there.

It is the practice of the principles of hygiene in our homes, and this alone, which will lessen the rate of disease and death today, and develop a stronger race tomorrow. The child who has learned the laws of health from his father and mother, by seeing them continually and persistently applied, will come to follow them in his own case, as naturally as he will conduct himself properly in good society, if good society has been his birthright, and gentlemanly conduct has become habitual.

I knew a man who feared filth as he feared the devil. A bad odor was his bete noir. To put him on his mettle at once, and he could not rest until he had hunted it down and rooted it out. His water supply must be pure beyond all question. His cellar must be cleaned and kept clean. No cesspool or vault was allowed to generate putrefaction on his premises. When he bought a house his first care was to look after the ventilation and drainage, water supply and disposal of waste. If these were defective, they must be reconstructed at once, as whatever cost, and made as nearly perfect as possible, and so on through the list. The result was, his children grew up to be like him in this respect. They did not need to be warned against the dangers of filth. They knew them already.

I know mothers, too, who teach their children how to preserve good health and develop strong bodies; who also instruct their daughters in the mysteries of their own being and the dangers that may beset them, thus protecting them against the wiles of temptation and fitting them to live pure and wholesome lives.—J. M. Prench, M. D., in Good Housekeeping.

How One Woman Earns Bread.

"Just look at that lady," said a middle aged gentleman as he passed for a moment at the entrance of a Wall street office, and lifted his hat gallantly to a woman who passed. She was tall, graceful, her face was comely and her bearing noble.

"I'll tell you about her. She studied art abroad for three years before her marriage. Critics declared her to be unusually gifted—perhaps a genius. She came home to take to the rose and apple blossom style of art. Her pictures were realistic landscapes and strong figure pieces. Some brought pretty good prices in London—three I believe found buyers in Paris and some were sold in New York. But, like most other girls, Cupid marked her and she married. Then came days of bliss she had there. There was small time then for wielding the paint brush and indulging in the fancies that resolve into ideals of beauty under skillful touch.

"When the youngest child was six months old the husband died. Scarcely was the funeral ended when she found that she and the babies were not worth a nickel. She mixed up her paints, solicited pupils and went to work. I believe she did get a few pupils and sell a picture or two. But she almost starved. She just put her canvas and paint pots into a closet, got some things on credit at the grocer's and butcher's, rolled up her sleeves, built a fire in her kitchen stove and went to cooking. What for? Why, to sell the things she made. She baked up some angel's food and some chicken pies. She advertised them to some of her friends and said she was ready to take orders. She keeps four maid servants now to help her make this delicate cake and her delicious pies, and she only begin to fill her orders. She has bought a snug home in the best year and is altogether prosperous, with a business growing faster than she can keep up with it.

"Since I've known what she has accomplished I haven't so much sympathy for the women who make futile tears because they can't get suitable work. There are so many things in the direction of culinary productions in which women could build up good trades. Take breadmaking, for instance. My wife, who is on the Women's Exchange board, tells me that they have the greatest trouble there in getting good bread, although she has no finding those willing to make bread. Yet it pays better to make the 'staff of life' than to bake fancy pastries. The exchange undertook to supply the ladies with home made bread, but were forced to abandon it because they couldn't get it regularly, on time and of skillful kind. It is remarkable that it has been found difficult at other cloth houses to get nice home baked bread. There's any number of boathouse cabins that every man would be glad to find a good bite and, for which many ladies would consider themselves fortunate if they could make contracts for the regular delivery of at their residences. It don't seem to me there's much room for any intelligent woman who has the least natural aptitude for cookery to be without employment. I wish I knew a good, safe field for profitable, independent, remunerative work for them, if they'd make use of it."—Chicago Herald.

Hints for Cold Weather.

The little things we shall now speak of are appropriate, as the cold weather is about to begin.

See to it that the children thoroughly warm their feet before going to school and on returning home. They are liable, if not disposed to do it of themselves, to take a serious cold or other inflammatory attack might be prevented by attention to this precaution.

Teach the children, when out of doors, to keep their mouths closed and breathe through their nostrils. This prevents the air—the temperature of which may be zero—from striking directly on the throat, lungs and the larynx. As the nasal passages are kept constantly warmed by their breath from the internal lungs, the intermediate air is warmed, as it passes circuitously through them.

Children who are liable to inflammation and swelling of the tonsils, or to troubles in the ear, should wear hoods that come well over on the forehead and well down over the neck. Hats are dangerous for such children, and so are bonnets, unless care is taken to bring them down over the sides of the head.

On returning from a cold walk or ride, throw off all but the home clothing at once. The outer clothing is nearly at the temperature of the outer atmosphere, and if kept on must absorb much heat, which might otherwise have come to the wearer immediately.

In dressing and undressing in a cold room, move about as little as possible when the slippers are off. The carpet just under the feet is warmed by abstracting heat from the feet, and the person has the advantage of it, while every change takes additional heat to warm a new place. In undressing keep the slippers on as long as convenient; in dressing put them on as soon as possible.

All slippers for use in cold weather should have extra inner soles, to lift the feet from the cold floor and to retain the natural heat. Where nothing else can be had, such soles can be cut from cardboard; a thickness of woolen cloth should be stitched on each side.

For warmth in the kitchen slippers made of woolen uppers and thick felt soles are desirable. Slippers are preferable for home use to laced boots, because they facilitate the warming of the feet, which is otherwise apt to be unduly neglected.—Youth's Companion.

The Awkwardness of Servants.

It is a fact worthy of consideration that house servants, from whom hand training is especially demanded, are just t. on of all the working classes who have least of it. We take servants into our houses and intrust them with our choicest things, and they are not only ignorant of their value, the delicacy and the care they require, but they have not the lightness of touch imperatively necessary for their handling. To which one of these so called "second girls" through an hour's work is a revelation. One begins to wonder in the course of a few minutes how anything is safe, and what manner of people for in the selection of her field of labor. Why she did not rather elect to shovel coal than to handle china treasures is a deeply interesting query. One of these maids was recently seen to lift a five-gallon stone jug of spring water without a quickening of the breath or increase of color. From the moment she turned to empty a handsome Chinese bowl of water and brought it against a piece of marble with a force that could have felled an adversary had she been of the gentler sex, until the end. A little later other breakages of treasures followed, all attributable to simple heaviness of hands.

The girl herself was well meaning, amiable, industrious and honest, but she lacked the deft ways requisite for her position. She stayed with her employers two weeks, and destroyed for her more than she could be paid for, had the girl been required to replace the broken articles with three months' wages. What can one say for such a servant? And who has the means and the generosity to see her through her forming period? If she does not have the charge of fragile things, she will never learn the moderation and care their use exacts, and it is only by experience, hard to herself and costly to her employer, that she will become tasteful and gentle. She will go from one house to another, despoiling here and there, and literally breaking her way through life.—Boston Herald.

Mother and New Born Babe.

Agitation or excitement to the mother acts directly and speedily upon the child. The head left cold, the body is close that the baby feels the effect of mental emotion with a rapidity astonishing to those who have not made a study of the nearness of the connection. A case in point was that of a young mother whose new born baby was apparently in perfect condition until it was three days old. It had nursed without trouble until that time, and although it was restless it did not fail to do well. On the morning of the fourth day there came a batch of letters to the mother, and as they were apparently cheery congratulatory, she was permitted to open and read them. Among them was one from a former intimate friend. It was written in ignorance of the baby's birth, and accused the young matron in cutting terms of forgetfulness and neglect of her old friends, and of a variety of other shortcomings.

Even in such circumstances such an epistle would have produced a painful impression, but coming at the time that it did, and to one whose physical strength and nerve had been weakened by a recent strain, its sequences were much more serious. When the hysterical agitation caused by the note had become calmed, the mental feverishness and mental disturbance from which the poor baby was to suffer. Within a few hours it sickened, and there for days by between life and death, refusing to nurse. Those who knew the facts in the case without hesitation imputed the child's ill health and its subsequent sickly infancy to that first blow, received while it was too young to throw off the results, as an older or stronger baby might have done.—Christine Terhune Herrick in Harper's Bazar.

The Real "Woman Problem."

Recognizing heredity as the distinctive attribute of the female sex, it becomes clear that it must be from the steady advance of woman rather than from the uncertain fluctuations of man that the sure and solid progress of the future is to come. The attempt to move the whole race forward by elevating the sex that represents the principle of instability has long enough been tried. The many cases of superiority in the sons of superior mothers, coupled with the many more cases of degenerate sons of superior sires, have taught us over and over again that the way to civilize the race is to civilize woman. And now, thanks to modern biologic science, we see why this is so.

Woman is the unchanging trunk of the great genealogic tree, while man, with all his vaunted superiority, is but a branch, a grafted scion, as it were, whose acquired qualities die with the individual, while those of woman are handed on to futurity. Woman is the race, and the race can be raised up only as she is raised up. There is no fixed rule by which nature has intended that one sex should excel the other, any more than there is any fixed point beyond which either cannot go further moving. Nature has no intentions, and evolution has no limits. True science teaches that the education of woman is the only sure road to the evolution of man.—Professor Lester F. Ward in The Forum.

Woman and Her Costume.

It is the wearer who makes the success of a dress, and the great secret of the Parisian dressmakers' art is that they adapt their fashions to the individual customer, and happily, if the wearer be a French woman, they meet with hearty co-operation. There are few who do not understand what suits them. They make a study of its figure and carriage, and though their garments are costly, they do not have too many of them. They dress well and they dress for themselves, and realize its effect in motion and in repose. They reject the "toilette" to the dignity of a fine art, and, moreover, succeed in producing a perfect result. The colors they are often daring in their combination, but they are so skillfully handled that they appear produce a discordant effect.

We are much pleased to learn that the different associations that are now being formed for teaching ladies the art of dressmaking are already successful. Music and painting are accomplishments, but dressing is a necessity, and all women should show their appreciation of art by studying it and putting on their dresses artistically. No one who has an eye for beauty of form can avoid seeing the difference between an artistically dressed person, however simple the toilet, and one who is ill dressed. The human shape is beautiful by nature, and ought not to be disfigured by its covering.—"The Five Talents of Woman."

Learn How to Relax.

Whence comes the ambition for suffering thinness in feminine souls I cannot say, but it is there. It may be an inheritance from barbarism; it may be a merciful provision of nature for what most women are fated to endure, a heroic stimulus to carry them over the crest of the wave of pain and prevent their sinking in its murderous trough. Women seem to understand this sentiment in each other and know how to fail forth its exercise, but men look on in a kind of puzzled awe. They have no such quality about them. They go about the business of being ill as if it were its contrary, being well. Every muscle is tense, every nerve alive. It sometimes requires the practice of years to learn how to relax.

"That is the trouble with you," sighs my worthy aunt Gregory. "That is the cause of many injuries and much physical disturbance. Do you know, I actually fell down stairs once without being hurt, because I relaxed! I remembered, just as I started to fall, that drunkards and babies rarely were hurt in all their tumbles. I resolved it out. They relaxed. I followed their example and escaped unharmed. I have done it ever since when it was necessary.—A. B. Ward in Harper's Magazine.

The Ugly Girl's Charms.

But putting aside the question of the utility of remedies to remove natural personal defects, an ugly girl should know that the surest way to keep her homely features or her inward figure in the remembrance of others is for her constantly to remember them herself. Self consciousness is disagreeable in a beautiful woman; in an ugly one it is intolerable.

Are these girls with dull eyes and large noses, then, to give up all hope of pleasing their companions?

By no means.

A woman who for many years led the highest social life of Pennsylvania had neither feature nor complexion tolerable. But she was stout, red haired, small featured and freckled; but her voice was sweet and low, her beautiful hands were the envy of her sympathies wide, her tact infinite. She was simple, genuine, and as unselfish as an innocent child.

The ugly girl who cultivates such charms as these needs no iron braces to compress her large joints, nor diet of acid fruits to remove her plump cheeks, to make her lovely and beloved.—Youth's Companion.

Don't Be in a Hurry.

We do not advise girls to put off marriage until they are thirty or forty, which was, I believe, the age of the daughter of Enoch when she entered the state of holy matrimony; but we do think that they should consider their best interests when they allow thoughts of love and marriage to occupy their minds in their "salad days," when they are "green in judgment." This precociousness works mischief in many ways. It prevents the enjoyment of happy years of maidenhood, when the mind and the heart are free to expand under healthful influences; it prevents improving and elevating study; it occupies the mind with fancies, desires and casts blinding veils over many a little but important fact to do well. On the morning of the fourth day there came a batch of letters to the mother, and as they were apparently cheery congratulatory, she was permitted to open and read them. Among them was one from a former intimate friend. It was written in ignorance of the baby's birth, and accused the young matron in cutting terms of forgetfulness and neglect of her old friends, and of a variety of other shortcomings.

Even in such circumstances such an epistle would have produced a painful impression, but coming at the time that it did, and to one whose physical strength and nerve had been weakened by a recent strain, its sequences were much more serious. When the hysterical agitation caused by the note had become calmed, the mental feverishness and mental disturbance from which the poor baby was to suffer. Within a few hours it sickened, and there for days by between life and death, refusing to nurse. Those who knew the facts in the case without hesitation imputed the child's ill health and its subsequent sickly infancy to that first blow, received while it was too young to throw off the results, as an older or stronger baby might have done.—Christine Terhune Herrick in Harper's Bazar.

The Real "Woman Problem."

Recognizing heredity as the distinctive attribute of the female sex, it becomes clear that it must be from the steady advance of woman rather than from the uncertain fluctuations of man that the sure and solid progress of the future is to come. The attempt to move the whole race forward by elevating the sex that represents the principle of instability has long enough been tried. The many cases of superiority in the sons of superior mothers, coupled with the many more cases of degenerate sons of superior sires, have taught us over and over again that the way to civilize the race is to civilize woman. And now, thanks to modern biologic science, we see why this is so.

Woman is the unchanging trunk of the great genealogic tree, while man, with all his vaunted superiority, is but a branch, a grafted scion, as it were, whose acquired qualities die with the individual, while those of woman are handed on to futurity. Woman is the race, and the race can be raised up only as she is raised up. There is no fixed rule by which nature has intended that one sex should excel the other, any more than there is any fixed point beyond which either cannot go further moving. Nature has no intentions, and evolution has no limits. True science teaches that the education of woman is the only sure road to the evolution of man.—Professor Lester F. Ward in The Forum.

Woman and Her Costume.

It is the wearer who makes the success of a dress, and the great secret of the Parisian dressmakers' art is that they adapt their fashions to the individual customer, and happily, if the wearer be a French woman, they meet with hearty co-operation. There are few who do not understand what suits them. They make a study of its figure and carriage, and though their garments are costly, they do not have too many of them. They dress well and they dress for themselves, and realize its effect in motion and

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

FASHIONS THAT PREVAIL IN NEW YORK, LONDON AND PARIS.

Winter Mantles of the Latest Paris Mode—Stylish Walking Jackets with Waist Coats and Braided Trimmings and New Circular Cloaks.

The general rule prevailing in winter wraps that have already been imported seems to be short mantles, very long cloaks and trim, perfect fitting jackets. The cloaks are long, with sleeves to the hem, often showing the handsome silk lining, as also in the fronts, the outside fine wool, with chins and curious brocades. Quite original is a cloak in gray cloth, which had a bodice like a robe of the Middle Ages, coming well down on the hips; it was bordered with a girdle of black gimp and beads, with handsome fringe, the coat sleeves trimmed to match.

The new circular cloaks of vicuna cloth, lined with gray squirrel, and made to fasten on one side, with large skunk collars, will be very stylish. A new kind of boa is called the "Belgravia fur collar;" it is wide, and flat round the throat and down the front, and ends with a boa of Persian bear.

ENGLISH WALKING JACKET.

The jackets are decidedly stylish in effect. Some of the new ones show but little change, save in a greater perfection of workmanship. The beige colored cloths are still well worn, with other plastrons showing no fastening, accompanied by braiding. Green cloth jackets are made in the same fashion, viz., close fitting, with coat sleeves high on shoulders, and with short basques. Some of the black jackets have red sweaters trimmed with Astrakan. The jacket illustrated in the cut is in dark blue cloth, ornamented with fancy braiding. The collar is of beaver.

Numbered with Paris mantles seen recently is one of black plush, short at the back, with long pointed sleeves, trimmed with fur far and dull passementerie. Another model had long mateiasse fronts, with back gathered at the edge and finished off with passementerie.

Gowns for Evening Wear.

Dore and gray are the fashion for evening, and the faintest gold tint with pink; and electric blue, which tones into gray, is certainly a leading color. The favorite electric tone has been singularly treated by Worth in a most original gown. The electric posh de soie was brocaded with an Empire design in black velvet, and this formed the front of the skirt cut in one, with a species of apron bib of the same which fastened outside the black velvet bodice; it finished one of a herald's tabard. Panels of black velvet fell on the electric silk brocaded in black, and the sleeves fell further keps up the impression of a dress of the past, for they stood up very full and high on the shoulders, full also at the elbow, and had black velvet at the cuffs.

A FRENCH BALL DRESS.

The Parisian model of a full dress shown in the cut is of two shades of one color, a deep shade of the same color. The skirt is entirely covered with narrow gauze flounces, and the petticoat corresponds. The sleeves and bodice are draped with shot ribbons to match.

Fashion Notes.

The hats are now and stylish. The velvet and cloth ones are large, with important brims and innumerable ostrich feathers.

The Napoleon hat has a crown sometimes with the shape of that worn by the Little Corporal. Ribbon bows are introduced on the cuffs.

The muffs are small, much trimmed with ribbon, and match the rest of the costume.

Worth is giving up the use of steel and jets at the back of the skirt, and, seeing how they have been abused, this is a step in the right direction.

Large cape hoods covering the shoulders, turning up with a sort of ledge lined with velvet, are new. One of these in dark green cloth with pinked bordering of an Oriental pattern and the hood lined with emerald green velvet.

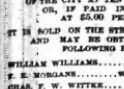
Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its accustomed prosperity; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His goodness to us in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation, State and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor:
ROBERT S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—The C. R. R. will make important timetable changes Sunday.

—Callman gives a timely talk about furs in his new advertisement to-day.

—Philip Betts was fined $10 this morning for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

—Those who know most are generally the best listeners, and the most anxious to know more about Tulip soap, say the manufacturers.

—The Plainfield Cornet Band is to accompany Winfield Scott Post, of Plainfield, on their pleasure trip to-morrow evening, as told in the special notice in another column.

—At noon to-day Mr. Joseph B. Miller, of Laing's Hotel, as stakeholder had paid out over $2,000 in election bets to Harrison voters. The most of the money was won by commercial travelers.

—At the entertainment advertised on this page by the U. O. I. O. L. Mrs. Maxwell, of Boston, Miss Haskard, Mr. Kuhn, Miss Fowler, Miss Conover, Mr. Karman, Mr. Conde, Mr. Chilvers, Miss Runyon and Miss Daisy Morse are to take part.

—The Plainfield Electric Light Company to-day offers a reward of $50 for the arrest of the person who tampered with their wires last night greatly to the annoyance especially of the audience at the lecture by ex-Councilman Rowland Cox in the Job Male Public Library building.

—The initials of the John Ulrich Guards spell just a word which will serve to Judge Ulrich's friends as a constant reminder of the element which tried to defeat the High-License Assemblyman for re-election and against which the Guards' attention is now being directed.

—There appears to have been a misunderstanding regarding last Tuesday's runaway accident. An eye-witness gives the following account: Mrs. Phillips's horse took fright at the Park avenue church and collided with Mr. Wallace Melick's buggy, breaking the wheel of the buggy, throwing the horse, cutting him severely, and throwing Mrs. Melick out of the vehicle, inflicting slight injuries and spilling along the road the eggs she was bringing to market. The Phillips buggy then collided with the market wagon of Messrs. Johnson & Mundy, breaking the cross-bar of the buggy. Mrs. Phillips's horse then ran on to Front street and was caught.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

Classes in light gymnastics will meet at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-morrow; for ladies and children at 4 p. m.; for men at 8 p. m.

The Building Committee and canvassers of the Y. M. C. A. will meet to-morrow evening at the residence of President Murray, 110 Central avenue.

The closing Gospel and song service of the week will be held at the Y. M. C. A. rooms this evening at eight o'clock and will be led by Mr. C. E. Tyler, formerly leader of the Seventh Class at Warren Mission Chapel. The members of the class are no long under the instruction of Mr. Tyler and he wishes to bring with them as many of their friends as possible. Every man will be welcome. Solos and good singing with orchestral accompaniment may be expected.

"The merchants of New York"—says Wm. E. Dodge—"the Christian men of New York, now feel and understand the importance of the Young Men's Christian Association; not only in reference to their own sons, but to the thousands coming to our cities and entering on their business life with all its temptations and dangers."

Preparations are being made by Overseer-of-the-Poor Martin to remove a young woman about eighteen years of age of Scandinavian descent to the insane asylum at Morris Plains. He went to Elizabeth yesterday in the company of physicians to procure the necessary papers.

REPUBLICANS ORGANIZING.

The Harrison and Morton Club, and the John Ulrich Guards.

At Republican Headquarters, at about eight o'clock last evening, about 40 Republicans met and proceeded to organize.

Justice V. W. Nash was chosen Chairman of the meeting, and Councilman Samuel T. Wilbur was made Secretary.

It was resolved, on motion of Mr. Charles B. Stephens, to effect a permanent organization; and the Secretary, on motion of Mr. C. H. Silvers, was instructed to prepare a roll for signatures.

A number of those present moved that the organization adopt as its name "The John Ulrich Club"; but Mr. Ulrich offered an amendment, which prevailed, that it be known as the Harrison and Morton Club. This included only the civic organization. A motion was then adopted that the uniformed members be known as "The John Ulrich Guards".

Messrs. Classen, Stephens, Coddington, Dunham and Flack were appointed by the Chair, thus empowered by motion, a Committee on Organization; and on motion of Mr. Dunham they agreed to report at the next meeting.

A committee of three, consisting of Judge Ulrich, Charles Hand and Henry V. Van Middlesworth, were appointed by the Chair, Judge Ulrich presenting the motion, to report on constitution and by-laws.

Mr. Stephens moved that a committee be appointed to solicit names for the Club, and the Chair named as such committee Messrs. Meyers, Silvers and Wilbur.

Forty-three names were signed to the roll as members, and the Club adjourned to Thursday evening, Nov. 22d. They then marched to the Tipsecanoe Club Headquarters, where a turkey supper was spread for the members and their friends and heartily partaken of, and "good old cheer" by the Master-of-Ceremonies. Later there was music on the piano, and singing; the company all taking part in high spirits, although no spirits of the intoxicating kind are allowed upon the premises.

VOORHEES OR FOWLER?

The Fourth Congressional District Still in Dispute.

The official returns of the Fourth District on the recent vote for Congress are as follows:

	Voorhees.	Fowler.	Roe.	La Monte.
Hunterdon.....	3,960	4,355	895	551
Somerset.....	3,141	1,787	1,052	952
Union.....	2,306	2,115	1,301	165
Warren.....	3,307	3,768	1,496	484
Total.....	12,148	12,190	5,077	1,552

It will be noticed by these figures that Fowler, Dem., is given a plurality of 42 over Voorhees, Rep., while Roe, Ind. Dem., and La Monte, Pro., are both some distance behind. Before the official count Voorhees had a plurality of 103, and the charge is made that the returns have since been tampered with. The courts will probably be called on to settle the dispute.

The Fourth District hitherto has been strongly Democratic.

MAURICE NOLAN GAVE WARNING.

Robber Hughes Again Plans to Escape from Jail.

Young McDonald, alias Hughes, now confined in the Somerset county jail at Somerville, made his recent attempt to escape Wednesday night. Maurice Nolan, the man accused of murdering farmer Wm. Race, of Belle Meade, warned jailor Wilson of the prisoner's plans; but Hughes, before he could be more securely confined, assaulted Mr. Wilson with a jailor worn his rounds at night. With the aid of John Burkman and Isaac Honeyman Mr. Wilson overpowered his assailant, who will hereafter be kept manacled. Hughes was imprisoned for the burglary of Alpaugh & Batt's store in Bound Brook, before the grand jury for the September term had finally adjourned; but has not yet been indicted.

Salt River and the Post-Office.

The day after election, learning that some of our Democratic friends were stranded by their overwhelming defeat in Salt River, we supplied them with tickets, coupons attached, to convey them over the various roads. The Postmaster appears to have been one of the beneficiaries of the generosity of The News, and returned a few days ago very much pleased with the trip, according to his account. But, now that the matter is settled, would it be too much for a long-suffering public who pay the salary to ask for a little attention to the post-office? The Postmaster need not trouble himself then as to whom his successor will be. The public want some attention, and it is certainly not unreasonable that they should. But if the constant complaints are not heeded it ought to be borne in mind that the public will stand no nonsense while with Gen. Harrison as President relief will be easily obtainable. Let a word to the wise be sufficient.

The following from The New York Sun of yesterday is apropos:

WHO SHALL BE POSTMASTER!

This has once more become the great and burning national question, says The Gazette and Courier, of Lancaster, Pa., just published at the beautiful town of Greenfield in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

It agitates hundreds and thousands of other towns and villages from Maine to California, and from Florida to the Territory, soon the State, of Washington.

And why should it not? What question relative to national politics can have a more continuous human interest for people all over the Union than the selection of that individual to each community who stands in popular estimation, and, in a very direct sense, as the representative of the Government at Washington? Probably almost every Democratic Postmaster in the country expects to be turned out shortly after the fourth of March next. Probably in most cases the former Republican Postmaster, if alive, expects to get in again.

Byt how? Where the specially interesting question is, "Who shall be the Postmaster of New York?" This much is certain, it will not be Henry G. Pearson.

The Mugwump, as an entity in practical politics, is extinct. Its representatives will go pretty soon, too.

"THE FIRST NAPOLEON".

Mr. Cox's Lecture at the Art Gallery.

In spite of the inclement weather last evening a select audience of nearly two hundred persons assembled in the Job Male Art Gallery to listen to Mr. Bowland Cox, of West Seventh street, as he read from prepared papers a sketch of "The Life, Battles and General Character of the First Napoleon". Mr. Cox spoke briefly of Napoleon's early career and of his being in 1796 put at the head of one of the armies by the Directory which at that time governed France. The other two armies were under the command of Jourdan and Moreau, who were to operate against Germany, while Napoleon was to wage war against the Austrians in Italy. After a series of battles in which the wonderful genius of Napoleon was shown, he, near the close of 1797, returned to France, where he became the hero of the people. The two armies of Jourdan and Moreau were practically defeated. "The Directory" Napoleon regarded as "a pear not quite ready to pluck", and, wishing to impress on the people his ability to fill the position of ruler, he proposed to the Directory an expedition to Egypt as a means of attacking the commerce and power of England in the East. The remoteness of the expedition influenced the jealous government into giving him consent. In this campaign, as in the other, he was successful. Returning suddenly, he found the "pear ready to pluck"—and plucked it. He was then elected First Consul; or, practically, ruler and King of France. Now that he was in power he began that wonderful series of campaigns against the allied nations the like of which was never equaled.

Mr. Cox described the character of the man, spoke of the great love borne him by his soldiers; of his wonderful victories; of his rise and fall. The interest of the reading was heightened by by anecdotes of Napoleon's different phases of character; of his tact, watchfulness, care of men; of his economy; of his habit of promoting. No one unless he were well adapted to fill the place would be promoted. The man would not fail in a plan to command. He must have merit; he must earn promotion.

The reading closed with a description of the battle of Waterloo supposed to be written by one of the Imperial body-guard. The audience vigorously applauded Mr. Cox at the close.

The committee in charge consisted of Messrs Mason W. Tyler, Henry P. Talmage and J. Evarts Tracy.

THURSDAY EVENING SOCIABLES.

Wet Weather Doesn't Dampen Kindly Feeling.

Members of the Young People's Association of the First Baptist church were entertained at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Martin I. Conover on Rockview avenue, North Plainfield, last evening. The rainstorm that had prevailed all day had as appreciable effect on the attendance; but the guests all had a pleasant time. Besides amusing charades there was singing by Mrs. Cooley and the Misses March, and an interesting address by ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, who spoke instructively of the mountain region of our great West. Similar conversational talks are to be made a feature of the First Baptist sociables this Winter.

The monthly sale of Warren Mission was held in the chapel last evening. An opening prayer by Mr. George Watts was following by songs from Mr. Carpenter, the Messrs. Wheeler and five young ladies from Councilman M. Marvin Dunham's choir, with recitations by Misses George Watts and Robt. Ingram interspersed. Refreshments and social intercourse followed.

AFTER QUAIL AND RABBITS.

Heavy Rains Fail to Keep Sportsmen Indoors.

Not since the Indians kept down the surplus game in New Jersey has there been such an array of hunters in the woods of this State. Wet and soggy as yesterday was, the weather had little effect on the long-deferred ardor of sportsmen who yearned for game. The quail and rabbit season opened yesterday. This is two weeks later than usual. The law was changed last year, deferring the season from Nov. 1st to Nov. 15th. Men with guns fired them frequently at rabbits and infrequently at quail. The blizzard killed many quail, and they are scarce in some of the best. Thus 1,500 birds were distributed last year by the Game Protective Society. The season closes Dec. 29th.

Incendiaries at Elizabeth.

At two o'clock yesterday morning the union depot of the Central and Pennsylvania railroads and Mulford's lumber-yard were found to be on fire in different places. Bunches of oil-soaked waste had been ignited and shoved under the platform and between the lumber. Wm. J. Burnes, 23 years old, was arrested near the scene on suspicion of having started the fires. He boards over with oil. He is also suspected of having attempted to burn the Harris flour mills a few weeks ago.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The Prohibition party vote in New Jersey in 1886 was 19,008; in 1887, 13,332; in 1888, not exceeding 8,000.

Mrs. Harriet Pierson, the oldest woman in Bloomfield, died Tuesday of old age. She lived homestead in Glen Ridge at the age of ninety-six years.

Samuel Crump, of Montclair, is again on the warpath after unlicensed saloons. He will complain of half a dozen before the week is out, having obtained evidence against them.

The Newark Evening News prints the figures of the amounts of money spent in the various wards of Newark by the Democrats. They foot up a total of $19,100 for the entire city.

The Attorney General has decided that the gunning season in South Jersey does not come in until Nov. 16th. Many sportsmen have been under the impression that it comes in on Nov. 15th.

Sarah Holcombe, of Mr. Pleasant, has just entered on the nineteenth year of her age. Her general health is good and the bids fair to complete the 100th year. She is the last survivor of a family of 13 children.

Levi Cole, of Newark, tried to make his horse enter the saloon of J. B. Geisbel, in Market street, Paterson, Tuesday night. The horse got in half way and then sent a large part of his body through one of the plate glass windows.

Miss Maria H. Nutt, of Bordentown, has in her possession a bedstead and spring mattress once used by Joseph Bonaparte, formerly King of Spain, when he made his country his home. The bedstead is of solid mahogany, mounted in finely wrought, chased brass. At the east end are two columns, behind which are large plate-glass mirrors set into the bedposts.

Mrs. Edward Danforth, of Summit, wife of Edward Danforth, has received a letter from her husband, who deserted her a few weeks ago. This letter is dated Aden, Arabia. He implored her forgiveness and says that he had been guilty of folly in leaving her. He made a hasty departure and that he will be only too glad to return if she will take him back.

About a dozen communists against the notorious "Pierpont Town" were received by the Bloomfield Township Committee Wednesday night. One was from Brookdale, where the fellow remained several days. The Committee passed a resolution offering a reward of $50 for his arrest and conviction. A reward of $25 was offered for the arrest of any boys caught using slungshots.

Wednesday morning a fire broke out in the large poultry-house of Henry Phillips, at Hammonton, completely destroying the largest poultry farm in the town. The house in which the fire originated was 310 feet in length. All the incubators, brooders and about 1,300 small chickens were consumed. The loss is estimated at about $6,000, on which there is an insurance of $750.

Complete returns from every county in the State on file in the Secretary of State's office at Trenton show on the face a plurality for Cleveland of 7,060. Fisk, the prohibition candidate for President, received 7,749 votes and Streeter, of North Plainfield, received a change at the hands of the State Board of Canvassers when they meet at Trenton Nov. 20th. The returns on file in the Secretary's office of the counties, but it is probable that it will not make a difference of 100 votes one way or the other.

Joseph, and eight year old son of Joseph D. Lowden, city editor of The Elizabeth Journal, had a very narrow escape from drowning Wednesday. The elder Lowden and two servants about his home Mr. Lowden had been engaged in raising the house. In course of the work a hole was cut in the kitchen door yet uncovered. The little fellow, unconscious of his danger, stepped out of the doorway and tumbled head foremost into the cellar, in which there was about four feet of water. He screamed for help. Mrs. Lowden heard the latter and hastened to the cellar door and pulled the little fellow, who was badly frightened, immediately to the surface.

The three pretty cottages on Simpson avenue, East Newark, known as the "Bird Cages", belonging to Minnie Cummines, the actress, have been sold by Sheriff Theodore Fields to Mr. Kenny, of Long Branch, who was the purchaser, bidding in the property to cover a claim of $3,300 which he had on the three cottages. Robert Schaick, of Red Bank, held a $3,000 second mortgage on the same property, but it was sold for $2,400—not enough to cover even the first mortgage. The probabilities are that Mr. Van Schaick will make investigations shortly. It is said that Mrs. Cummings proposes to dispute the legality of the sale in the courts.

Anton Ahenstetter, of the New York Cassino, called on Justice Lewis, of Summit, yesterday, in regard to Mary Wolters, a young woman who was found in the Fresh Air Home, Providence. He says that he is personally acquainted with the girl's parents in Baden Baden, Germany, that her father owns a grocery store, and that he and her parents are wealthy and well connected. He brought a letter from the German Consul. Justice Kelly related the story of the girl and gave him a pass to the county jail at Elizabeth, where he went and interviewed Miss Wolters. He then returned and talked to the matter by reading an account of it in The New York Staats-Zeitung.

The recent publications of articles charging Dr. James H. Patterson, the County Clerk of Monmouth County, with having violated the State laws in holding back the money received from liquor licenses, has created much excitement. Dr. Patterson was re-elected last week for his second term of five years. At the meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders yesterday Freeholder Seabrook, of Raritan Township, offered a resolution directing County Auditor Applegate to make an investigation of the finances of the county. The resolution was not seconded. Mr. Seabrook then offered a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee of three to make the investigation. This was promptly seconded and voted down.

Essex County Collector Smith was engaged all this morning paying off the election officers of the county for their services on election day and during the canvassing of the returns at the Courthouse. There are ninety polling districts in the county, with four officers, and the total amount paid the election officers is $4,685.60. In addition to this Sheriff Hine receives $120 for posting notices giving the law in regard to bribery at elections, making the total cost of the last election to the county $4,021.60. The city of Newark had to pay the entire expenses of its charter election and the registry therefor, besides paying for assistance for the election. The total cost to Newark of the charter election and the registration for the general election is over $6,000.

What It Cost Pidcock.

[From The Warren Democrat.]

Pidcock's Congressman cost him from $12,000 to $18,000, as he will be of little use to him with a Republican administration and perhaps a Republican House of Representatives. It may be Fowler, '92. C'est bon when it's the passage! That's what Pid. was after.

THE WATER WE DRINK.

Something About Filters That do not Purify.

[From The Newark Evening News.]

The old charcoal and gravel filters, which once had the entire confidence of families and physicians as entirely efficacious in purifying drinking water, have been recently found to be not only of dubious character, but even in some cases to aggravate the danger which they were expected to allay. The investigation of the Rhode Island Medical Society seems to show conclusively that the modes and interstices of the filtering matter become clogged with the deleterious organisms of the water, and that these increase in number when the filter is not in use, standing in the warm air of the kitchen. In one examination by this society unfiltered water containing thirty-six colonies of organic growth increased to 10,000 after filtration. The danger of the filter seems to lie in the impossibility of thoroughly cleansing it of purifying the water is to boil it freely for ten minutes. Then pour into a large earthen dish in the open air where it can cool away from any chance of contamination. The water thus prepared may be kept in a stone jar in a cool cellar for days, and used as at a time, and when cooled with pure ice is a good substitute for spring water where spring water cannot be obtained, and it is probably as harmless as this gift of bounteous nature can be rendered in the restrictive environments of a large city.

TWO DEMOCRATIC RECRUITS.

Geissenhainer and Fowler New Men in Politics.

[From The New York World (Dem.).]

Congressman-elect Jacob A. Geissenhainer has entered his constituency and others in his District much annoyance by reason of the constriction of his compassionate way of putting "the Third", and takes in Middlesex, Monmouth and Union counties. Mr. Geissenhainer is another rare recruit on the political stage of the State and was given prominence in the early canvass by reason of his undoubted ability and his great wealth. He is a business man whose success has been pronounced, and his victory Nov. 6th was not even hoped for by his party. Mr. Geissenhainer will surely make a safe representative of his State and his constituents will never have cause to repent his election.

Samuel Fowler, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Fourth District, formerly the district, comprising Hunterdon, Warren, Somerset and Sussex counties, is a lawyer of prominence and now enjoys political honors for the first time outside of his county, Hunterdon. He is a graduate of Princeton College, as were both of his opponents in the late campaign, which the Democrats claim he won. Mr. Fowler is a fluent speaker and a good lawyer.

AN INTERNATIONAL MARRIAGE.

The Chamberlain-Endicott Wedding a Quiet Affair—Dead Letter Statistics—Department Guard Proposed—Inaugural Committee—Minister Pak Says Good-by.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—In the presence of the president of the United States and a small but very distinguished gathering Miss Mary Endicott, only daughter of the Hon. William C. Endicott, secretary of war, was married to Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, a member of the English parliament. The wedding took place in St. Thomas's church.

The bride was a lovely picture. She was stately and beautiful. She wore a simple traveling dress. It was a pretty fashion given of French gray camel's hair cloth, simply but elegantly made. Her bonnet was gray, with a bunch of white in it, and it was supported at the back with a diamond pin, the gift of Mrs. Whitney.

Miss Endicott, leaning upon the arm of her father, approached the altar. There she was met by Mr. Chamberlain, who stepped in from the vestry and took a position at the chancel rail. He seemed to have lost all color and was somewhat flustered. He wore a frock coat, dark trousers, white scarf and a buttonmore of violets. There were no bridesmaids or groomsmen. There were no floral decorations. The ceremony by the Rev. Dr. Leonard and Franks performed the wedding ceremony, according to the rites of the Episcopal church. It was soon finished, and the wife of the English minister, the president and Mrs. Cleveland, went to the Endicott mansion, where a collation was served.

The presents of the bride were very simple. The bridal presents were very handsome. Mrs. Cleveland sent a complete set of silver knives, forks and spoons, gold lined, and encased in satin and velvet case. The Rev. Mrs. Whitney, Mrs. Fairchild, Mrs. Vilas, Mrs. Dickinson and the Misses Bayard sent articles of jewelry, silverware and other costly remembrances. Then there was a bank check for a large amount from Mr. and Mrs. George Peabody, the bride's grandparents, a diamond and sapphire necklace from her uncle in London; a diamond and sapphire necklace for her hair, a pair of diamond and sapphire bracelets and a diamond ring from Mr. Chamberlain, and a diamond crescent from her father. Mrs. Chamberlain takes with her seven dresses made by Worth and an elaborate supply of embroidered linen.

Neither Lord Sackville nor his daughters, Secretary Bayard, Mr. Edmunds, Gagner Gardland attended the wedding or reception. It was said that the latter has an aversion for Chamberlain's views, and feared that he might be compelled to meet him if he attended the wedding. Mrs. Vilas is ill, and that accounted for the absence of her husband. Mr. Chamberlain and his bride departed for New York at 2:45 o'clock.

VARIED OPINIONS ON THE OUTLOOK.

"West Virginia has gone Democratic beyond a doubt," said Representative W. L. Wilson, of Virginia, to a reporter to-day. "We have the governor, the legislature and three members of the house—perhaps four. Mr. Wilson says that the Republicans have control of the next house, but he does not think the majority will be large enough to be of any great advantage to the party.

Gen. Edward Burke, of Nebraska, is one does not see how it is possible to tell the composition of the next house until the result of the official returns is announced in every congressional district. It is so now that a few votes in one or two districts may change it either way, and he is not ready to claim the house for sure or to concede it to the other. He says it is almost impossible for the majority to be so much as three either way.

Representative Wilson, secretary of the Democratic congressional committee, told a reporter that he thought the Democrats would certainly have a majority of one or three in the next house. They had succeeded, according to his information, elected Fisher in Michigan, Simmons in North Carolina and most less than three members in West Virginia. He thinks that Breckinridge, a Democrat has been elected in Mr. Faulkner's district in Kentucky by an increased majority.

DEAD LETTER STATISTICS.

In his annual report the superintendent of the dead letter office states that about 6,500,000 pieces of original dead mail matter were received during the year, an increase over last year of nearly 900,000 pieces. There were about 4,800,000 ordinary unclaimed letters; 78,000 coin letters; 174,500 returned from foreign countries as undeliverable; 89,000 letters originated in foreign countries; 1,646 contained unmailable articles and were held for postage, etc. The office succeeded in returning 2,750,000 pieces to their owners without opening. There were 20,342 pieces containing money amounting to $37,000, 24,698 pieces containing negotiable paper, etc., amounting to $1,346,000 face value, and 3,657 containing postal notes amounting to $5,708. The proceeds of the sale of unclaimed property last year amounted to $2,823.

PROPOSED DEPARTMENT MILITARY GUARD.

It is proposed to organize a battalion of four companies of the District Guard to be composed exclusively of employes of the departments—one company from the state, war and navy departments, one company from the treasury department, one company from the postoffice and interior departments, and one company from the government printing office. Gen. Ordway suggests that in case the necessity should ever arise for guarding the department buildings these companies would be thoroughly reliable and well acquainted with the buildings.

DR. HAMILTON'S SUCCESSOR.

The first on the list for promotion to the position of surgeon general, to succeed John H. Hamilton, retired, is Surgeon Charles Smart, of the United States army. Smart resigned, is Surgeon Preston Hallbrook, now on duty in Philadelphia, will be promoted to the position, temporary charge of the bureau has been given to him to thoroughly acquainted with the duties of the office.

THE NEW SWISS MINISTER.

Dr. Adrien de Claparede, the new Swiss minister, was formally presented to President Cleveland by Secretary Bayard.

INAUGURAL COMMITTEE.

A. T. Brooks, chairman of the inaugural committee, has appointed the following additional officers: Myron M. Parker, first vice chairman; R. Kurtz Johnson, chairman executive committee; Hon. Thomas H. Ford, chairman reception committee; Gen. W. V. Boynton, chairman press committee. All of these officers will also be a part of the executive committee. Crosby S. Noyes and A. H. S. Davis have also been appointed members of the executive committee.

MINISTER PAK SAYS GOOD-BYE.

Minister Pak Chang Yang and his attaches were at the White House yesterday. The minister has been granted a leave of absence, but does not expect to return, so he said first word to the president, chairman of the Allen, in a short, military manner.

RIOTING IN BROOKLYN.

Striking Street Car Men Attempt to Prevent the Running of Cars.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 16.—The railroad strike took a very serious turn yesterday. From the hour the strike began until yesterday it was a very tame affair, but after that it gave rise to some of the most striking scenes ever witnessed in that city.

Officers of the road caused the rumor to be spread that it would hire a new force in the morning. The employes made up their minds to prevent any car from running.

A number of the men went off to their annual ball. At daybreak about two-thirds of the 300 on strike assembled near the stables, part of them at Nostrand and Park avenues and the others at the car barn up in Nostrand avenue, opposite the penitentiary. Crowds of boys and idle young men not connected with the strike assembled also. It was a glorious chance for them to make trouble. It is not necessary to say they took sides with the men on strike.

Word was passed along that fifteen new men had been hired to take out cars as soon as the police arrived. A shout went down to Lee avenue and Gwinnett street and tacked one of the company's switches. They ripped up the planks and filled the holes with stones, rendering the switch useless.

Slabs of brown stone secured from a neighboring yard were placed across the tracks and a regiment of boys rolled ash barrels and dumped their contents right in the middle of the street.

The company's officials decided at 10 o'clock to send out a car from the penitentiary end of the route. The car left the barn at 10:30 and swung on to the down track. Tremendous groans and a volley of stones greeted it. A crowd got on the platform and around the horses, which they tried to unhitch. Sergt. Gans ordered his men to charge. The officers charged with their night sticks, followed by a reserve squad, numbering 400, who scampered over the fields near by. Meanwhile a gang of young fellows had secured big stones across the down track. The officer who made the charge arrested four men.

The car continued to the end of the route, and the return trip was not quite so tempestuous, although it was enlivened by a number of similar episodes. Two other cars made the round trip and were stoned at frequent intervals.

A conference between the company and representatives of the men was held last night, lasting until midnight. It resulted in a compromise, and the cars are running to-day as usual.

A Hopeful Southern View.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 16.—The News and Courier, a leading Democratic organ, in an editorial this morning speaks highly of Gen. Harrison's personal and public character; declares that he will be the actual as well as nominal head of his administration, with no power behind the throne; that he will not be ruled by any of his counsels; that Mr. Dudley and Mr. Quay have received the termination of their influence; that there will be no legislation or action hostile to the south, and that the home rule influences under which large amounts of northern capital have found profitable investment and which will not be disturbed, but rather encouraged. The positive style of the editorial and the fact that these letters come from Editor Dawson, who is a member of the national Democratic executive committee, and who has just returned from a northern visit, have caused much attention to be given to the publication.

Last of the Rochester Victims.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 16.—The body of what seems to have been the last victim of the fatal fire at the lantern works last Friday night has been excavated, but is as yet unidentified. This makes the death reach at least thirty-four, and this may be increased to thirty-seven, because of portions of three being found Wednesday. It has not been decided whether these portions of bodies belong to bodies previously found, or whether they are the remains of unknown dead. It is possible that there have been two or three victims whose names were not on the company's books, having begun work during the week of the fire. Remains were found in the Hinckley's book, which was burned. The funeral of a number of the dead was held yesterday, and many affecting scenes took place.

A Strike Which May Spread.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Nov. 16.—The strike of freight handlers on the Louisville route continues, and no train has gone out since Monday evening from the yards at New Albany. Over seventy-five cars are on the track, but so far the company has not been able to move a wheel. The men are standing firm, and have the quiet and moral support of the engineers in their effort to secure the demands they have made. The following notice was posted on the blackboard in the company's freight office to-day: "Effective, Agent has your money waiting for you." It is understood that the freight conductors and engineers will join the brakeman in case the company tries to fill the places of the strikers

Republican Orators Having Good Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 16.—Fifteen hundred guests partook of a banquet given by the Home Market club at Music hall, in celebration of the Republican national victory, which the club helped to bring about. The galleries were filled with people who listened to the postprandial eloquence of the Republican leaders. Timothy Merrack presided, and among those beside him were Governor Ames, Governor-elect Brackett, Senator W. E. Chandler, ex-Governor Long, Hon. William A. Russell, Enos F. Shepard, Warner Miller, Senator Hoar, Gen. A. Morse, Gen. Sharpe, A. W. Beard, and many equally prominent.

Murdered His Father-in-Law.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 16.—In Wallingford last evening Sosion G. Jenkins shot and killed his father-in-law, Jacob Anthony, a respected resident of that place, aged 60. Jenkins afterward shot off as rightfear in an attempt at suicide. The shot off his head. Marriage to Anthony's daughter, five years ago. Jenkins was a prosperous merchant, but has soon took to drink, and his wife went to live with her parents. Jenkins has been on a spree for several days, and has threatened to kill his father-in-law and the whole family. The murderer was arrested.

Another Papal Rescript.

DUBLIN, Nov. 16.—The Irish bishops have received another papal rescript, which throws them to actively execute the instructions contained in the former rescript. These instructions were to denounce the plan of campaign and agrarian agitation. The rescript orders the bishops to instruct the priests under them to advise their people accordingly and to prevent public outrages. The bishops still hold a conference before reading the ex script in the churches.

A Rough Passage.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The officers of the steamer Parthenia, which arrived from Glasgow, report the passage very stormy and dangerous they ever experienced. The vessel was somewhat strained, but not seriously damaged. Mrs. R. S. Pearce, of Portland, Me., a passenger, died on the voyage, and was being thrown to the deck by a bunch of the heavy weather.

POWDERLY TO THE FORE.

His Annual Report Was Heavily Loaded.

IN FAVOR OF ONE MAN POWER.

Strong Words Against His Fellows in Office—He Defends the Educational Fund—Indirect Shot at Barry—Candidates for the Office He Holds.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 16.—Powderly and Litchman have sealed their differences, and as a consequence their reports were submitted to the general assembly of the Knights of Labor. In neither was any direct allusion made to past differences. In his report General Master Workman Powderly says: "With an executive board whose members were not in harmony with each other, and travelled from place to place denouncing their fellow-officers, and condemning actions that they were not responsible for, it should not be wondered that we have had trouble."

"No local have been until each item of expenditure for the past two years has been carefully scanned. There is nothing contained in the expense account of this order that your officers need be ashamed of. There is no dishonesty or attempt at it, and the order at large is entitled to a full and complete account of what has been done with its money.

"In trade matters we should leave the settlement to our national trade assemblies. Fix their status at this convention and then allow no interference with their rights. The general master workman's position under the general laws of our laws, held responsible for the acts of other officers, and has no right to say, who those officers shall be; he is held responsible for their acts and should be in public for what other officers do, yet is denied the privilege of saying who those officers shall be.

"One man power," the general master workman declares, "is an absolute necessity, in order to insure success, but those who centre that power should first know what power to give; and when the end of that man's term arrives they should know whether he has wielded his power in such a way as to deserve its re-endorsements."

Referring to some of his fellow officers he says they are men with whom he would not associate in private business if he desired success.

Mr. Powderly favors the admission of boys and girls to the Knights of Labor, and upon the subject he says: "Under our laws we are not permitted to admit to membership young men and women whose habits have not as yet been formed. It has been recommended that we institute a junior order of the Knights of Labor, and that members introduce their sons and daughters to the schools of economic and social studies through that medium while yet their minds are easily impressed and while the good in organization may be retained and appreciated free from the curse of suspicion and jealousy. I recommend that a special committee be appointed to consider the suggestion."

In defense of his call for money for educational purposes Mr. Powderly says that the millions which were spent in strikes been devoted to carrying on educational campaign we would have made strikes impossible. So long as the entire control and managements of the public highways of the country—the railways—remains in the hands of private individuals while doing the work of the nation, just so long will the operation of railroads be subject to strikes and will failure. The order is a thinking machine; it deals in ideas, not threats or force."

After making an indirect attack on Thomas B. Barry, Mr. Powderly pitches into strikes, which, he says, should be the last thing for workmen to resort to. He says he has implicit faith in them, but believes in the efficacy of strikes. He wants his followers to strike against the system that encourages gambling in land, money, food or railways.

The order, he says, has made great headway in England and will flourish in France. He urges the general assembly to send a representative to the Paris world's fair, which is to be held in Paris next year.

Concerning the election of a general master workman he says he still maintains that the general impression seem to be that Mr. Powderly must accept reelection if it is hoped to prevent further defections and save the order. Powderly refuses to speak, and this fact is considered as evidence of willingness to accept once more.

Mr. Powderly, however, be several candidates no matter what conclusion Mr. Powderly may reach. The name of Hugh Cavanaugh, of Cincinnati, has been added to the list of probable candidates, which now includes Robert D. Layton, of Pittsburg; W. T. Lewis, of the Miners; James E. Quinn, of D. A. 49; Richard Griffiths and George Schilling, of Chicago.

The Times' Irrelevancies.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—It is expected that the tedium of the Parnell commission's sessions will not be relieved until The Times produce evidence directly connecting the seven Parnellites with specific offenses. If The Times continues to exhume the stale facts and fictions that have characterized its efforts thus far it is the intention of Sir Charles Russell, counsel for the Parnellites, to make another endeavor to get the court to order the prosecutors to begin an inquiry into definite charges.

What Is the Matter at Durham?

DURHAM, N. C., Nov. 16.—The boggs business crash ever known in North Carolina occurred here when the following six failures made assignments: The Bank of Durham, W. T. Blackwell president, $400,000; R. J. Parham, $100,000; J. W. Blackwell, coal dealer, $100,000; W. A. Erwin, $25,000; Moore & Shaw, $10,000; and Robbins & Stone, $8,000. The assets have not yet been announced. It is reported that some will pay in full, but this is only a rumor. The failures are a great surprise.

To Raise Racing Weights.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The committee appointed by the American Turf congress to confer with the representative racing associations of the east have agreed to report in favor of raising the weight for 2-year-olds to 110 pounds and for 3-year-olds to 122 pounds. The subject of licensing the jockeys is under consideration, but no definite conclusion has yet been reached.

Both Deathbeds Killed.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 16.—A special to The Picayune from Bayou Des Allemands says: Van Matthews and J. B. Woodruff, of Pointe Coupee parish, fought at New Roads over a land purchase. Matthews was killed and Woodruff is dying. Both were prominent citizens. Woodruff leaves a young wife and two children. Matthews leaves a wife and one child.

ALL EXCOMMUNICANTS.

Dr. McGlynn's Followers Are Condemned by Archbishop Corrigan.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The action instituted by Philip McGuire, administrator of the late Father John McGuire, against the trustees of St. Patrick's cathedral for an injunction to restrain the latter from interfering with the burial of the plaintiff's father in Calvary cemetery, and also to recover $1,000 damages, as a consequence of their refusal, was brought to trial in the supreme court, before Judge Beach. Mr. McGuire Sr., was a great admirer of Dr. McG lyn, and while attending a meeting of the Anti-Poverty society on Feb. 17 last suddenly fell over and died. The trustees refused to allow his remains to be buried with those of his wife in Calvary cemetery, and they were buried in Greenwood cemetery, where they have since been waiting the result of this proceeding by his family. The plaintiff alleges that his father purchased the lot in Calvary cemetery in 1870, when his mother died, paying $10 for it, and that the old man, being a good Catholic for many years and a regular attendant of the church, was entitled to burial there.

The defense declares that as Father McGlynn was removed from his pastorate office and was no longer connected with the church, all those who followed him and acquiesced in his anti-poverty doctrine, which is antagonistic to the teachings of the church, really became excommunicated and are so considered by the head of the church. This view of the matter Col. Bliss, counsel for the trustees, asserted last evening, is taken by the highest authority in the church at Rome, and hence the result in this case would not only effect the burial of Mr. McGuire, but also all others who sympathize with the expriest and believe in the doctrine now advocated by him. He asserted that any Catholic aiding or assisting Dr. McGlynn placed themselves in the same position that he was, according to the highest ecclesiastical authorities.

Dempsey and Donovan Fight a Draw.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Jack Dempsey, the present holder of the middleweight championship, and Mike Donovan, the ex-middleweight champion, had a six round "go" for scientific points, before an immense audience, at the Pastime rink, in Williamsburg, last evening. Donovan, who was supposed to have passed the halcyon days, surprised every one, including Jack Dempsey. Very little hitting was done, but remarkable science was displayed. Both men were as quick as a flash in avoiding each other's blows. Donovan forced the fighting, and was the aggressor in the first part of it throughout. At the close Referee O'Brien said that a more scientific contest was never witnessed, and that the only decision he could give was that of "a draw."

The announcement was greeted with loud cheers.

Imprisoned Without Cause.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 16.—Thomas B. McQuaid, of Boston, is a man who is now in jail under indictment for the murder of Lillie A. Hoyle, at Webster, Mass., will be released on Saturday. Mr. Hoyle, upon whose testimony the defendants were arrested, has pronounced her story a lie, and told another tale, which she has also repented, and which investigation proves to be false. The district attorney admits that there is no case against the prisoners.

Five Witnesses Lynched.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 16.—At the home of the Baldknobber king, Dave Walker, in Christian county, a rumor was current that five of the witnesses who testified against him at his trial for murder have been lynched by Baldknobbers. It is said that as soon as it was announced that the jury heard of the Baldknobbers must hang the friends of Walker wreaked vengeance on the five principal witnesses who brought him within the shadow of the gallows.

Cut in Two by a Horse Sow.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 16.—Grey Easton, a boy 17 years of age, met with horrible death. He was riding on a tilting truck in the Dann Manufacturing company's works. The truck tilted and the operative lost his balance and fell. He struck on a circular saw below, which cut his body in two from the top of the right shoulder to the left breast. Death followed instantly.

King Christian's Quarter Centenary.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 16.—The twenty-fifth anniversary of King Christian's accession to the throne was celebrated yesterday. Bells were rung and salutes were fired in his honor. All the members of the royal family and many foreign princes attended service at St. Mary's church, where the "Te Deum" was sung. A banquet was given in the evening in honor of the king's jubilee.

Government Gun Works.

PARIS, Nov. 16.—The government works for the manufacture of small arms, at Chatellerault, in the department of Vienne, have been destroyed by fire. As the Lebel rifle was made there the fire will cause a suspension for a time in its manufacture. The fire is thought to have been caused by accident. The loss is placed at 1,000,000 francs. No one was killed.

CABINET SUGGESTIONS.

Alleged Possibilities, Probabilities and Certainties.

BLAINE CONCEDED FIRST PLACE.

He Will Visit New York for a Conference. Wanamaker, Wallace, Clarkson, Payson, Goff, Henderson, Miller, Platt and Others Spoken Of.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Hon. James G. Blaine will be in the city next week. He was invited here to confer with a number of prominent politicians, and although a letter was received by one of his strongest friends and staunchest political supporters saying that he would come. The writer also verified the current rumor that Mr. Blaine had been offered the first place in Mr. Harrison's cabinet, and intimated that the conference here might in a large degree influence his decision in regard to accepting it.

Mr. Harrison is expected in the city about Dec. 1. Meanwhile Col. Clarkson, vice chairman of the national committee, will look after his interests and keep him advised until Chairman Quay returns from his short vacation at home.

A Republican very near to both Mr. Quay and Gen. Harrison said last night: "Gen. Alger has signified his wishes to Gen. Harrison. He does not want a cabinet position. He wants to be Governor for the race in 1892. I think Clarkson, who threw down body for Harrison from Blaine, on that famous Monday morning in Chicago, will go in the cabinet. Clarkson will act, as I have believed from the first. Lew Wallace may be made secretary of war. Pennsylvania, New York and the Pacific coast will be well rewarded. But who the men will be is largely guess work."

The Press says: "Though only ten days have passed since Gen. Harrison's election, two important communications have passed between the president elect and some of his close friends here bearing on the question of the cabinet. One of these has turn to the question of the Mississippi. The Pacific slope confident y counts on having a representative, and hopes that it will be the attorney general. I believe that this is one of the offices which Gen. Harrison hinted at during the campaign, and the California men claim it as a promise.

"John B. Henderson, of Missouri, has not just come to Washington to be present in behalf of the south. He would like to have the postoffice department. Gen. Harrison is likely to have a representative from that section in his cabinet, but if Nathan Goff, of West Virginia, is defeated he will have first call on any portfolio that is to go south.

"I see things are coming in regard to Gen. Harrison's cabinet," said a well informed gentleman yesterday, and one who made the nomination possible at Chicago. "I see that Thomas Henderson is mentioned for a portfolio, and the other is that Lew Wallace will be secretary of war. The Pensacy vania man, I believe, will be the head of the Land office. He is not a certainty. Mr. Blaine will have the state department offered him beyond a doubt, and there are intentions that he will accept. I am in all human probability to be one of the last talk is the speculation about the man whom the state will present. I feel confident that his name will not be Warner Miller. It strikes one as very probable that ex-Senator Platt would be chosen. Mr. Miller is thought by some to have waived all claims to a cabinet place when he accepted the gubernatorial nomination. That is the position which other candidates for honors take against him."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—The Star says there is a movement on the part of the friends of Judge (Representative) Payson, of Illinois, to gain him for secretary of the interior under Mr. Harrison. It is claimed for him that he is the best informed man in congress on the public land question and other matters especially relating to the interior, and that some of the public land reforms have been accomplished chiefly through his efforts.

Mr. Blaine Refuses to Talk.

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 16.—In consequence of the statement made that President-elect Harrison had tendered the secretary of state's portfolio to Mr. Blaine and that the latter had accepted it, a reporter called upon Mr. Blaine at his residence to ascertain the truth of the statement.

"It is published as a fact, Mr. Blaine," said the reporter, "that Mr. Harrison has tendered you the position of secretary of state in his cabinet. Is the statement true?"

"I will not say whether it is or not," replied Mr. Blaine.

"What have you anything about the subject" persisted the reporter.

"No; I will not be interviewed by any newspaper man on any subject whatever. Good day."

Was It a Nihilist Plot.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 16.—It is stated that a student named Ossipoff was found dead immediately after the accident to the czar's train. The inference is that the disaster was the result of a Nihilist pact.

Generosity in Evening Attire.

He had evidently risen from a good dinner a few minutes before, had the tall, portly man who strode down Dearborn avenue about 8 o'clock. There was a contented expression on his ruddy countenance. He was smoking an exquisitely flavored cigar of the kind that costs 25 cents apiece. His light overcoat was thrown open, despite the cold wind, revealing his evening dress and broad expanse of shirt-bosom, whereon sparkled two large diamonds. Altogether, he presented a picture of prosperity that attracted a shabby individual who slunk out of an alley. He stood with cap pulled well down over his eyes, shivering in his thin coat.

"Excuse me, sir," he said. "Could I speak to you a minute?"

Without waiting to receive permission, he plunged into his story. The first words of it brought the diner out to a standstill.

"Say, just out of the Joliet penitentiary. I won't say I was innocent, for I was guilty. It was drink that led me to steal. I want to leave my past life behind me, sir. I want to get work and begin anew. But I can't. I've walked the streets thirty hours without sleep and without food. Once I was near having a job, when I saw the policeman that arrested me coming up the street, and I went away. I'm tired with cold and hunger. I never begged before. Will you help me, sir?"

There was a glare in his eyes and a hollow eagerness in his voice. The diner-out had listened intently.

"My friend," said he, "I don't know whether you are telling the truth or not. I hope you are. If you have fallen into evil ways and been punished for it there is no reason in that why you should despair. You have life left, and while there is life there is hope. It is never too late to mend. Some of the best and greatest men have risen to glory out of the ashes of their former lives of corruption. Take this," and he balanced a coin between his fingers, "but don't spend it for drink. Let it help you to be a man. Determine to be one, and to make the world look up to you instead of down upon you. Good night."

He dropped the coin in the tramp's outstretched hand and entered the darkness. The unfortunate hastened to the nearest gas lamp and looked at the coin which lay in his hand and filled his heart with such wild hopes.

It was a nickel!—Chicago Tribune.

He Was Still Alive.

Mrs. Jason—Jehiel, was there ever any such person as the fool killer?

Mr. Jason—What idiotic questions you do ask. How the dickens do I know? I never met him.

Mrs. Jason—Oh, I know that.—Terre Haute Express.

The Arizona Kicker.

We take the following from the last issue of The Arizona Kicker:

Sister Ann Eliza.—Our genial sheriff, Bill Mayes, dropped in on us the other day to subscribe for a copy of The Kicker to send to a friend in Vermont, and to speak words of cheer and encouragement in regard to our enterprise. Before he left he incidentally served papers on us in libel suits as follows:

The Willow Hockins	$10,000
Jack Hines	20,000
Col. Johnson	10,000
Mrs. Southers	15,000
Soddering	70,000

All the above suits were the result of a few truthful paragraphs in a recent issue, and while not exactly expected, are not unwelcome. We don't think a newspaper amounts to shucks until it has half a dozen libel suits on the docket, and we don't believe that any editor will get up and bump himself until he realizes that he has got to raise $200,000 in cash inside of a year. Friends, Romans! Come and see us!

EXPLANATORY.—Last week we advised our friends to give the cold shoulder to a traveling theatrical company which advertised a week's engagement at Red Hog or Dog hair, and after playing to empty benches for two nights, the company slid out of town, though not before long the leading man, the villain, the juvenile, the first old woman and Clara Vere De Vere, the heroine, had stoned The Kicker office and dared us to come forth in the stilly night and be mangled to a pulp.

Let this be a warning to other theatrical companies. No free tickets were left at this office in this case. In fact, The Kicker was coolly ignored. It will be wise in all others to come and see us at once. We want at least six deadhead tickets to front seats, and in case we don't get 'em the show is going to prove a bad financial failure. The office is the place to get date lines and dodgers, and this paper is the proper medium to advertise in.—Detroit Free Press.

Not Such a Small Matter.

Mr. Dunning was at one of Moody's meetings, when a baby cried. The mother tried in vain to hush the child and seemed much annoyed.

"Never mind, madam," said Moody. "The baby doesn't disturb me."

"That may be," the woman answered, "but you disturb the baby!"—Lewiston Journal.

Bad Beginning.

Young Physician (diagnosing a case)—In the first place, sir, you must drink less coffee.

Patient—I never drink any coffee at all, sir.

Young Physician (considerably annoyed)—Well, you ought to.—Life.

Adam's Opinion.

"I don't say marriage is a failure," said Adam, candidly, as he sat down on a log just outside the Garden of Eden and looked haughtily at the fruit on the other side of the wall, "but if I had remained single this wouldn't have happened."—Chicago Tribune.

A Healthy Place.

City Man—Is this locality healthy?

Countryman—Healthy! You bet we're healthy. We've got ter be. There ain't a doctor within forty miles.—Philadelphia Record.

Acknowledging the Compliment.

The Deaf Sergeant (after worrying Rookie for two hours—Right about face!

Rookie (perfectly innocent)—Thank the Lord I'm right about something at last.—Time.

COMING SOCIAL QUEENS.

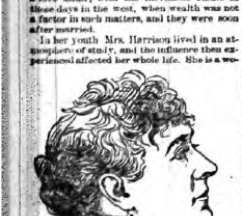
THE WIVES OF THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Mrs. Harrison Intellectual and Religious. Mrs. Morton, of New York Society—How They Are Likely to Affect Social Life at the Capital.

It is natural that at this time the nation should be thinking about the woman who is to be the next mistress of the White House.

From the young Mrs. Cleveland, who has made so many friends, and who won the admiration of both Democrats and Republicans, the nation's eyes are to turn to Mrs. Harrison, a matron more than a quarter of a century older.

Both are marked women, however, though of different styles and ages.



MRS. HARRISON.

When Benjamin Harrison was a student at Oxford, O., he met Miss Scott, the daughter of the professor of chemistry at the university. Professor Scott, who is now a very old man, is over 80—has a position in the pension office at Washington. There was a love affair, with the inevitable result in those days in the west, when wealth was not a factor in such matters, and they were soon after married.

In her youth Mrs. Harrison lived in an atmosphere of study, and the influence then experienced affected her whole life. She is a woman of rare gifts. She has long been a prominent and active member of the Ladies' Literary society of Indianapolis; she is fond of the fine arts, especially painting, and has done some clever work herself on china. But the influence of study is not only refining; it strengthens better feelings as well; and Mrs. Harrison not only devotes herself to her literary work and her painting, but is an active helper in the field of the poor. A generous share of her attention is given to the Indiana Orphans' home.

Mrs. Harrison were married when Mr. Harrison was a young man. The husband was only 20 and the wife was younger. With only $200 on which to begin life in world, beside Harrison's theoretic knowledge of the law, gained by a study of his profession, the youthful couple went to Indianapolis. They settled in a one story frame cottage, and commenced a career that has never since known a check.

While Mrs. Harrison has never known great wealth she has never known poverty. Her husband has been sufficiently prominent to give her a position socially to which she is in every way fitted by nature. Her polish is, however, rather intellectual than that of the woman of fashion.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are also prominent in church circles. For years they have been in regular attendance at one of the Presbyterian churches in Indianapolis, and active in the Sunday school. Sunday she had. Doubtless this will have its effect in Washington society. The influence of the White House is all powerful there, and social circles during the winter of 1889-90 may, perhaps, wear a more subdued complexion than during the social administration of Mrs. Cleveland.

Mrs. Morton, who is to be the second lady in the land, partakes more of the type of New York's more brilliant social circles. Mrs. Morton, as her maiden name—Anne Livingston Street—indicates, comes from among the aristocratic families of the Empire state. She was born at Poughkeepsie, on the Hudson, a town noted for its educational interest in New York as Oxford is in Ohio. It is there that Vassar college flourishes, and as Mrs. Morton is still a young woman, Vassar was founded not too late to bring to her mind her through the society of Poughkeepsie something of the same influence that Oxford has always been here of learning for Oxford upon Mrs. Harrison.

But Mrs. Morton has had other influences. She passed much time in New York society, where she met Mr. Morton. Their marriage followed. He is very rich, and his wife had always been accustomed to wealth. She is described as a woman of medium height, with large bluish gray eyes, white complexion and gray hair. She is the mother of five daughters, the oldest of whom is 14.

MRS. MORTON.

Mrs. Morton's influence will be felt in Washington society less than that of Mrs. Harrison.

Whatever be the coming influence of these two women, there is doubtless as much speculation about it among the women of Washington society as there is about the foreign complications of the winter. It will show; but it is quite natural that the tone given to Washington society by each of these women who are so soon to be its hostess will be a blending of the individuality of both, as shaped by education and previous social surroundings.

THE ALGONQUIN CLUB.

It Has the Finest Habitation of Any Club in America.

Boston is one of the most clubable cities in the United States, but all of the clubs—and there are many of them—have a certain fixed purpose and represent a certain class or sect. There is a certain spirit of gravity pervading the clubs of Boston that cannot be found in any other city of the United States. The clubs are all eminently intellectual.

PRIVATE DINING ROOM.

The members take off their hats.

In New York and Chicago they don't. The clubs are profound.

The Somerset is the club of those who have a genealogical tree, and the permeating atmosphere of deep solemnity which is noticeable at this club is positively awe striking. The Union is the solid club of lawyers, doctors and merchants; you can form a picture of its gloomy grandeur. The St. Botolph is the literary and artistic club, where long hair and Byronic collars are the proper thing. It is the same with all the clubs of Boston. They all represent classes. Such a club as the Knickerbocker or Racquet, of New York, where you can put your feet on the window sill and smoke (although the clubs named are very ultra) was, until a few years ago, almost unknown in Boston.

There years ago, however, the Algonquin club was organized. The Algonquin differs from other Boston clubs in this, that its purposes are very liberal. Indeed, and that its hospitality is extended to men of mark and note in the community, as any man who is responsible and honorable and acceptable in the best sense is welcome as a member, provided, of course, there is a vacancy. Descent from colonial times, wealth or occupation have no bearing upon candidacy in this organization.

The club recently built a new club house. It is the largest and finest club building in the United States. The style is that of the Italian renaissance. The building is six stories high, with a frontage of 82 feet and a depth of about 125 feet. The interior decoration is of an elaborate character, although, while the effect is rich, the treatment is simple. The main entrance is direct from the sidewalk and in the center of the building. One first passes through a small pair of ornamental iron gates and then massive doors of English oak, and enters upon a long hall floored with marble and ornamented with dados and pilasters of alabaster. The rooms are magnificently finished and furnished. Some of the walls are covered with painted French silk in different colors, and others are covered by decorated leather and velvets of various colors.

The most splendid apartment in the club house is the dining room, the largest room in the building. It is finished in mahogany of rich tone and high polish. It is lighted by a colossal chandelier, an antique Dutch candelabra dating from 1642, and ingeniously arranged for gas. It weighs nearly half a ton.

There are apartments for ladies also—reading, dining, reception and toilet rooms. The private dining rooms are gorgeously furnished.

One of the marvels of this building is the ventilation. It is mainly of oak and mahogany, and it everywhere affords delight to the eye. It were a tedious task to describe in detail the multitude of apartments in the new club house; suffice it to say that nothing has been left undone that art could do to beautify the building.

IN THE READING ROOM.

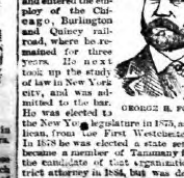
DIED ON ELECTION DAY.

George H. Forster, the President of the New York Board of Aldermen.

George H. Forster, the president of the New York board of aldermen, died on the day that he was re-elected without knowing of his re-election.

Mr. Forster has been prominent in New York city politics for a number of years, and at the time of his death was one of the leading members of Tammany Hall. He was a good lawyer.

Mr. Forster was born in Charlestown, Mass., where his father, Henry Forster, was a prominent merchant in 1838. He was graduated from Harvard in 1857, and entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, where he remained for three years. He then took up the study of law in New York city, and was admitted to the bar. He was elected to the New York legislature in 1875, as a Republican, from the First Westchester district. In 1878 he was elected a state senator. He became a member of Tammany in 1882 and the candidate of that organization for district attorney in 1884, but was defeated by Judge Martine. He was elected president of the board of aldermen a year ago, and re-elected at the last election by a vote of 66,358, being a plurality of 8,370 over his next highest competitor, Mr. Van Reusselaer, and the highest plurality of any of the county candidates.



GEORGE H. FORSTER.

The exports of diamonds from South Africa for 1887 were 3,980,350 carats, worth £4,582,402, against 3,848,561 carats, worth £5,001,930 for the previous year.

MARY ANDERSON.

THIS FOREMOST AMERICAN ACTRESS AT HOME AGAIN.

At Least America Was Once Her Home, and She Is Still as Beautiful as the Ever Was—Some Stories of Her Early Life and Her Stage Successes.

Mary Anderson is again on her native soil. New Yorkers are now listening to her nightly, and her London triumphs are to be repeated as usual on this side of the water. What a wonderful career this woman has had!

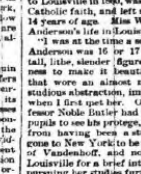
No better evidence of the fact that Mary Anderson is a born actress is given than the following, related by her mother:

A distressing and fatal accident had occurred near their home one day to a builder or workman engaged on a house in the immediate neighborhood; he had fallen from the roof of the building to the pavement below and been killed. Mrs. Griffith and Mary, hearing the cries in the street, rushed to the front window, and while the elder lady's heart was rent by the sight of the unfortunate man's wife hurrying by she was shocked to find that her usually tender hearted daughter was intent only upon catching and imitating the horror stricken expression on the poor woman's face. Miss Anderson was at that time but 15 years of age. Shortly after this she made her first appearance on the stage in Louisville.

She is a native of California and was born in Sacramento, July 28, 1859. She was taken to Louisville in 1869, was reared in the Roman Catholic faith, and left school when she was 14 years of age. Miss Whittier says of Mary Anderson's life in Louisville at this time:

"I was at the time a school girl when Mary Anderson was 16 or 17 years of age. Her tall, lithe, slender figure, lacking the roundness to make it beautiful, and earnest face that wore an almost mooly expression of studious abstraction, impressed me indelibly when I first met her. On this occasion Professor Noble Butler had taken several of his pupils to see his protege, this young girl who from having been a student under him had gone to New York to be under the instruction of Vandenhoff, and now had returned to Louisville for a brief interval of rest before pursuing her studies further.

"She had amiably signified her willingness to recite for us on any evening that Professor Butler should select for the visit, and with a good deal of interest we looked forward to the entertainment promised whom he was always talking. The house, which has since become historical, was an old rambling down looking structure, which, notwithstanding the poverty of its furnishings, had given us of home like comfort in the small front bed room in which we were ushered. I remember there was an open fire place, and something was said about its being a contribution of ultimately going on the concert stage, but at this time her profession was not chosen, and the bud of her genius which under pressure of circumstances was soon to burst into full flower was still in embryo. She recited Collins' 'Ode on the Passions,' and a scene from 'The Hunchback,' her mother reading the corresponding parts of the dialogue. She threw herself into 'The Ode' thoroughly, and I have never heard it so well rendered; the grace of her lithe figure swayed with passion as her genius flamed up. Her clear cut features glowed and her eyes shot fire as she sounded, with her deep rich voice, the gamut of hatred, rage and despair. When she had finished, her little audience sat speechless with an awe struck wonder, and I went home wild with enthusiasm, for this girl who had been a sort of revelation to me. Two weeks later she made her debut before a Louisville audience."



MARY ANDERSON.

She declared afterward that Romeo's hands were in such a cold perspiration that she hated to catch hold of them, and that he breathed so hard in the more exciting passages that she was afraid he would blow her away. Mr. William Griffith was the Romeo.

Mary Anderson's life in London is perhaps the most interesting part of her career as an actress. She likes London, but declares that she will always remain an American at heart. Talk in London circles sometimes with the uncontradicted statement that she has been naturalized and is now a British subject. She has a private residence in South Kensington and a box at every London theatre. There she lives during her London engagements. The house is a dark red brick modern structure. From its windows nearly all of London can be seen on a clear day lying below. It is in the midst of ample grounds and is above the fog line. The house is handsomely furnished and well fitted. The hall way is very broad, square and in dark oak, with a great fire place upon one side. All of the rooms on this floor open into the hall.

One day Buffalo Bill was Miss Anderson's guest. When her little brother learned that this great western demi-god was actually in the room and that he was to speak to him, his excitement became intense. His face turned so pale that his mother went to him, frightened. She said: "What is the matter with you, my little pet? Your heart is beating like a trip-hammer."

Miss Anderson is very faithful in her work, and during her London life she thinks nothing of rehearsing from 11 till 3:30 and then going to the British museum to study. J. H. Barnes, who played Regomar with her, relates that on one occasion as they were rehearsing "in a car," in one scene he gave up his sword in the manner he had learned, standing with his body supported by the right leg in advance.

"Miss Anderson," he says, "in the kindest way possible, suggested a change. She thought Regomar should lean his whole weight with his weight thrown back on his left foot.

"'You are more upright, you see,' she said. 'You stand firmer and are altogether like a man.' Well, that was a hint, she said, picked up from a study of one or two pieces of sculpture at the museum which she named. It shows much thought and care. I saw the value of the hint at once, and gladly adopted it."

To Clean Ivory Ornaments.

Ivory ornaments are quickly cleaned by brushing them with a new, not very sharp toothbrush, to which little soap is given; then rinse the ornament in lukewarm water, dry the trinket and brush a little, and continue brushing until the luster reappears, which will be the result of rubbing the alcohol upon the brush and drying it to the trinket. Should this have become yellow, dry it in a napkin and it will appear as if new.—Manufacturing Jeweler.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM.

Prominent in National Politics for Many Years.

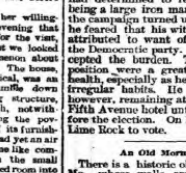
W. H. BARNUM.

Among those prominent in national politics during the exciting period of the electoral commission was Mr. William H. Barnum. In 1868, 1872 and 1876 Mr. Barnum was a large contributor to the Democratic campaign fund, and afterwards, as chairman of the national Democratic campaign committee, he became one of the most prominent Democrats in the United States.

Mr. Barnum was born in Connecticut in 1818. His education was obtained in the public schools, and he entered the business of iron manufacture at Lime Rock, Litchfield county, Conn., where energy and business ability brought him a remarkable success. In a few years he became one of the owner of nearly all the principal blast furnaces and forges in the Housatonic valley. Mr. Barnum was sent to the state legislature, and in 1866 was elected to congress and re-elected through successive terms till 1876, when he was elected to the United States senate, to fill the term of Orris S. Ferry, deceased, ending March 4, 1879. His ability as a political manager led to his being placed on the national Democratic committee in 1872 and 1876. In the latter year Mr. Abram S. Hewitt was chairman of the committee, and Col. Pelton, Governor Tilden's nephew, was acting manager. Upon Mr. Hewitt's resignation on the receipt of the decision of the electoral commission, Mr. Barnum was elected to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Hewitt. In 1880 he was unanimously re-elected chairman, and four years later he was chosen again. He devoted himself so unceasingly to his duties as to impair his health, and was obliged to take some rest. He was next placed in charge of the campaign just ended. He had determined to retire in 1884, but being a large iron manufacturer, and as the campaign turned upon tariff issues, he feared that his withdrawal would be attributed to want of agreement with the Democratic party. He therefore accepted the burden. The duties of his position were a great strain upon his health, especially as he was compelled to irregular habits. He kept in harness, however, remaining at his rooms in the Fifth Avenue hotel until a few days before the election. On Nov. 3 he went to Lime Rock to vote.

AN OLD MORMON JAIL.

There is a historic old jail at Liberty, Mo., whose walls are crumbling, and which will doubtless soon pass away. The Liberty and jail are not words which one would expect to see linked together, though they have frequently been so joined in political and religious history. The Liberty jail comes in under the latter head. It is known as the "Old Mormon Jail," from the fact of its having been the best prison in that portion of the state at the time of the Mormon wars. Among the Mormons once confined there were Joseph Smith, the dead prophet and leader; Hyrum Smith, Sidney Rigdom, Lyman Wight, Caleb Baldwin and Alexander McRae. They were brought there after being captured at Far West in 1838 and remained for six months.

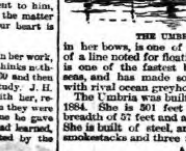


THE OLD JAIL AT LIBERTY.

It was constructed in 1833, and was the first jail ever built in Clay county. It was a strongly built two story structure, with two walls, one of heavy timbers and the other of large stones. The first floor is on the order of a dungeon. The door is of oak, studded with heavy wrought nails. Two windows on the north side admitted light and air. The west wall of stone has almost entirely fallen down, and the roof that once landed the moldy earth below has collapsed.

The Latest Ocean Collision.

The magnificent Cunard steamer Umbria, which recently collided with and sank the French steamer Iberia in New York bay and also punched large holes in her bows, is one of the finest vessels of a line noted for floating palaces. She is one of the fastest boats sailing the seas, and has made some pretty races with rival ocean greyhounds.



THE UMBRIA.

The Umbria was built at Glasgow in 1884. She is 501 feet long, and has a breadth of 57 feet and a depth of 38 feet. She is built of steel, and has two large smokestacks and three masts. At present she is under the forenoast only. Her tonnage is 7,718 gross and 3,845 net. She has a registered horse power of 2,800.

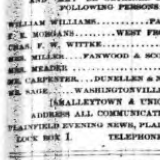
Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings bestowed upon the people during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded a bountiful and bounteous increase, and has rewarded the labors of industry, and to His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular labor, assemble in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that His will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the safest, stable and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor: ROBERT S. GREEN, Gov.

ROBERT S. GREEN, Jr., Private Secretary.

—The regular business meeting of the Women's Temperance Aid Society will be held in Reform Hall Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 20th, at three o'clock.

—The Young Men's Christian Associations"—says the Rev. Joseph Cook—"are to the church as a set of fingers thrown out in evidence to the palm to gather into its bosom whatever may be reached."

For Voters to Ponder Over.

Plainfield has no doubt debt and compares favorably in its attractiveness as a place of residence with any other city in the State, if not in the country as well. Some people think, the titles of "The Queen City of New Jersey" and on account of its rare healthfulness, "The Colorado of the East." But allow dishonest, irresponsible men to once get into power, and it will not take long to blast its reputation and ruin the property of other cities have been blasted from like causes. One way to do this is to allow the saloons to control our affairs. The city is soon to hold an election, and it is of the utmost importance for the coming year especially that men of the highest character be elected to office. Neither party has as yet chosen its candidates, but soon will. No one even suspected of being under saloon control should receive any opportunity to work us mischief. They will be men who will pretend anything to get power, men who are now already advising evenings in the various saloons with the saloon keepers as to the role they are to act in public to deceive the unwary; men whose highest ambition will be to hand the city for per-sale and to engage in any scheme or regardless of the burden to the tax-payers. It would be unreasonable to expect us to designate in the absence of positive proof which could not be readily obtainable, any one or three persons who would be dangerous to the welfare of the locality by their election. Besides, the people know each other better than some of the members of society think they do. We can only sound the warning, and think it will be a safe rule not to trust anyone in any way suspected with being in debt to the saloons, or to be working to elect them to offices at the public expense, or under the control of those who are thus minded. We can do no more than this and further say that when the primaries are called next week, go to work after, let all voters attend and see that the right men are chosen. We do not think there has ever been a time in this city when more was at it at present. The saloons are already scheming to control the primaries in enough of the wards to give them an influence out of all proportion to their numbers and if they succeed our affairs. Will the people remain idle? If they do, they must not expect good government to continue and their own business will be largely increased without corresponding benefit. It is in the air. Take heed in time.

Thanksgiving Day Services.

A union service will be held in the Seventh-Day Baptist church at 10:30 a. m. Thanksgiving Day. A sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, of the First Presbyterian church.

John Marcus, a resident of Stockton township was taken to the Camden county jail yesterday by Constable Renner, charged with assaulting his daughter, Miss Flora Kemble. He was committed by Justice Miles. He is said to have escaped from the county insane asylum at Blackwood.

TIME-TABLE CHANGES.

The Jersey Central Arranges a New Schedule for the Winter.

The time-table of the Central Railroad of New Jersey to-day undergoes many changes which take effect to-morrow. The corrected schedule is given below:

GOSSIP OF THE CAPITAL.

Democrats Giving Up the Fight for the House.

OPINIONS OF PARTY LEADERS.

They Think Their Chances Will Be Better in 1890 by Throwing All Responsibility on the Republican—Ben Butterworth for Speaker—Other Matters of Interest.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The Star says: A number of the wiser heads in the Democratic party are counseling against any effort to hold a small majority in the house. It is understood that Senators Beck and Gorman think that the party would be better in authority, and with the entire responsibility upon the Republicans during the next congress the Democrats will have a much better chance in the congressional campaign two years from now. The idea of organization against the admission of new states into the Union they are said to regard as unpopular and likely to be hurtful. It would be better for the Democrats themselves to undertake the admission of some of the territories this winter. It is said that the president has expressed the opinion that it would be unfortunate for the Democrats to be in the house. It is entirely probable that The Star's figures, based on returns several days ago, will turn out to be correct. The Republicans will have four representatives in California, three in Connecticut, all but two in Michigan, one in West Virginia and three in North Carolina. The Democrats in Kentucky may have lone Republican. This would make the Republican majority about seven.

At the Republican headquarters they refuse to give the figures, merely claiming a majority.

Benjamin Butterworth is now spoken of as a candidate for the speakership of the house. A gentleman who has been associated with the Republican national committee during the campaign said to the writer in response to a reporter that either Butterworth or Cannon would be chosen for this place.

WILLIAM DOUGLAS BYRON WANTS OUR VIEW.

Oliver Dodd Byron, the play-wright and actor, has telegraphed Mr. Schuyler, his business manager, at present in this city, to make inquiries regarding the terms on which Oak View, the president's country place, may be purchased. Mr. Schuyler says he has opened negotiations with Mr. Lamont.

The rumor that Oak View, the president's country house, is on the market for sale, not only is confirmed, but is denied at the White House. Col. Lamont said he had not heard the president express any intention of selling the property.

The president bought the property cheap, $21,000 having been the original bid. Since then the land has advanced in price, and the property would bring $100,000 to-day if put on the block at auction. Every one is familiar with the wonderful advance in property in this neighborhood since the president bought his place.

Level lands, four years ago, would be bought for $300 to $500 per acre, and now sells at from ten to twenty dollars per square foot.

Careful inquiry fails to discover that any bids have been made for the property, or that the president has signified any intention of selling.

MARINE STATISTICS.

Gen. Dumont, supervising inspector of steam vessels, in his annual report to the last fiscal year, says that of the 1,875 original plus 6 pilot licenses 42 were rejected on account of color blindness. During the year 4,615 vessels were inspected, an increase of 340 over the previous year. Thirty-six accidents occurred during the year—12 collisions, 5 fires, 5 explosions, 3 foundering of steam pipes and 7 wrecks. Two hundred and two lives were lost on steam vessels last year, against the preceding year. The average annual loss of life on steamboats for the last thirty years, divided in decades, shows, Gen. Dumont says, a gratifying progress in the efficiency of the officers of the inspection service in carrying into effect the laws to prevent loss of life on steam vessels. The table in the report furnished by this report is as follows: From 1852 to 1862, 727 lives lost annually; from 1863 to 1872, 595 lives lost annually; and from 1873 to 1888, only 214 annually.

CONDITION OF OUR NAVY.

Chief Constructor Wilson, of the navy, in his annual report of the operations of his bureau during the past fiscal year, shows an expenditure of $865,540 in the repair of ships, and payments on account of vessels in course of construction during the year amounting to $6,296,995. The present strength of our navy and the condition of the vessels is summarized as follows: Five double turreted monitors, awaiting completion; 2 belted cruisers, purchased vessels, to be completed; 2 monitors, in ordinary; 23 unarmored steel and iron vessels, of which are in commission, 11 building, 2 projected, 2 in ordinary, and 1 in ordinary; 28 wooden steam vessels, nearly all on station or undergoing repairs, and 11 iron and wood steam tugs.

INAUGURAL PREPARATIONS.

A. T. Britton, chairman of the inaugural committees, appointed J. W. Thompson as his assistant, and the executive committee. He appointed also A. T. Britton, chairman of the committee on public comfort and a member of the executive committee. A. S. Pratt was appointed a member of the inaugural committee, and James E. Bell, superintendent of the letter carriers' division of the postoffice, as chairman of the committee in charge of the military part of the inaugural ball. Mr. Britton has invited Governor Gorman to be present at the ball.

The officers of the First Pennsylvania regiment arrived to obtain information regarding quarters.

A THREATENED INVASION.

Prominent officials in the war department and at the headquarters of the army place no credence in the story that 1,000 young Kansans will march to Washington on the 1st of February next. The general opinion is that the resurrected movement is simply an effort for the purpose of forcing congress to pass the Oklahoma bill during the short session of the approaching session. If, however, congress should not pass the bill and the "boomers" enter the territory, there will be trouble. The Fifth and Sixth cavalry are practically on the ground, and only a proclamation from the president would be necessary to bring the two opposing forces into collision with each other.

EXPERT MONEY COUNTERS ARE SCARCE.

The president has approved a recommendation made by the civil service commission touching the part of the civil service law providing for the appointment upon competitive examination of seventeen clerks to the office of the treasurer of the United States to be employed as expert money counters. The attempt made to make special tests to fill these places has failed, and it is recommended that the duties of these positions should be learned elsewhere than in the position themselves, and therefore that any reports were those occupying them and appointed by new who had left them for no one cause or another, but who were not seeking to return.

NEW RACING RULES.

Weights Fixed and War Declared on the Bookmakers' Alliance.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The American Turf congress unanimously adopted a resolution offered by Gen. Robinson placing the weights for 2-year-olds at 118 pounds, and for 3-year-olds at 122 pounds.

An attempt to conclude the other matters before the convention failed, and to remedy affairs a committee, consisting of M. Lewis Clark and J. E. Brewster of the south, and D. D. Withers, John Hunter, J. G. K. Lawrence, P. J. Dwyer and Clinton Wheatly, of the east, was appointed to draw up a full set of racing rules, including the suggestions of Thursday's conference meeting, and submit them to the congress for approval. This committee will meet later, asking for plenty of time for consideration, and it was therefore decided that the committee should meet Monday night, at 9 o'clock, in the Coney Island Jockey club rooms, and there complete their work, and as soon as all is finished a convention of the congress will be called in some western city, probably Cincinnati, and the rules adopted or rejected.

The next subject taken up was that of betting privileges, and after a long argument the following was adopted:

"Resolved, That the subscribing jockey clubs agree that no contract for betting privileges be made with any association of bookmakers or any member thereof."

This means war to the knife between the racing cause and the bookmakers associations. Mr. Withers says that the effect of this resolution will be that in order to pursue their business on the race tracks bookmakers will be compelled to sever their connection with the Bookmakers' alliance and other similar associations.

SOMETHING OF A SENSATION.

Lady Mountmorris Paints After Testifying Before the Parnell Commission.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—The sessions of the Parnell commission were resumed. Lady Mountmorris, widow of Lord Mountmorris, testified that the friendly feeling existed between her husband and Parnell down until the meetings of the Land league began. She also testified that her husband, in July, 1881, obtained a verdict of ejectment against a tenant, and on Sept. 25, following, he was shot and killed. She was visiting in Scotland at the time, but returned to attend the funeral, and on leaving for the steamer to return to Scotland she was hooted by the crowd. Sir Charles Russell started to cross examine her, but the latter fainted, and the examination was discontinued.

A constable named Drummond stated that the jury refused to assist the police in inquiring into the murder. He attributed the killing to the hostility of the people to the conduct of Lord Mountmorris as a magistrate and his attitude on the land question.

After objection from Sir Charles Russell the court allowed the counsel for The Times to introduce evidence as to outrages in Kerry.

Albany's Baseball Scheme.

ALBANY, Nov. 17.—The meeting of baseball enthusiasts arranged for last evening was not very well attended, and those who did appear were disposed to be cautious in their manner of procedure. It was decided that unless $5,000 could be raised over and above the cost of the international franchise it would not be advisable for a Albany association to take hold of it with any expectation of success. As the meeting of the International association next week has not been but a short time for the workers to raise the required amount, it was deemed best to adjourn another week for immediate action. This plan was finally authorized, there were no signs of indications that the candidates declared to make a contest in the house of representatives.

News from Doubtful Districts.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—A dispatch was received at the Capitol from Congressman Snyder, of West Virginia, saying that Dayton, the Republican, has been elected by 1,000 majority, and that the other three Democratic districts are safe. A dispatch was also received from California to the effect that two Democrats were certainly elected.

Certificate of Election Demanded.

BISMARCK, D. T., Nov. 17.—The North Dakota Democratic campaign committee has demanded of the secretary of Dakota territory the certificate of election of W. R. Burney as delegate to congress. They assert that the votes cast for Matthews and Harden will be given to Burney, making the necessary majority.

Illness for Secretary of State.

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 17.—Senator Hale, Congressmen Boutelle and Milliken and Joseph H. Manley held a conference at Senator Hale's home. It is understood that they urged Blaine to accept the position. Blaine still has under consideration the offer, but the Republican administration would be the secretaryship of state.

Indiana's Congressional Delegation.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 17.—The returns of the vote on congressmen in this state have been tabulated by the secretary of state, but no one has made the footings. However, unofficial footings show that the Republicans have elected only three out of the thirteen congressmen—Owen, Cheadle and Brown.

Tenth Kentucky Certainly Republican.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 17.—The Tenth Kentucky district, which was reported doubtful, has gone Republican. Wilson's majority, although badly bruised, crawled back into the track, and for fifty-five minutes held up Engineer Spencer's train and prevented his drowning. Spencer was caught between the engine and tender and terribly injured. It will probably recover. The loss to the company will reach $20,000. There were two engines on the train, but the first got safely over.

The Ohio Company Pays Up.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The Adams Express company has paid to the United States treasury $1,000,000, being the amount of the defalcation of the New Orleans branch of Washington from a shipment of $12,000,000 in silver, when that sum embezzled not in the stolen money.

ECHOES OF THE ELECTION!

West Virginia Uncomfortably Close and Doubtful.

THE LATEST ABOUT CONGRESS.

Majorities for All Candidates Very Small in West Virginia and May Go Either Way—Contests Inevitable—Survey of the Political Field.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 17.—West Virginia is still enveloped in a mist of doubt, which can only be dissipated by the official count. Except as to the sectional ticket, the vote is so close that perhaps 100 votes will be the margin of difference between the two parties on the state ticket, and in the three congressional districts in dispute—namely, the First, Third and Fourth—the majorities will not aggregate 150. There seems to be no doubt about the success of the Democratic electoral ticket. Official and other reliable returns received up to the secretary of state's office at noon to-day from counties not yet reported. The majorities given out and published since election day are inaccurate, unreliable and misleading, and this applies to the majorities reported on both sides.

It is upon such incomplete data and upon such altered figures that claims are based for the election of Goff and Fleming, respectively, as well as for the election of the three congressmen in dispute. Secretary Waller expresses the belief that Fleming is elected by about 700 majority. This belief is founded on an examination of the certificates now in hand and on answers from county officials charged with the custody of the sealed tally sheets. Several mistakes in computation have been discovered, but these has not been affected, as these are about balanced. Secretary Walker describes the present situation thus:

"While I believe Fleming will be elected by about 100 majority, yet it is not impossible that when all the returns are in they may show a small majority for Goff. The official count will alone determine the result. Neither candidate will have more than 150 majority."

The recount that has been demanded in several counties will delay the official ascertainment of the result in the state and in the congressional districts. Secretary Walker says he believes that by Tuesday the successful candidates may be named.

In the Second district the result is as much in doubt as that for governor. The candidates are McGinnis, Republican, and Anderson, Democrat. The returns from a few of the counties composing the district have been received, and from some of them a number of precincts are not reported in full, both sides claim the victory, but by so small a majority that either may be overturned by the official count. The same is true of the Ninth district, in which Smith is the Republican and Dayton the Democratic candidate. Whoever may be successful in these two districts are likely to obtain certificates on less than fifty majority, according to present estimates, and in order to ensure certificates may be issued there are indications that the candidates declared to be elected will make a contest in the house of representatives.

MINISTER TO SPAIN.

Congressman Perry Belmont Will Represent this Country There.

PERRY BELMONT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—Congressman Perry Belmont has been appointed United States minister to Spain. He sent a letter to the president by last night's mail announcing the position.

The place has been vacant for some time. The office of minister has been kept secret, but Mr. Belmont, who was seen last night, admitted it and said he had decided to accept.

He will sail for Spain early next month.

Mr. Belmont has been chairman of the house foreign affairs committee during the last two congresses, and is well equipped for the position. He was not a candidate for reelection to congress, and would have retired from the house on March 4 next. His appointment was not generally known last evening, but it will be received as a fitting tribute to Mr. Belmont's services to his party.

THE NUN OF KENMARE.

Her Letter of Resignation to the Pope Made Public.

UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Sister Mary Francis Clare, "The Nun of Kenmare," ex-sister superior of the Sisters of Peace, is now living in retirement in this city, engaged in literary work. She has made public her letter of resignation to Pope Leo XIII. The following is an extract from it:

TO THE FATHER.—It is with great grief and regret that I address this Litt r to your holiness. I am obliged to resign into your hands the offices to which you were pleased to appoint me, and to leave to others the work of the Order of Peace, which your holiness has authorized me to establish.

"I have not taken this a sp without long and painful consideration, for I see every day more and more the necessity of such work as this for working girls. They have, indeed, been the support of the Roman Catholic church, and they deserve all that can be done for their comfort and encouragement, but I have found such opposition to the work which I so dearly love, from certain bishops, whose influence is so powerful that other bishops do not like to support what they disapprove, even though it has I assure you, your holiness, that I am obliged to retire from it. My health, always delicate, has given way under the pressure and pain of this discouragement."

THEY WANT WARNER MILLER.

Methodist Bishops Greet Him as the Next Secretary of the Treasury.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 17.—The Brooklyn Church society last evening gave a reception at the Brooklyn rink to the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church in this country, and to the visitors being present, as follows: Bishops Newman, Bowman, Merrill, Warren, Hurst, Foss, Fitzer, Andrews, Walden, Fitzgerald, Goodall, Vincent and Joyce. William J. Pearson presided, and addresses were made by Bishop Warren, Rev. Dr. J. O. Peck, Hon. Warner Miller and others. Rev. Dr. Peck in his remarks referred to Mr. Miller as the most distinguished man of New York, who, if he did not occupy the governor's chair, should be given a place in the presidential cabinet. His suggestion created tremendous applause. Dr. Peck dwelt at length on the necessity of the extension of missionary work, and closed his remarks with an appeal for $100,000 for that purpose.

Hon. Warner Miller was introduced as the probable next secretary of the treasury, and made a stirring address in which he eulogized the Methodist church. After the speaking refreshments were served, and music was furnished by the Twenty-third regiment band.

Mrs. Cleveland's Efforts Successful.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Mrs. Cleveland, as trustee and president of the Alumnæ Association of Wells College, at Aurora, has manifested great interest in the rebuilding of her alma mater, which was recently burned. As a result of Mrs. Cleveland's pers vering efforts in raising money among her personal friends, including the "chain gang" subscription, the contract has been let to Mr. Barnes, of Auburn. The cost of the building will exceed $100,000. A short time ago Mrs. Cleveland met Mr. Barnes, the architect, and the Monday before election was closeted with him in studying the arrangement of these plans. Mr. Miller says she was deeply interested in the work, never once represented an objection of and indifferent to the effect of the next day's election upon her future.

National Board of Trade Recommendations.

CHICAGO, Nov. 17.—The members of the national board of trade, upon assembling yesterday, proceeded to the Fifty little d ssion to pass a batch of resolutions, the st on the first of which by congress is hoped by the farmers to enhance the business prosperity of the country. Among the more important suggestions are the early adoption by congress of tariff reduction which will least embarrass existing industries; the enacting of more favorable laws fostering our merchant marine; the reduction of letter postage to one cent; the increase of appropriations for carrying on the work of the national board of health. The meeting then adjourned sine die.

Women Elect Officers.

DETROIT, Nov. 17.—The third and last day's session of the woman's congress was called to order at 10 o'clock, and the election of officers at once proceeded with. Mrs. Julia Ward Rowe was re-elected president. Twenty-five vice presidents were selected from the various states represented. Grenville K. Easby, or Delaware, was elected secretary; Henrietta L. T. Wolcott, Massachusetts, treasurer; Sophia Curtiss Huffman, New York, and Mrs. Alexander H. Pierce, Pennsylvania, auditors, and a board of directors composed of twenty-five members.

Reception to Mr. and Mrs. Harrison.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 17.—A reception was given to Gen. Harrison and wife last night by the survivors of his old regiment, the Seventieth Indiana. It occurred in Tomlinson hall, and was attended by over 300 of the surviving members of the service and daughters. It was a brilliant event. Speeches were made by the general and Mrs. Harrison and Governor Hovey, all of which were received with the most hearty applause. Two hours passed in the reception, during which time the guests were to accompany the general in marching on the occasion of his inauguration.

The Day Saved the Jury.

READING, Pa., Nov. 17.—Henry Fetterolf, a young Berks county farmer, was tried for the murder of Jacob Hoffman, a neighbor, in Ontelaunee township, on the night of Aug. 4. The jury was out all night and all day Thursday, and at 10 o'clock last night reported that they could not agree. Judge Endlich sent them back to their room, and they came in at 11:30 with a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. The jury was locked up all night, and when they came in this morning they were in a terrible condition. They had been without food for twenty-four hours, and were nearly starved. They had been locked in a room with a stove in it, and the heat was terrible. They had been voting all night, and were completely exhausted. Fetterolf will be sentenced to-day.

LABORERS LEGISLATING.

Proceedings of the K. of L. General Assembly.

NO REAL BUSINESS TRANSACTED

An Important Question Settled—One Day of Rest Wanted—Agitation of the Eight Hour Question—Proposition to Bar Newspaper Men—Chinamen Ineligible.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 17.—The entire first session of the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor was taken up in the discussion of one of the grievances. In August of this year George A. Schilling, the master workman of District Assembly 29, of Chicago, granted to a member of the local, but not suspended, Assembly 440 a transfer card. The minority of Schilling's constituency protested against the granting of the card on the ground that when a local assembly was suspended the order applied to individual members, and therefore no transfer could be made to another assembly. An appeal was taken from Schilling's ruling, which the committee on appeals and grievances sustained. After the three hours' discussion the assembly voted a master workman had no right to grant a member of a suspended assembly a transfer card. In addition to this action the committee on laws was instructed to report an amendment to the constitution embracing the decision of the assembly.

The only other business of the session was the introduction by Delegate Benoit, of Montreal, of a resolution providing for the printing in German and French of the annual address of Mrs. L. M. Barry, the general lecturer and investigator of women's work. It is to be printed in the address, after being printed in the two languages will be circulated in Germany and France with the hope of bringing about an agitation of reforms that will in time improve the condition of the working women in those countries. At the beginning of the afternoon session Rev. Wilbur P. Crafts, D. D., of New York city, was introduced to the assembly. Dr. Crafts is the advocate of national Sabbath reform, and by request he addressed the assembly on the subject. He said Sabbath reform needed nationalization, for it had been treated too much as a local issue. A national law it needed a national remedy. He then, for an hour or more, spoke upon the last example the government was setting by working in the postal service on Sunday. He was particularly severe on Sunday trains and military parades of the regular army at the various posts and garrisons throughout the country.

The committee on the state of the order submitted a report recommending the appointment of a special committee to enlarge or bring about legislation for an eight hour law. The report was unanimously approved, and the committee will be appointed later on in the session.

Unexpected trouble arose in the assembly by a delegate from District Assembly 49, of New York city, submitting a proposition that newspaper men be made ineligible to membership in the order. After several speeches had been made on the subject the proposition was defeated, only six delegates voting for it.

An addition providing for the organization of local and district assemblies of Chinese was discussed for nearly two hours. Those favoring the proposition claimed that in large cities like San Francisco, Philadelphia and San Francisco, where there was a great many Chinese laborers, great good could be done by taking them into the Knights of Labor and establishing the organic local and district assemblies of their own. The resolution was voted down by a decisive majority.

An effort high in authority says positively that Powderly will not accept a re-election as general master workman, partly because the duties of the office will be so reduced, and partly because he has under consideration a two offers of liberal salaries from New York newspapers for work of a special character.

Good Times for Workingmen.

READING, Pa., Nov. 17.—The Clymer Iron company's large furnace at Temple, this county, which has been out of blast some months, resumed yesterday with a full force of hands. Owing to the resumption of so many furnaces recently the extensive Jones Iron ore mines in Caernarvon township, this county, which have had only a partial force of hands at work, have taken back all of their old employes and now have a large number at work than ever before.

A Big Manufacturing Project.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 17.—Mr. Abraham Rosse, the Pittsburg inventor, has organized a company which will erect a mammoth steel plant at Bartlett, Ind., which will have a capacity for 1,000 tons per day, equaling any in the United States. The mill will use pneumatic processes owned by Mr. Rosse. It is said that there is abundant natural gas at the mill site. The stockholders of the company are residents of Indiana.

How Pittsburg Lost a Million.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 17.—It has been learned that Dr. Hostetter, who recently died, leaving $15,000,000, once made a will leaving the city of Pittsburg $1,000,000 for the erection of the finest academy of arts and sciences in the country. He destroyed the will, however, in anger, when he learned that a judgment had been rendered against him by the city, and thus Pittsburg lost a round million.

CONDENSED NEWS.

WHAT THE FARMERS WANT.

Legislation Asked by the Farmers' Congress of the United States.

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 17.—At the Farmers' congress of the United States many important resolutions were passed, some of them calling out warm discussion. Among these were the following: Favoring a free coinage of silver; favoring the expansion of the navy as a means of protection; the policy of the government in improving the rivers and harbors of the country, and urging a continuance of the policy; restoring boards of railroad commissioners; condemning the provisions of the national banking law which prohibit acceptance of real estate security for loans, and asking congress to amend the law so as to put real estate upon an equal footing with other property; recommending the enactment of legislation making it a law favoring a home market.

A resolution was also adopted opposing all combinations of capital in trusts or otherwise to arbitrarily control the markets of the country to the detriment of productive industries, and demanding of congress such legislation as would secure to the farmers and stock raisers of the country as full and reliable reward for their labors, and demanding legislation which would prevent those trusts and combinations.

Mrs. Robinson in Her Cell.

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—Mrs. Sarah J. Robinson was taken to her cell in the prison finally settled on for her imprisonment. As she is the only person of that institution to be kept for life, being imprisonment, Jesse Pomeroy being the only other one on that list in the state, it is likely that some changes will of necessity be made in the rules to meet the peculiar conditions of the case.

Yellow Fever in New York Again.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—A young woman named Mary Ann Gilmer, who arrived from Havanan Thursday by the steamer Manhattan, was taken to the receiving hospital and quarantined, suffering from what appears to be the yellow fever. The patient is black vomit and is delirious. The incubating period is 11 Allen street, where she was stopping, is being fumigated.

Prospering for Statehood.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 17.—The Journal's Bismarck, D. T., special says: It is reported that a meeting of prominent citizens of North Dakota will be held here soon to discuss the feasibility of calling an early constitutional convention so that the admission of North Dakota may be brought about the first session of congress after the inauguration of Harrison.

Gladstonian Victory.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—The election yesterday for member of parliament for Dewsbury resulted in the election of Mr. Oldroyd (Gladstonian) by 6,071 votes, defeating Mr. Arnold Foster (Unionist), who received 5,900 votes.

The Rescript Denied.

DUBLIN, Nov. 17.—Nothing is known here of the reported papal rescript on the Irish question. The archbishop has received nothing. It is not believed that such a document has been sent.

Michigan's Delegation in Congress.

DETROIT, Nov. 17.—A recount in the Seventh district gives Whiting, Democrat, 100 plurality. This makes the Michigan delegation nine Republicans and two Democrats.

He Wasn't Idle.

"You don't appear to have much to say this morning, Mr. McGinnis," remarked the landlady.

"No, ma'am," said the boarder, plying his knife vigorously on the warmed over steak. "I'm not doing much talking, but I keep on sawing wood, ma'am, just as hard."—Chicago Tribune.

Not Attractive.

"What ever possessed you, Ruth, to let Mr. Spinner go out in this blunder shower? He might be struck by lightning!"

"Oh, I think there's no danger—he's not attractive enough, you know."—Harper's Bazar.

A New Lincoln Story.

A gentleman from the west tells this story of Abe Lincoln, which if not new is certainly by no means hackneyed. The gentleman came from the section in which Abe and Douglas were conspicuous figures in the past, and the story he tells relates to a decision made Mr. Lincoln to the proper length of a man's leg. As the story goes, Douglas and a Mr. Lovejoy were at one of the haunts in the village where they used to meet for news and gossip, and while there Abe Lincoln came in and sat down, disposing of his lengthy limbs in a somewhat awkward manner. They saw him coming in, and immediately began a conversation in regard to the proper length of a man's leg.

"Now," says Lovejoy, "Abe's legs are altogether too long, and yours, Douglas, I think, are a little short. Let's ask Abe what he thinks of it."

The conversation had been carried on with a view to Lincoln's overhearing it, and they closed it by saying, "Abe, what do you think about it?"

Mr. Lincoln had a far away look as he sat with one leg twisted around the other, but he responded to the question:

"Think of what?"

"Why, we've been talking about the proper length of a man's leg. We think yours are too long, and Douglas' too short, and we'd like to know what you think is the proper length."

"Well," said Mr. Lincoln, "that's a matter that I've never given any thought to, so of course I may be mistaken, but my first impression is that a man's leg ought to be long enough to reach from his body to the ground."—Boston True Flag.

Originality's Patron.

A woman entered the office of a large wholesale house, and addressing a man whom she found seated at a desk, said:

"My kind sir, I am forced to solicit assistance. I am a widow, have lost my situation, and have dependent on me"—

"A large family," suggested the man as he turned and looked at the woman.

"No, sir, only one child."

"What!" the man exclaimed, almost springing from his chair.

"I have only one child," the woman repeated.

"Is it possible!" said the man, speaking with an emphasis of doubt, "that you have not a large family?"

"I have stated the truth, sir."

"Come, now; haven't you really as many as six children?"

"I tell you that I have only one. Why do you doubt my word?"

"Because you are so original. Every other woman who has ever appealed to me for charity had at least five children to support. Madam, you appeal to me deeply. I am known as the patron of originality. Be seated, please, and I will write you a check."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Theory and Practice.

"Hello, Fake, what are you driving at?" questioned an old acquaintance on finding Fake standing upon the corner counting a handful of pennies.

"I am trying to figure out how I am going to get my winter suit out of pawn," returned Fake.

"Suit out of pawn! Why I thought you made a heap of money last summer lecturing around the country."

"You did, eh! Well, you are mistaken, my dear fellow; I did not make a barrel of money, not even a bunghole of money."

"What was the subject of your lecture?"

"How to Get Rich."—Drake's Magazine.

Room for Reflection.

Young Mr. Sissy (to his pretty cousin—I say, Maud, I think I'll propose to that pretty Lamont girl the very first chance I get.

Pretty Cousin—I would indeed, Charley. Isabel Lamont is a very intelligent girl and would make a splendid wife.

Young Mr. Sissy—You say she is very intelligent, Maud?

Pretty Cousin—Remarkably so.

Young Mr. Sissy (dubiously)—Well, bah Jove, I fahncy I'll hesitah thinkin' it over.—The Epoch.

A Cheerful Companion.

Invalid (on railroad train)—Yes, I am on a long journey. I am going to California.

Genial Passenger—Well, well! Glad I met you. I'm bound for California, too. Let's keep together. My brother lives in California, and he wrote to me there was a big chance for me out there, and I'm goin', you see, as fast as steam'll take me."

"Are you an undertaker, sir?"

"No—I'm an undertaker."—Philadelphia Record.

No Confidence in New Men.

Tramp (coughing)—No, mum, my health ain't none of the best. I've had this cough two years.

Woman—Why don't you do something for it?

Tramp—Well, mum, my family doctor died yisterday, an' I hain't seen a physician today what I'd like to trust my health with.—Time.

A Last Resort.

Chief Clerk—Might as well burn up this piece of goods. It won't sell.

Proprietor—It won't, eh! I'll see about that. Double the price and put it on the bargain counter.—Philadelphia Record.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP.

The Most Decisive Battle—It Was Fought in Belgium.

Perhaps the most decisive battle of the world was that of Waterloo, June 18, 1815, when Wellington defeated Napoleon. Had the battle gone the other way the whole map of Europe would be different, as well as the history of the world for the last seventy years. But there were fourteen other decisive battles before Waterloo, a different result in any one of which would have changed the history of the world from what we know it to be. Every nation has its decisive battle. Had Hastings and Yorktown turned out differently we could have been English colonists, and there might have been no Waterloo.

The Gulf Stream.

The main Gulf stream is said to end on the south side of the banks of Newfoundland; at its extreme, the stream divides there, the larger branch crossing the Atlantic northward to the coast of northern Europe, passing the North cape and becoming undistinguishable near Nova Zembla. The smaller branch crosses eastward, curves southward between the Azores and Portugal, sending out smaller branches into the Irish and the Mediterranean seas and joins the north equatorial current, with which it returns to the Gulf of Mexico, and so completes the circuit. Thus the most northern point reached is near Nova Zembla, the most southern near the equator it touches the United States (Pensacola), the British Isles, Norway, Portugal and Morocco. The equatorial currents touch the eastern coast of South America and the western coast of Africa. The Japan stream touches Japan and Cores, Kamtschatka and Alaska and the western coast of North America and the Mexican coast, flowing almost as far south as the equator.

Birthdays.

Monday is health,
Tuesday for wealth,
Wednesday best day of all,
Thursday for crosses,
Friday for losses
Will assuredly be luck at all.

The lines refer to the days of the week as birthdays. They are, in idea, the same as the more familiar lines:

Monday's child is fair of face;
Tuesday's child is full of grace;
Wednesday's child is merry and glad,
Thursday's child is sorry and sad;
Friday's child is loving and giving,
Saturday's child must work for its living;
While God said that he loved on the Sabbath day
Is blithe and bonny, and good and gay.

Four Presidential Powers.

Article 2, section 2, of the constitution of the United States gives the president power to make treaties, by and with the advice of the senate; to appoint ambassadors, judges, etc., to all vacancies occurring during the recess of the senate. Section 1 confers on him the power to grant pardons in all cases except of impeachment. By article 1, section 9, states may not make treaties, coin money, make anything but gold and silver a legal tender, pass any bill of attainder, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility, levy any duty on imports or exports, except to carry out its inspection laws, keep an army or a navy, or engage in war unless invaded.

Square Mile and Mile Square.

In superficies there is no difference between a mile square and a square mile. A square statement section of land, for instance, is a mile square, and is also a square mile. But two sections of land, if put together, make two miles square. It would take four sections to make two miles square, and that would be equal to four square miles. Thus it will be seen that there is no difference in meaning between a mile square and a square mile, there is a very great difference between two miles square and a mile square. And so the difference vastly increases as the numbers go on. Six miles square contains thirty-six square miles.

Mention of Christ in History.

The principal writers about the time of Christ were Suetonius, Tacitus, Josephus and Pliny. Suetonius does not mention Christ, at least it is not certain. Tacitus does. In Josephus occurs a mention of Christ, a few lines speaking of His divine relations; this, however, is now generally believed to be an interpolation by Eusebius, who lived in the Fourth century; it certainly is not found in editions of Josephus collected before the time of Eusebius. Pliny mentions a sect of Christians in Bithynia.

Control of the House.

From December, 1859, to December, 1875, and from December, 1881, to December, 1883, the Republicans had control of the house; and from 1875 until since 1881, the Democrats have had control. In the senate the Republicans had control from December, 1859, to December, 1881, and since December, 1883; from 1881 to 1883 the Republicans and Democrats were even in numbers, the balance of power being held by David Davis, elected between president protem., and William Mahone.

An Old Meter.

The meter of Longfellow's "Skeleton in Armor" is thought to have been copied from a poem one of the earliest in the English language by Michael Drayton. It is called "The Battle of Agincourt," and a stanza runs:

Fair stood the wind for France
When we our sails advance,
Nor fear to meet our chance
Longer will tarry.

Darwinism.

Those who called attention to the possibility of man's relationship to the lower animals were: I. Wolfe, 1796; Herbert, 1822; Von Buch, 1824; Grant, 1826; Von Baer, 1828; Geoffroy St. Hilaire, 1828; Meinert, 1829; Schaffhausen, 1840; Vogt, 1847; Lamarck, 1850; Spencer, Unger and Naudin, 1852; among others recognized the principles of natural selection, and Huxley, Spencer, Lyall, Haeckel, Canestrini and others accepted the theory of evolution before Darwin published his "Descent of Man," in 1871.

Rules for Fighting Weight.

London Rules—Feather weight, 113 pounds; light weight, 133; middle weight, 154; heavy weight, over 154 pounds. Police Gazette Rules—Feather, 115; light, 140; middle, 158; heavy, over 158. Those considered best in each class are: Ike Weir, feather; Jack Mahaffy, light; Jack Dempsey, middle; Jack Kilrain, heavy.

Distance Over an Isthmus.

The distance from ocean to ocean by the Nicaragua canal is 169.3 miles; length of canal, 68.6 miles; length of lake, river and canal navigation, 91 miles; height of summit level above sea, 110; total number of locks, six.

Singular Epitaph.

The following is said to have been copied from a stone in a country churchyard:

Here lies what once was grace,
And say, "His life is run a race."
You are mistaken unless you see
My life is but begun.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

The Thanksgiving Dinner of Many Households—How It Is Served.

Thanksgiving, the day of family gatherings and bountiful repasts, brings to the housewife a sense of much to be done and thought of, and preparations and plans for its successful celebration are early undertaken. A few hints apropos of the occasion are therefore given.

For a large and ceremonious dinner "à la Russe" will, of course, be the correct service. But the family dinner—the pretty home affair all are warm friends, especially if it be not very large—will take the ordinary form of five courses or more, which is, in fact, the pure French style. And this method, it may be remarked in passing, entails great responsibility upon the host. Let him be a good carver and the dinner is spoiled, prepared though it may have been by a cook renowned for skill through all the circle of her friends and neighbors. Therefore it behooves the master of the feast to sharpen his carver and brush up its knowledge of the anatomy of the turkey, that he may not distress a table full of people and disdain tidily to perform with the sight of a noble bird hacked and hagsled by an unskilled hand.

The three services compressed first, the soup; second, the roast of fowl and game, vegetables and sweet dishes; and third, the cheese, or cheese, nuts and raisins, with coffee.

As to wines, a single one—a choice claret or champagne—is quite sufficient for the ordinary dinner, and, indeed, no one hesitates about offering no wine at all.

There are several reminders about the germane old time thanksgiving dinner. Tradition calls for roast turkey, roast chicken and chicken pie, vegetables of libitum, including mashed potatoes, potatoes and mashed sweet, rich, sweet pudding, pies in numerous array—mince, pumpkin and apple appearing in the van; fruits, nuts, sweetmeats and coffee.

Outside of country, country boarding-houses the feast is still kept in royal style, this somewhat fancy menu is considerably modernized, and some such bill of fare as follows is discussed:

Clear Soup.
Fried Oysters. Cold Slaw.
Boiled Turkey.
Mashed Potatoes. Squash. Cauliflower.
Cranberry Sauce. Celery.
Saddle of Venison. Currant Jelly.
Escalloped Tomatoes.
Game.
Genuine Pudding.
Mince Pie. Cheese. Apple Pie.
Fruit. Nuts and Raisins.
Coffee.

It need only be added that to convert the Thanksgiving dinner into an occasion for the display of the latest fashions and elaborate menus is to destroy the primitive flavor and charm which distinguishes it from the ordinary dinner party.

A Pretty Gelatine Pudding.

A pretty pudding, which tastes somewhat like Charlotte Russe, and is very ornamental for dessert, is made according to the following recipe: Pink gelatine is used for best effect, but the ordinary gelatine will do. Wash the yolks of four eggs, a pint of milk and sugar to taste, make a boiled custard. Having soaked one-third of a box of gelatine in a little cold water for a few minutes, dissolve it with three-fourths of a cupful of boiling water. When the custard is cool, add the gelatine and the whites of four eggs beaten stiff; flavor with vanilla, stir all together and put into a mold.

Mantel Drapery.

A dainty cover mantel designed for a young lady's bedroom is shown in the cut. This graceful arrangement is in blue and white and suits well with white wood work.

DRAPED OVER MANTEL.

The valance of scalloped blue plush is corded with blue and white cordelier and wrought with tassel or silk fleurs de lis. It rests against a chenille fringe describing Vandyke and is draped with water de Madras muslin, caught up with rosettes of blue ribbon.

Sausages with Apple.

The following of German origin has been pronounced an excellent, if homely, dish: Peel and slice several large apples, cutting each one in four quarters only. Strew sugar and a little powdered cinnamon over, and let them stand a few hours. Wash two ounces of currants and let them lie well in soft water. Make a pan of butter hot in a stewpan, and lay in it a pound of sausages, having first pricked them all over to prevent their breaking. Lay the apples between and on the sausages. Sprinkle the currants over. Cover close, and let them fry gently. Turn the apples carefully when one side is done; take them out piece by piece before they are done in a mash, and keep them warm. Turn the sausages when done. Then pour a wineglass of claret into the stewpan; stir it round the crusting. Dish the sausages in this same, and lay the apples neatly round them.

A Convenient Recipe for Mince Meat.

The following recipe by Mrs. Henderson will be found convenient for making two or three mince pies from the remnants of a roast of beef: One cupful of chopped meat (one-quarter of it fat), two cupfuls of apple, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of ground allspice, half a teaspoonful of ground cinnamon, half a teaspoonful of ground cloves, one cupful of sugar, half a cupful of raisins, half a cupful of currants, one cupful of cider, or, if one has no cider, use the same amount of vinegar and water mixed—say one-half of each.

Salted Almonds.

Salted almonds furnish a delicious addition to a luncheon or dinner. Pour boiling water over shelled almonds and let them stand a short time, when the brown skin can be easily rubbed off and the almonds are "blanched." Then stir into melted butter, let them stand, add salt and brown in the oven. Drain on soft paper, then press them on soft porous paper to prevent their being "buttery." If this is not sufficient, dry them on a towel.

Sweet Potato Pie.

Parboil, skin and slice firm sweet potatoes. Line a dish with paste; put layers of the potato, sprinkled with sugar, salt and a few whole cloves. Put in a tablespoonful of melted butter and a little water. Cover with crust and bake.

Coats of quite new forms have the entire front of otter, an outer coat flying open and showing narrow otter bands, and there are broad girdle pieces wrought in gold.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

INSTRUCTION AND ENTERTAINMENT OF A SCIENTIFIC NATURE.

A Very Simple but Curious Electrical Experiment That Will Furnish Considerable Amusement—Effective Illustration of the Industrial Application of Electricity.

A curious electrical experiment, which is most successfully performed on a dry winter day, is one described by a correspondent of Scientific American. It is very simple and will furnish considerable amusement and entertainment.

One end of a piece of soft cotton string, about four inches long, is pasted, by means of a small bit of paper, to the inside of the cylindrical glass front of a show case, in about the position shown at a in Fig. 1. In such a manner that the string hangs freely down. The outer surface of the glass, from a to c, is then briskly rubbed from side to side with the back of the hand or with a dry silk handkerchief. The glass is thus electrified, and the string also takes a charge either by induction or leakage, and is repelled by the rubbed glass. At each movement of the hand the string sways from side to side, and finally, when the glass is sufficiently excited, it curls up so as to touch the uncharged part of the show case, at b, as shown by the dotted line.

FIG. 1—THE ELECTRIFIED STRING.

If the finger is now held for a few moments against the glass at c, the string is discharged and is forthwith attracted up to the front of the case in the position shown by the dotted line at c. Pressing the finger against the glass at c discharges it there, and the string quickly jumps away and clings to some place that is still electrified. This action may sometimes be repeated five or six times before the glass is wholly discharged, the string being made to fly to and fro until one is tempted to believe it endowed with life.

As in all experiments in frictional electricity, dryness is essential to success, and if one's hands are at all moist the experiments will fail. In summer it is almost impossible to make the string do more than sway slightly when the glass is rubbed.

Another experiment which is interesting as an effective illustration of the industrial application of electricity, is that of firing blasts at a distance by means of an electric fuse. As an experiment in which students and young people may enjoy at home or in the school room, an elaborate apparatus is not required. The journal already quoted tells how to perform it.

Wrap a short piece of very thin iron or platinum wire about the fuse of a fire cracker, as shown in Fig. 2 at a. Stout copper wires are attached to the ends of this wire, and pass through the cracker, on the side of which the cracker is placed. On connecting the copper terminals to the poles of a battery, the wire will become red hot incandescence, the fuse is lighted, and in a moment the cracker explodes. If it is desired to make the blast instantaneous, a pin hole is made through the middle of the cracker, and the thin wire is threaded through it so as to be in immediate contact with the powder.

For economy's sake it is better to use iron than platinum wire in these experiments. Very thin iron wire can be bought on spools, and it may be easily made still thinner, if necessary, by immersing it for a few moments in dilute sulphuric or nitric acid.

Acceptance of the Doctrine of Evolution.

The almost universal acceptance of the doctrine of evolution by the scientists who took part in the meeting of the American association at Cleveland was a matter of considerable comment among those who were unaware of the recent progress of scientific thought. The time has passed when the Darwinian theory was supposed to imply that the descent of man from monkeys—an idea never held by Darwin or any other naturalist—and the great principle that existing forms of life have arisen by variation and development from simpler forms of organized beings previously existing, is coming more and more into favor, and, in fact, now forms the foundation stone of all biological investigations. A complete and satisfactory system of evolutionary philosophy is yet to be formulated, and the different theories advanced and believed in will be subject to natural selection and the law of the survival of the fittest; but the fundamental ideas first advanced by Darwin and Lamarck were never more generally accepted by naturalists than at the present time.—Popular Science News.

A New Fiber.

A manufacturing firm in New York has written the department of agriculture specimens of a new fiber they are making from the stalk of the cotton plant. The samples received strongly resemble hemp, and seem to be adapted to all the uses that hemp is put to. A few fibers of it twisted together, says Science, show remarkable tensile strength, although no exact comparative tests with other fibers have yet been made. A collection of the fibers of hemp, flax, jute, ramie, etc., from all parts of the world is being made by the department, and a new instrument for testing the strength of fibers is expected that the tensile strength of each will be ascertained with great accuracy.

The Population of France.

The increase of population of France is steadily growing less. In the past year the number of births was 899,339; of deaths, 842,797, or 25.3 and 24 per thousand respectively. The excess of births over deaths has decreased since 1881 from 168,229 to 56,520, or 66 per cent. The Revue Scientifique, from which these figures are taken, says there is a very interesting editorial on the connection of these facts with the question of recruiting, immigration into France, which is at present largely encouraged by the government and by the people, and shows that the only remedy is to open France to an unrestricted immigration from neighboring countries.

The Universal Language Volapuk.

The universal language Volapuk is slowly coming into use, but so slowly that some doubt remains whether it will ever be universally adopted. According to Popular Science News it has not, with more favor than any similar scheme heretofore proposed, and seems to be, on the whole, well adapted for its purpose. The study of such an artificial language is by no means so much of a task as that of one of the natural languages, and it or some other universal language will be of great value to travelers and scientific men.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Beauty of Face and Beauty of Voice—A Great Singer's Rule for Preserving Both.

Youth, beauty and freshness of voice being priceless possessions to women in the theatrical and musical world, they are naturally good judges of the means of preserving the same. Therefore the following advices to an actress, attributed to Adelina Patti, will be interesting to outsiders as well:

Take plenty of exercise; take it in the open air; take it alone and breathe with the mouth shut. Live on simple food; all the fruit and rare beef you want, very little pastry, a glass of claret for dinner, coffee in moderation, but never a sip of beer, because it thickens the voice and stupifies the senses. Keep regular hours for work, meals, rest and recreation, and never under any circumstances indulge in the fashionable habit of eating late suppers. If you want to preserve the beauty of your voice, the beauty of face and the precious luxury of youth, keep well, keep clean, keep erect and keep cool."

Reducing and Increasing Weight.

Few people have the exact weight that a perfect standard would require, and while some are seeking to reduce too redundant proportions, others are striving equally hard to clothe their bony frames with a comfortable covering of flesh. Each class will be interested in one or the other of the following lists from medical researches:

To reduce weight: Eat to the extent of satisfying a natural appetite of lean meat, poultry, game, eggs, milk moderately, green vegetables, turnips, succulent fruits, tea or coffee. Drink lime juice, lemonade and acid drinks. Avoid fat, butter, cream, sugar, pastry, rice, sago, tapioca, corn starch, potatoes, carrots, beets, parsnips and sweet wines. Exercise freely.

To increase weight: Eat to the extent of satisfying a natural appetite of fat meats, butter, cream, thick soups, chocolate, bread, potatoes, peas, parsnips, carrots, beets, farinaceous foods, as Indian corn, rice, tapioca, sago, cornstarch, pastry, custards, oatmeal, sugar, sweet wines and ale. Avoid acids. Exercise as little as possible; sleep all you can and don't worry or fret.

Enemies of the Ear.

The ear has perhaps no greater enemy now one more to be feared than the hairpin, unless it be its equally destructive friend the "ear spoon" or "ear cleaner." So affirms Dr. Charles H. May in Babyhood, and adds: "These two instruments are often employed to remove wax from the ear, when it be in excess or not. It may be taken as a safe rule that whatever wax cannot be removed by the little finger, with its nail closely pared and rounded, or by a single fold corner of a handkerchief or piece of soft linen, should be left there, or at least not removed by the mother. Hairpins and like dangerous instruments often cause damage to the ear canal and even the drum membrane; hemorrhage from, and wounds of, various parts of the organs of hearing are not infrequently met with by the nurist as a result of the mother's resorting to the use of these instruments; and many an infant and child will be saved pain and further danger if these tools of domestic instruments are abolished from use in the nursery altogether.

What Causes Baldness?

Theories in regard to the cause of baldness are many and diverse. One that has been received with considerable attention, and seems in accordance with facts, is that the falling hat, which by its band contracts the blood vessels and diminishes the supply of blood in the scalp and will cause baldness. But now comes a writer in Popular Science, who has lived long in India, and tells us that the Parsees of that country are compelled to keep the head covered during the day with a high hat which is so tight as to crease the scalp, and at night with a skull cap, and the writer has never seen or heard of one of them being bald.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

A Pretty Custom That Still Holds Its Own—Favored Forms of Entertainment.

Weddings are just now the most important feature in the society world, and their every detail is discussed with interest. Some reasons followers of Anglican customs claimed at the end of last spring that the fashion of bridesmaids at church weddings was "going out" in England and that good form here this season would therefore require the bride to be attended only by her "maid of honor." Notable weddings that have recently occurred in New York's most fashionable circles have severally settled this vexed question. At two of the most elegant church marriages that have yet occurred the bride was attended in one case by four and in the other by eight bridesmaids. It appears, therefore, that the pretty and picturesque train of many bridesmaids is too firmly established among us to be suddenly removed, and it is probable that fair ones will retain equal favor with the fashion of one fair maid of honor only.

Ladies' Receptions.

As the season of the receptions, dinners, lunches and teas begins, it becomes a question of importance to many young ladies, As defined by good housekeeping, lunches are well suited to the entertainment of ladies, dinners to that of gentlemen and their wives, while any form of dancing party well repays favors shown a young daughter or is a pleasant compliment to offer her guest or the guest of her friend.

Teas are delightful social affairs and especially suitable where ladies alone are to be asked, as they may take place at hours when—except in our larger cities—any preoccupied that gentlemen are occupied with business. Where one's social debts are many, and afternoon tea must fail of its greatest charm—informality—through being one of a large, a reception answers the purpose exceedingly well.

Let us take, for example, a ladies' reception. It may be given during any part of the afternoon or early evening hours, but is most suitable from four to seven. It is better, if possible, when sending invitations to state the purpose, as "To meet Miss A.," or "Music," or "Readings." As the affair lacks much of the formality of an evening party, the invitation do not require to be sent so long before hand, though it is well they should be delivered several days in advance and quite necessary that all be sent at the same time.

The visiting card of the hostess, with the words "At Home, Four to Seven," and the date in lower left corner and, say, "Music" in the other, the card enclosed in an envelope of same size, is the usual form.

Quick Time.

The following are the fastest records made by locomotives: In Canada 118 miles has been covered in 120 minutes. The regular time of the "Flying Dutchman" from London to Bristol, England, is 120 minutes for 118 miles. The schedule time from London to Brighton is 60 minutes, the distance being 50 miles. While a speed of 70 miles an hour has been attained, we are pretty confident that no locomotive has covered 70 miles in an hour. Recently a locomotive has been invented which is said to have made 10 miles in a straight track in 5 minutes.

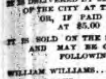
Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of Thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its produce bounteously; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, refrain from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and render thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of the same blessings, and that the people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor:

ROBERT S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—In one month from now the days will begin to lengthen again.

—Followers sometimes feel the want of a leader. Tulip soup leads, others follow. This is what the manufacturers say.

—Mechanical drawing and German classes will meet at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-morrow evening. Full information may be procured at the rooms.

—The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad is going to build a new bridge with two arches across the Passaic River, between Union and Morris counties.

—Some people pretend that they are never surprised at anything, but even the most obstinate of them finds it difficult to conceal his amusement when he runs his nose against a door-edge in the dark.—Ex.

—In giving notice that the regular monthly meeting of the "Ys" will be held Tuesday afternoon at four o'clock, Miss B. M. Taylor, Recording Secretary, requests all members please to make a special effort to attend.

—Winfield Scott Post, No. 40, G. A. R., went to Brooklyn Saturday evening and were the guests of B. F. Middleton Post, of that city. They left Plainfield on the 7:30 p. m. train. They report having had an enjoyable time.

—Jerusalem Lodge, F. and A. M., will confer degrees on several candidates to-morrow night. After the meeting they will sit down to a collation. About four hundred Masons from all parts of the State are expected to be present.

—The ladies who have sent their names, indicating their desire to join the Cooking School, as well as all others who can take advantage of it, are requested to meet at the residence of Mrs. Yates, 14 East Seventh street, Tuesday, Nov. 20th, at 2 p. m.

—A horse attached to a wagon owned by Smith & Rockwell shied at the sight of an umbrella left open by the curb of West Front street this afternoon and crashed into the bakery wagon. Some pies and jelly rolls were spilled in the mud, but no further damage was done.

—It is stated as a fact for farmers, that "the seed of the sunflower is the best remedy ever discovered for the cure of founder in horses. Immediately on discovering that a horse is foundered, put about a pint of the whole seed into his feed, and it will work a perfect cure."

—The attendance at St. Mary's parochial school fair Saturday evening was the largest that has yet been present. A large number of articles were disposed of. To-night the contest for the parlor suit will be decided, and to-morrow night the contest for the gold watch will also end.

—The young men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms this evening at eight o'clock will be led by Mr. E. L. Suffern, who will be remembered by many as a very talented young man who has been specially gifted for evangelistic work. There will be live singing from Gospel Hymns Number Five. Every young man is assured of a welcome.

—From The New York World's "Gossip Among the Exchanges" Sunday is extracted the following: "The prospect of lower prices for coal is lowered by a story which obtains credence in the trade to the effect that the production of anthracite is to be restricted by a very decisive way. It is alleged that a direct allotment will be made to each of the coal companies."

—The delightful little operetta written by R. S. Brooks for "The St. Nicholas" called "The Land of Nod" has been adapted for products so as a play with musical additions under the direction of Mme. Alberti. The performers will be children of the vicinity, and the proceeds will benefit the W. C. T. U. organization of Plainfield. The entertainment will occur in Music Hall Thanksgiving night.

THE NEW METHODIST PASTOR.

The Initial Discourse of a Minister of Much Power.

The Rev. Mr. Mitchell, of Pittsburg, Pa., yesterday morning and evening occupied for the first time as its pastor the pulpit of the Methodist church of this city. His sermon in the morning was from the text "And these things write we unto you that your joy may be full."—I John, I iv., and it stamped him as a preacher of unusual power, which was still further manifested in his evening sermon. Mr. Mitchell is an valuable acquisition to the Christian ministry of Plainfield, already so highly favored. He is a young man, about thirty years old, and has all the attributes of one likely to become exceedingly popular. It was the great reputation he had already made for himself in Pittsburg, Pa., which first attracted to him the attention of Bishop Vincent, who recommended him to the Special Committee of the Plainfield church appointed to select a suitable minister to succeed the Rev. Dr. J. B. VanMeter, promoted to the presidency of a new college in Baltimore. The Committee, of which Henry K. Carroll, LL.D., editor of The New York Independent, was chairman, is to be congratulated on their excellent choice, and the church is to be likewise congratulated in securing a minister so worthy of its most cordial support.

The young people of the church are to give the new pastor a reception next Friday evening.

DELINQUENT ELECTION JUDGES.

Sued for Delaying Union County's Canvass.

The Judges of Election in various parts of Union county, particularly Elizabeth, are in hot water for their carelessness in making election returns. Last Friday week the County Board of Canvassers held their regular meeting to canvass the returns, and, owing to the absence of a number of the judges, who are members of the Board, were unable to proceed and had to adjourn until the following day. When the absentees made their appearance. The adjournment cost the county $150, and County Attorney Ward, after a consultation with County Collector Wood, is determined to make an example of the delinquents and stop the practice, which has been growing worse every year.

Accordingly, he has instituted proceedings against eleven of the Judges of Election, whom he has sued for $100 each, the fine imposed by law for the offense, the trial to come up in the Elizabeth District Court to-morrow.

All the Inspectors and Clerks of Election at the polling districts where these judges officiated have been subpœnaed as witnesses to testify when the count was completed and to prove that the judges had ample time to attend the Board meeting.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Peter B. Hodge, of Stelle's pharmacy, will be wedded to Miss Emma Polhemus at her home in Somerville to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock.

Captain Wm. C. Smith, of the U. S. Grant Guards, will tender that organization a turkey supper next Wednesday evening. The Plainfield Cornet Band has been invited.

The Madison Eagle remarks that Mr. James E. Martine, Plainfield's "farmer orator", has a life-work before him in his avowed intentions of bolstering up the principles of the Democratic party till Free Trade is victor of these United States. But inasmuch as public speaking for Free Trade seems to be Mr. Martine's chief recreation and as he seems to extract considerable amusement from it, The Eagle is inclined to let him have his fun.

Judge Ulrich's Masonic monthly, The Royal Craftsman, is out for October. Among its editorials is noted the fact that "Trinity Commandery, of Plainfield, is now in active operation. The officers recently exemplified their work in an able manner before duly appointed committees of St. John's and Coer de Lion Commanderies, and a dispensation will no doubt shortly reach the Sir Knights."

The distinguished company which stopped a few minutes at the North avenue railroad station in Plainfield Saturday afternoon included Vice-President-elect Levi. P. Morton, Warner Miller, Thomas C. Platt and Senator Hiscock. They were accompanied by Thos. Cochran, representing the Philadelphia Union League. John Wanamaker and Mayor Fikler, who attended the party in the City of Brotherly Love.

Mrs. Charles B. Brown passed quietly away this morning at about one o'clock, after a long illness. The deceased was well known in this city, where she was loved for her amiable ways. "She bore her trials"—says one who knew her—"with unusual patience, and seemed only to be waiting for her heavenly Father to take her home." She had been a member of the First Baptist church a number of years. She was twenty-nine years of age, and last Sunday celebrated the second anniversary of her wedding.

Thanksgiving Day Services.

A union service will be held in the Seventh-Day Baptist church at 10:30 a. m. Thanksgiving Day. A sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, of the First Presbyterian church.

The Thermometer Record.

The record of the thermometer at Stelle's drug store for the month is as follows:

THE PRICE OF A BROKEN HEART.

Mattie Roland Wants $75,000 for Breach-of-Promise.

Mattie Roland, of Somerville, last Friday brought suit in the Supreme Court of the City and County of New York against George Anderson, a wealthy young Somerville bachelor, for breach-of-promise to marry. Mr. Anderson was arrested at the Sturtevant House in New York, where he was stopping, Friday evening, and was held to bail in the sum of $5,000. The case promises to be an interesting one.

Miss Roland alleges that Mr. Anderson gained her affections some five years ago, when she was a school girl; that he promised in May, 1883, to marry her; that he has maintained improper relations with her ever since, while continually postponing the wedding-day; that recently her condition became delicate; that she demanded that he marry her at once, when he refused to comply and told her that she might sue if she choose. Hence the suit.

On the part of Mr. Anderson his counsel consider that the suit is a species of blackmail. They claim that in 1883 Mr. Rowland made an affidavit that she was about to give birth to a child which was likely to become a charge upon the township, and that a young man who was employed as a fireman on the New Jersey Central Railroad was the father of her child. This young man was arrested, and married the girl. Sometime after the wedding, her husband brought suit against Anderson for alienating his wife's affections, and secured $1,000 damages. The husband then obtained a divorce from his wife for adultery. Miss Roland has made frequent endeavors to induce Anderson to pay her various sums of money in settlement of her alleged claims, which he has always refused to do.

Miss Roland's counsel are John A. Frech, of Somerville; and John C. Shaw, of New York. Anderson is represented by Messrs. Clark & Reed.

A Chump.

"A correspondent"—says The New York Press—"wants to know what a chump is. The Press candidly admits that it doesn't know what a chump is, although it has a dim suspicion that if Lord Dundreary were here he would say that a chump is another fellah that doesn't think as the first fellah thinks he ought to think'".

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary defines a chump to be "a short, thick, heavy piece of wood".

A Coal Train Derailed.

A coal train on the Central Railroad was derailed Saturday night near the Elizabethport terminus of the Newark Bay bridge. Several cars were smashed, and travel over the road was generally delayed, all trains having to run on the up-bound track. It was some hours before the debris was cleared away.

Drawing a Conclusion.

It is said that Newark makes 150,000,000 corkscrews in one year.—State Press.

No wonder the Republicans can't carry New Jersey any more.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

Joel W. Clift, formerly of Bordentown, who was Captain of Company C, 9th New Jersey Volunteers, died at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., last night, at the age of 51 years.

The stated meeting of the State Charities Aid Association of New Jersey will be held in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. building, 9 to 15 Clinton street, Newark, Wednesday, Nov. 21st, at 10:30 a. m.

Moorestown has joined the list of Burlington county towns which are agitating the question of incorporation. Several of the largest property-holders in the East District, feeling that the town has outgrown the primitive form of government by a township committee, have begun a movement looking toward incorporation. A meeting of those interested will be held some time next week, to take definite action in the matter.

Officer Erhard B. Kelly, of Summit, has issued notices offering a reward of $50 to be paid by the State Detectives' Association for the capture of John Jalopowski, the murderous Pole who assaulted Mrs. Ueoff with a heavy iron bar the morning of November 5th, and then robbed her of $400. The following description is given of him: "Polander, 33 years of age, small man, thick set, sunken eyes, thin beard, blue eyes, scar above left eye, yellow mustache, no beard, scar on head."

Plumbago of a high grade has been discovered at Willow Point, Greenwood Lake. Willow Point is near the head of the Lake. Mr. DeGraw last Summer opened there the Lakeside House. Much difficulty was experienced in boring an artesian well, so hard was the rock encountered. When at last the obstruction was pierced a soft black material was found. This has since proved to be plumbago of excellent quality, and a mine will soon be sunk. There is a little plumbago in the northern part of Passaic county, but at present it is too small quantity, or is too poor in quality, to be profitable.

John Christ, of Roselle, is the owner of a wonderful Tabby cat. He has devoted a great deal of time to the education of the animal, and puss shows a degree of intelligence which astonishes the natives. She can will wink with its right eye or left eye, as commanded by her master, beat time with one of her paws when he sings selections from the German opera and pick out the queens in a pack of cards, Mr. Christ is now trying to teach Tabby to serve "Home Sweet Home" while he plays the accompaniment on his violin, but he fears his efforts in this direction will not be successful.

W. H. Ryan, of Chatham, the youngest and one of the most prosperous rose-growers of New Jersey, has discovered what florists term a "sport," in his plant that he "Francis Cleveland," in honor of the President's wife. He named the new wild-rose "Mrs. Cleveland Ryan, although but twenty-three years of age, has had full charge of John N. Bunyan's business, and is president of the American Florists' Association.

NEW JERSEY POLITICS.

THOUGH ELECTION IS OVER THE CALDRON STILL BOILS.

The Democratic Plot to Ruin the State Forever.—The Official Returns.—The Disputed Fourth District.—Where the Figures Are "Doctored".

"There is no particular change"—says a Trenton dispatch in to-day's Philadelphia Press—"in the Democratic plot to run the State of New Jersey forever. Every device has been suggested for keeping the Republicans out in the cold. While those who are hungry and politically unsalted are fighting for the loaves of comfort, those who are grinding axes for future chipping are turning out the more desperate schemes.

"The Democratic party is showing its cloven foot. Every Democratic paper in the State has joined in the clamor for a constitutional convention. They boldly assert that the Republican idea of representation in the Senate is bad. One prominent Democrat in backing up the party idea says: 'The inequitous system of county representation has been a shame to the State. Essex with 205,000 inhabitants and one-fifth the wealth of the State, has been forced to bear burdens because Cape May with 10,000 inhabitants and no wealth to speak of has decreed it.' This is the argument used by every Democrat North of Trenton. The universal sentiment is to have the representation made by districts according to the population. This would multiply the senatorial representation in East Jersey and decrease it in South Jersey. Only those living in South or West Jersey can foresee what havoc this would create. For years the lines have been drawn between these two ends of the State.

"The people of Newark, Jersey City and Paterson have the most ridiculous idea of the lower part of Governor Green's bailiwick. They think it is a howling wilderness and that the few people scattered in the towns and villages are farmers and bayseds. South Jersey, as it is commonly called, but West Jersey as it is known geographically, gets no recognition, only when there is a Republican majority in the Legislature. It is under the Democratic administration an unknown factor in the State policy. Should the desperate scheme of a constitutional convention prevail, South Jersey would occupy an unenviable position. If it do come to an issue the Republicans will ask for the amendment of the clause bearing on the judiciary. There is great need of reform in this branch. The system still prevailing in this State is a very old one. It was borrowed from England in the early days of the State Government. The mother country has long ago discarded it, but Jersey still hangs on, and every day sees the many complications that arise from it.

"The leaders have so far kept their mouths shut on this discussion. They, as a rule, discourage it, denouncing it as impractical and unwise. The small fry help the question before the people by their shouting, and there is no telling what Legislature made of the material the incoming one is may be led to do. The political map of New Jersey does not suit them in other respects. They want the counties redistricted, so that they can pack in more Democrats and save their berths forever.

"A hasty review of gerrymandering shows that it fails oftener than it succeeds. Just now the scheme is to make Essex a whole kingdom. It is now called the 'State in Essex,' but it is thought advisable to make it the 'State in Newark', by making Joseph Haynes's town of breweries one county and the other township another. Hudson, following as an able imitator, has concluded that it is too large, and they want Jersey City made one county and the rural districts the other. Even Paterson has a little of the fever. This is a very pretty scheme if it work; and if it do not it will not be for the want of trying.

"The early political gossip of the Seventh District is that Congressman McAdoo has been told that he can not have the renomination again. It goes to Robert B. Hedspeth, Passaic, who he serves his term, is going to settle in the South.

"Seven New Jersey State Senators will retire in 1890. Of these, three are Republicans and four Democrats. A change in Morris and Cumberland, both Republican counties now represented by Democrats, and the election of the three others mentioned, will again make the Senate Republican. The Republicans intend to make an investigation of the election of Samuel Fowler in the Fourth District. The Warren Democrat, a Democratic paper, says: 'There ought to be a most searching scrutiny of every ballot in the district if necessary, that justice should follow.' Some Democrats further claim that an investigation might result in 'landing the members of the Pelouck gang in State Prison.'

"Not until the Board of Canvassers, appointed by Gov. Green meet, will the official figures be obtainable. The tally sheets turned in by the various counties show that Cleveland's majority is 6,728. This will be slightly changed by the board on account of the votes for the electors being different. They will have to be averaged. The vote cast for Harrison was 144,426, and the number cast for Blaine, 135,998. For Cleveland, 151,154, against 127,778. For Fisk, 2,766, against 6,153 in 1884."

"THE OFFICIAL RETURNS"—

says The New York Tribune—"of the recent election are all in and will be examined and declared by the State Canvassers the 27th. The Canvassers, Senators West, Edwards and Baker (Dem.), and Nevins and Roe (Rep.), with the Governor, perform their duty in one afternoon, but the clerks of the Secretary of State will take a week in verifying the figures. Cleveland's plurality is 6,963, or 800 less than a majority. The total vote was 303,690, an increase of 46,392 over 1884. The Democrats got 72,626 of this increase, the Republicans 31,108, and the Prohibitionists 1,658. The Prohibition loss from 1886 is over ten thousand, and it sustains the belief that the liquor legislation of last Winter would carry confusion into the ranks of the Third party. The increase in the total vote is principally in cities, and indicates large accessions to the population since the census of 1885. On the vote for Congressmen the Democratic plurality is only 3,733. The figures confirm the belief that the High-License-County Option law lost the Democratic votes in South Jersey and gained them in North Jersey in still larger proportion. The plurality given Fowler (Dem.) in the Fourth Congressional District is 42. It is charged that the returns have been 'doctored', and the character of the candidate's backers justify the Republicans in demanding a thorough investigation."

RETIRING CONGRESSMAN PHELPS.

In reviewing the men who will not return to Congress The New York World says that "William Walter Phelps will be remembered as the dude of the House. His selection has generally been of colors that are effected by only advanced æsthetes, and his hair, parted in the middle and banged on his forehead, will long linger as a recollection around the Capitol. Although a dandy in manner, he is a hard hitter in debate, and it would be difficult among the members of this Congress to find a more scholarly style or a finer sarcasm than Mr. Phelps's. His affectations in dress and manner have subjected him to much ridicule, but have not detracted from the respect which his experience and ability always command. While somewhat exclusive and formal, Mr. Phelps has been invariably polite and usually obliging."

Secret Societies Statistics.

The numerical strength of the several leading secret orders in the United States is represented as follows:

Free and Accepted Masons, 600,000; I. O. O. F., 830,000; Knights of Labor, 250,000; G. A. R., 393,000; Independent Order of Good Templars, 400,000; Knights of Pythias, 215,000; A. O. U. M., 191,876; The Royal Arcanum, 80,000; Improved Order of Red Men, 84,000; American Legion of Honor, 61,644; Knights and Ladies of Honor, 48,300; Sons of Veterans, 47,000; Ancient Order of Foresters, 75,589; Knights of the Golden Eagle, 60,000; Order of Chosen Friends, 29,371; Order of United Friends, 30,000; Ancient Order of Druids, 15,000; Order of Maccabees, 14,000; Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, 6,500. The total number of Masons in the world is from 2,000,000 to 5,000,000. There are also 34,000 Odd Fellows who have taken the Rebekah Degree. There are over 67,000 Druids in the world. There are very few lodges of the Knights of Pythias outside of the United States, but it can be safely said that there are over 225,000 members of the order under the Supreme jurisdiction. —Ex.

To Be Gone Till Spring.

Plainfield was even more than ordinarily favored with song-birds last Summer. The March blizzard killed most of the sparrows and made room for more-popular feathered beauties. The approach of cold weather, however, drives them all away—even the martins, the Queen City's especial favorite. The accompanying cut represents a trio of the songsters bidding good-bye to a little girl who has been kind to them. The kitten smiles in regards to the regulah three.

The Camera Club Exhibit.

The exhibition at the Camera Club rooms, which opens to-night, will be a most worth visiting. It embraces photographic views as pleasing to the eye as they are plentiful in number. Local pictures, residences and landscapes are portrayed, with photographs of other localities, some as far away as the Rocky Mountains.

GOSSIP OF WASHINGTON.

The President Has No Desire to Sell Oak View.

LORD SACKVILLE SELLING OUT.

Where the Leaders of the Administration Will Go When They Have Finished Their Work—The Controversy Between Senator Hawkins and Judge Hoeker.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—In relation to the rumor that the president contemplated selling Oak View a prominent real estate man, who knows him intimately, said: "I know of no negotiations had been in progress to dispose of the property, and I believe that there is a word of truth in the story. He has not decided to go to Deer Park, and will live in retirement at Oak View or rent that fine suburban property. I think Mr. Cleveland will take a special train and leave for his native town of Fayetteville. He will spend some time in New York city, and possibly may make a western trip later in the spring, as far as the Pacific coast. There is also a report that it is likely he will find him at his brother's patronage, up on the edge of the North Woods, ready to strike into the wilderness at a long dashing excursion. The chances are that another autumn will see Grover Cleveland one of the 1,000,000 souls that go to make up the population of the city of New York."

LEADERS WILL GO.

Senator Gorman is going into a complete retirement on the 4th of March. The door of his commission merchant's office in Baltimore will be closed against all comers, and there is no prospect of his ever seeing public life again.

Secretary Whitney is going to take a long vacation. He and Mrs. Whitney will spend the summer and autumn abroad. They will return to this country in time to open a law office in New York again, but big business in which he is engaged with Mr. Payne, Oliver Payne, will occupy all his time.

Senator Hoar will return to his old home in Concord and probably to his Alabama plantation. He expects to spend a portion of the term of the political wheel which he has taken out of office brings him no pecuniary benefit.

Senator Ingalls will go straight back to Kansas. His ancestors in Salem, Mass., are not anxious to see him, and he will not accept any portfolio in his cabinet. Public office is not sought after by Ingalls. Ingalls had a good law business before he came here.

Attorney General Garland will settle down to the practice of his profession in Washington. He is regarded as a very fine lawyer, and undoubtedly will have all the cases he can handle. He has already bought a handsome house in the city.

Postmaster General Dickinson has not determined what he will do after March 4. In fact, he has not had time to give the matter any serious thought. If he does not go to New York the postmaster general can be found behind the mahogany in the interior William F. Vilas is the future that he cares to think about, remarked that he will probably remain in Washington. He has had a fine practice before the postmaster general.

Secretary Bayard will return to his old home in Wilmington and probably to his Albemarle Hotel property, and will spend a portion of the term of the political wheel which he has taken out of office brings him no pecuniary benefit.

Secretary Endicott will go straight back to Salem, Mass., and resume his practice of law. He will not accept any portfolio in his cabinet. Public office is not sought after by Endicott. He has a good law business.

Vilas is the future that he cares to think about, remarked that he will probably remain in Washington. He has had a fine practice before the postmaster general.

Secretary Fairchild will succeed to the office of commissioner of pensions. He is a comparatively poor man and will need the salary now paid him by the government. He made no plans when he left office.

Col. Daniel Lamont will become a member of the New York metropolis. The nature of Col. Lamont's future business he does not wish to have stated at present, but it is settled that he is to go into it. He is not going into the newspaper business, and will be too hard to keep out of politics for a year or two.

THE POSTMASTER CONTROVERSY.

The breaks are here are growing interested in the three-cornered controversy now being waged between Senator Hawkins, Judge Hoeker and Secretary Endicott. Those who know it say that he is not the man to sit down quietly and allow any man to call him "a liar and a scoundrel," for which existence for dealing the Lord owes an apology to mankind. Hoeker is said to be quite as fiery as fire engine, the jaded mustang of the Kentucky. It will be remembered that in his scathing speech with editor Mansfield at the Kansas City Times, Hoeker was very much provoked by his remarks, and wrenched the hard emptied pistol from his grasp. For more than a year Hoeker was public and private Louisville lauding the virtues of a period of years, and Hawkins was his political enemy. Hoeker will certainly call Hawkins to account for that characteristic. Now, you see, Joe will have to [illegible] back."

SAYS AND DOINGS.

Mr. Cleveland and his young [illegible] will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] on the 20th inst. Mr. [illegible] and Mrs. [illegible] are personally known to Mr. Cleveland, and the visit will be a pleasant one. Found It.

Chicago City Editor (to reporter)—I see that in writing up a suicide you refer to "the cold and remorseless river."

Reporter—Yes, I always like to throw feeling into what I write.

City Editor—That's capital; but did you ever see a river stricken with remorse?

Reporter—I don't know that I have.

City Editor—Well, then, go and find one, and, by the way, don't come back until you do find one.

[The reporter goes away. Two days later he returns.]

City Editor—Hollow; got back, have you?

Reporter—Yes.

City Editor—Well, did you find a remorseful river?

Reporter—I did.

City Editor—What river is it?

Reporter—The Mississippi.

City Editor—Why remorseful?

Reporter—Because years ago it decided to run by St. Louis.

City Editor sprungs to his feet—Young man, take my seat. I resign.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Knew Him.

City Editor—Billie Crim is a very efficient officer and a very clever gentleman, but he is thin, very thin. The following good joke is told on account of said thinness:

A few days ago he was sitting in a rear room in a doctor's office. In a front room the office boy was reading a dime novel, when an urchin came to his entrance with a basket of fruit, and insisted upon the office boy making a purchase. To get rid of the young fruit vender, the office boy went to a case, opened the door, and exposed to view a skeleton. The fruit boy fled in terror, leaving his basket behind him.

City Editor Crim, hearing the commotion, went into the front office, and, upon learning what had occurred, walked to the door and said to the urchin, who stood across the street, crying bitterly:

"Little boy, come over and get your basket; nobody shall hurt you."

"No, I won't," sobbed the little fellow, "you can't fool me. I know you, if you have got your clothes on."—Exchange.

IT IS A LOVE MATCH.

THE MARRIAGE OF MARIE ENDICOTT AND JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN.

Some Interesting Gossip About the Enditcotts—The Bride a Favorite in Washington Society—The Courtship of Mr. Chamberlain.

The marriage of Miss Marie Endicott and the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain must be a love match, for both are too wealthy to think of matrimonial money making; and as to ancestry and rank, the advantage is decidedly in favor of the Yankee girl. Mr. Chamberlain is the first of his family to hold any station more noted than that of a wealthy manufacturer, while the Endicotts have been noted in Massachusetts history for nearly 250 years.

Governor John Endicott, considerably more than 200 years ago, ruled Massachusetts by appointment from the British crown; and ruled it with a rod of iron, too, in many respects. By his consent four Quakers were hanged in Boston, and he compelled the men to cut their hair close and the women to wear veils in church. He also disagreed violently with witches, Baptists and Indians. He lived in those days when a difference of opinion was a crime, when men quarreled and fought and "shot as they prayed." As a witty descendant of the Puritans has said, "They first fell on their knees and then fell on the aborigines."

He left a good estate which his descendants have greatly increased. Indeed, the Endicotts are one of the very few families in the United States which have retained wealth right along for several generations. The Astors and Vanderbilts are only in the third generation of continuous wealth, and probably because their fortunes are so large that they cannot spend the income. The Endicotts, of Massachusetts, have retained the family wealth and talent only tolerably well, but the Endicotts appear to have held up well, furnishing at least one great man to the public service in each generation.

MARIE ENDICOTT.

William Putnam Endicott, father of the secretary, was born in Salem, as his son was, in 1806, and has died since the son became secretary. The latter's mother was a daughter of Jacob Crowninshield, who was Jefferson's secretary of the navy from 1805 to 1809. She also had two uncles in congress at different times. The secretary, William Crowninshield Endicott, was born in Salem, Mass., in 1830, graduated from Harvard in 1847, studied at the Dane law school and entered public life at the age of 25 as a member of the common council of Salem. He then practiced law and rallied to the support of the Democrats nominated him in 1884 for governor of Massachusetts. The strength he displayed in that race led to his appointment as secretary of war. He was a Whig and "Fillmore man" till 1860, when he joined the Democrats.

Between Secretary Endicott and Gen. Sheridan the old dispute was revived as to the right of the secretary of war to issue orders direct, ignoring the general of the army, or the right of the general to make assignments of troops and officers to the various posts, independent of the secretary; and the further question as to the right to command a general's subordinates, which has been in dispute ever since it was settled between Andrew Jackson in Florida and Secretary Armstrong. Secretary Endicott has conducted his office with something like oriental exclusiveness, and many of the best informed men in Washington do not even know him by sight. On one occasion he went to a distant room in the war department building and the doorkeeper actually refused to admit him, not knowing who he was, until he was identified. He has, however, administered his department very successfully and efficiently.

His daughter, on the other hand, is all graciousness and vivacity; is witty and entertaining and wins all hearts by her cordial manner. She converses fluently in both French and English, is unusually well educated and liberal in her views. The Hon. Joseph is said to have fallen in love with her at first sight when he came over in a merry effort to make the fishermen treaty, and as he is a very attractive gentleman, despite his 58 years, he was far more successful in negotiating a treaty with her than he was with the United States senate. His income is at least $150,000 a year, and as she is very wealthy, they will doubtless be able to "get along," although his daughter is not strikingly beautiful and he is most thoroughly detested by the Irish on account of his opposition to "Home Rule."

Miss Endicott is a blonde, "a beauty of the English type," as the saying is, with deep blue eyes, fair and white complexion and golden hair, inclining to red. The brief courtship was conducted in the intervals of the Sabbath's quietude. Miss Endicott, the bride-elect, was in attendance during the evening services at church, and only confessed after Mr. Chamberlain had proved to her under the British flag.

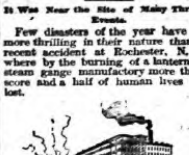
THE ROCHESTER DISASTER.

It Was Near the Site of Many Thrilling Events.

Few disasters of the year have been more thrilling in their nature than the recent accident at Rochester, N. Y., where by the burning of a lantern and steam gange manufactory more than a score and a half of human lives were lost.



ROCHESTER STEAM GAUGE AND LANTERN WORKS.
[Before the Fire.]

As every one familiar with that city, or who has read the dispatches of the past few days is aware, the factory in which was situated the fatal brink of the precipice over which the Genesee river makes the 100-foot leap, forming the "Upper Genesee Falls." It was a really substantial erected over and somewhat higher than these falls that Sam Patch, the original jumper, made his last leap. Over these falls, first and last, more than one world weary soul has sought the rest that is found in death, and others have been snatched away while looking over their awful brink. Perhaps the most dramatic suicide of the Genesee falls occurred in 1883 or 1884. One afternoon in early spring, when the river was swollen to its limits by the melting snows of the upper valley, a well knit, comfortably clad man of middle age sauntered carelessly across Central avenue bridge, which crosses the river but a few rods above the plunge. When about half way across he stopped, leaned on the rail and seemed to be gazing with moderate interest at the rushing waters as they swiftly passed beneath, bearing driftwood and masses of ice with them. Many people afterward remembered to have seen him stand there, the picture of lonely thought, gazing at the waters. By and by when there was a temporary falling off in the tide of travel he suddenly stepped over the rail and swung himself down into the torrent.

"Here I go!" he cried, and a moment later his white face was seen among the waves. But one man saw the tragedy, and his word was taken with a considerable grain of salt for some days by the local newspaper of the subsequent finding of the body below the falls confirmed it.

The recent accident was the most severe that has ever visited Rochester, and its date was less than a year after the singular and unprecedented explosion of naphtha in its sewers, which caused so much excitement in many other cities, especially in New York, where naphtha is so extensively piped.

A Statue to the Father of Waters.

The father of waters, the swift flowing and muddy Mississippi, has been immortalized in sculpture by the famous sculptor, Larkin G. Mead, whose chisel has fashioned some of the best specimens of American art.

A photograph of the allegorical statue, which is here engraved, represents the figure of a river god, in an easy half reclining position. Around the flowing locks is twined a wreath of grain, cotton and tobacco. He holds in his right hand a stalk of corn with a full grown ear, its trailing husks half stripped from its gleaming kernels. The vegetation of the Mississippi valley is represented in the drapery and the textures mentioned. There is an alligator burrowing his way through the shelving and under the lower part of the figure. A pine cone and life preserver of the ribbon which holds the wreath, and they fall gracefully on the left shoulder of the figure. The figure is full of power and character—as much like a river god as any that have yet been observed.

The source of the river is shown, as the Falls of St. Anthony. The shattered wheel of an old fashioned stern wheel steamer and a burrowing turtle form a part of the suggestive folds in the drapery. The whole statue is fifteen feet long and about five feet high. The block of marble from which it was cut weighed forty-four tons when the work commenced. It will be completed about Jan. 1, and will probably be placed in Forest park, St. Louis.

Wheat Experiments.

Michigan Agricultural college's experiments with wheat show that salt has raised the yield of wheat. 100 pounds being sown in the acre. Professor Johnson declines to think that one and one-quarter bushels of seed gives the best yield. The old Clawson seems to retain in good degree those qualities which have made it popular for a longer term of years than almost other wheat. Red Fife,

THE SCENE CHANGES.

MRS. HARRISON TO BE IN MRS. CLEVELAND'S PLACE.

Gossip About the Family of the President Elect—Mrs. Morton and Her Family of Girls—Home Life of Two American Families.

Mrs. Frances Cleveland gracefully steps out and Mrs. Carrie Harrison walks in as gracefully. Honors to both, for both are fine types of the intelligent, well poised American woman.

Though Americans have no court and no hereditary rank, and the president's wife is in theory no more than any other American lady, yet necessity has forced a sort of social leadership upon her since the days of Martha Washington and Abigail Adams; and custom, with the growth of wealth, has made her so much the queen of a republican court as is the wife of a reigning king. And for the duties of such a position Mrs. Harrison has had far more educational experience than Mrs. Cleveland had.

The coming presidentin, to borrow a Germanism, went to the university of Oxford, O., where Mrs. Harrison graduated from that college on the same day, were married soon after, and were the parents of a child before either was twenty-one years old. They are very nearly of the same age, and had been sweethearts from the time they entered college. Their courtship was one of the ideal kind, carried on in the intervals of liberalizing studies, with social reading together and quiet walks together among the groves of the seminary.

Her girlhood in Oxford, O., was a life of simplicity. She wore a calico frock, white apron and sun bonnet to college, where she studied Latin and the higher mathematics in a class with her future husband. At home in a still plainer dress she did all kinds of housework and became an expert in making bread, an accomplishment in which her hand has not lost its cunning. One of her early admirers says that her wedding dress was a soft brown merino, with a big bonnet, and her visiting dress "a lavender sprigged delaine trimmed with real lace at the neck and wrists." It only remains to add that she was married in "a gown of the bishop's lawn, with a tiny bit of embroidery on the neck and sleeves," and the millinery part of this sketch will be complete.

Mrs. Harrison is still a handsome woman, an active member of the Presbyterian Union church, a patron of all its charities, a manager of the orphan asylum and Indianapolis, and one of those useful and agreeable ladies whom her associates and co-religionists will greatly miss. She has had experience in Washington while her husband was senator from Indiana. Her daughter, Mrs. Mary McKee, and the latter's two children, will reside with her in Washington; and her daughter-in-law, the wife of Mr. Russell Harrison, will be a frequent visitor. Mr. Russell Harrison's home is on a big cattle ranch in Montana; his wife is a daughter of Senator Saunders of Nebraska, and he has one child.

"There will be two White Houses in Washington during the next administration," say the enthusiastic society ladies of New York and Boston. Mrs. Morton is young, handsome and vivacious, with all the tact and conversational ability for which American ladies of high social position are noted. And, it may be added, no lady in the city has had from the start a higher social position than Mrs. Morton, for she is one of the oldest families, and her associates are of the old Knickerbockers, and the Astors, Rockefellers, Vanderbilts and all the rest of the noted "Four Hundred." She has four daughters, the oldest but 14; but her only son died while the family was in London. He was much younger than the vice president elect that she seems more like an older sister of her daughters.

As there will be a mild flavor of Presbyterianism about the White House, it is only fair that the Armenians should hold the fort at the vice presidential mansion, and Mrs. Morton is an enthusiastic Episcopalian. Her husband's millions and her own social graces make her an important factor in her church. The Mortons are now leaving their beautiful country place at Tuxedo, up the Hudson, for their city residence at 55 Fifth avenue, and there they expect to entertain Mrs. Harrison in December. The lady will visit New York in response to an invitation from Mrs. Grant, widow of the general and president, whose guest Mrs. Harrison was in 1879. Mrs. Sartoris (Nellie Grant) is also expected to spend the winter with her mother.

While it is matter of gratification to all patriotic Americans that the choice of the next administration are to be so brilliant, Americans may well feel a thrill of pride that the ladies of the White House have so generally maintained the highest standard of American womanhood. Martha Washington's name is a household word for the fullness of its dignity of character. Mrs. Abigail Adams, wife of the second president, was not only brilliant in society and a success in giving warmth to social consideration that seemed in other respects a "cold" one, but was also a writer of remarkable talent. Thomas Jefferson was a widower, and the social features were secondary during his administration. The "reign" of Dolly Madison, wife of the fourth president, is still the great social epoch to which all others are judged. Of her immediate successors less is known, but the title that is known is good. President Jackson was a childless widower, and his private affairs are not to be dissected by gossips in the politics of the day. Mrs. Van Buren is fondly remembered as a charming young lady, and Mrs. Harrison, the wife of the president who died in office, was a favorite in society. Mrs. Tyler, Mrs. Polk, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. Buchanan, Mrs. Lincoln, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Hayes, Mrs. Garfield and her successor, Mrs. McElroy, had but short glimpses of the life there, while Mrs. Hayes was, in the humor of the day, slightly tinged with sarcasm, the "head of her administration. It is matter of surprise that with extreme youth, and no preliminary training as mistress of the White House, Mrs. Cleveland should have succeeded so well. In all respects, education, personal charms and preliminary training, Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Morton stand second to none of their predecessors.

SIR ANTHONY MUSGRAVE.

Governor of Queensland and Really the Father of the Canadian Pacific.

Sir Anthony Musgrave, governor of Queensland, whose death was recently announced, was really the father of the Canadian Pacific railroad. All his manhood's life was passed in the British colonial service, and every position he held was ably filled while he was the incumbent. His training for official life began when he was engaged as secretary to the hon of Sir James Mackintosh. It was not long after he began the duties he then took up before he was made governor of the island of St. Vincent, holding successively half a dozen governorships in as many portions of the world. He was governor of Newfoundland in 1866 when the first Atlantic cable was laid, and from there he went to British Columbia. It was at this time that it was thought desirable to effect a union of British Columbia with the Dominion of Canada, and he successfully in effecting the British Columbians of the desirability of such a step by insisting upon the construction of a highway of iron between the oceans, upon British soil. He was then sent to New Zealand, where he was governor just before the Zulu war. Then he went to Jamaica and then to Queensland, where he died after a service of thirty years.

Sir Anthony Musgrave's life record is not complete, however, without reference to his literary attainments, which were of no mean order. His book on political economy took high rank, and was warmly commended by Professor Jevons. He was also a notable writer on topics of current interest wherever he was located. Governor Musgrave was 60 years of age. His widow is the daughter and only living child of David Dudley Field, of New York, and her three sons are now being educated in England.

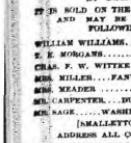
Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its products bounteously; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all the goodness of the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation, State and people will have peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor—

ROBERT S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—The latest slang is "Use Tulip soap." So say the manufacturers.

—"Uncle Tom's Cabin will be the attraction at Music Hall Saturday night.

—Wm. P. Spencer, of Washingtonville, reports the theft of his entire flock of ducks.

—A special meeting of the Lincoln Guards will be held at Headquarters to-night at eight o'clock.

—Mechanical drawing classes will meet at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night. For information apply to Secretary Thorn.

—The members of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society advertise an evening sociable to occur in T. A. B. Association Hall, Thanksgiving Eve, Wednesday, Nov. 28th.

—One of the added features in the production of "The Land of Nod" under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. at Music Hall Thanksgiving night is a "Pass in Books" The part is in the hands of a clever performer, and will be well done. Those who do not see this mention and who are not watching the programme will begin "Who is that?" "Well, now" etc., through the gamut of surprises.

—The stock of the Sylvanite Mining Company, which Mr. E. C. Mulford, of North avenue, is the agent for, here, sold on the Exchange in New York yesterday for $3.15. This is an increase of five per cent. since election, and it is needless to add that Mr. Mulford is very happy to have his claims of its value so quickly confirmed, as set forth in his advertisement in another column. He says that it is his firm conviction that a few months more will see the stock at par value.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Lena Keller, age 57, of North Plainfield, died at her home Sunday night. She leaves a husband, three sons and two daughters. The funeral will be at the house Thursday afternoon at two o'clock, with interment in the Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield.

Miss Eva Johnston, daughter of Mr. John Taylor Johnston, who was many years President of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, will be wedded to Mr. Harry Cox at Mr. Johnston's New York city residence November 27th. The Johnstons have just left their Summer home on East Front street, Plainfield, for New York. The wedding is to be very quiet on account of the recent death of Mrs. Johnston at Bar Harbor, Me.

Thursday Night's Concert.

The concert advertised to day to be given in Music Hall Thursday night is well worth attending. Musical people of Plainfield who know of Mr. Sherwood's talents are urging all their friends to go and hear him, and there are other celebrated artists in the company. Tickets are on sale at Reid & Randolph's and Miller's, where plain notices describing the concert also may be procured.

PRINTED BY "OLD SOL".

SUN-PICTURES ON EXHIBITION BY THE CAMERA CLUB.

Photographic Views of Life and Landscape.—A Display by Amateurs That Would Be Professionals Credit May Be Seen at the Rooms.

A silver dime last night admitted one to the public exhibition of what might be termed "silver shadows." These Sun-pictures, printed by "Old Sol" on glass "negatives" and indelibly transferred by the aid of his light to paper prepared with silver-nitrate and other chemicals. In this now-familiar but ever-wonderful process the members of the Plainfield Camera Club had lent invaluable aid; and it was at their cozy rooms that these photographic treasures were placed on view.

As one entered the door after ascending the stairway at No. 12 Park avenue he found on his left Mr. Silas H. Ruddock displaying. This included photographs of the interior and other Central Park attractions. Then came landscapes by Dr. H. H. Lowrie, with representations of the beauties of the Delaware Water Gap. Mr. Wm. T. Pelletier exhibited views taken in Mt. Tom Park, near Holyoke, Mass., river, N. J. The old boat house was the subject of especial favorable comment. Mr. Frederic Hamlin Andrews gave some fine views of live-stock and landscape, including railroad scenes. Mr. George W. Morrison received some credit for last Summer's camping days at Lake Hopatcong, with several "rush-lights". One of these portrayed a young lady leaning against an easel. Though taken by the sudden glare of magnesium combustion, the detail is very clear, even the threads of lace on the sleeves being discernible. A Plainfield tennis group, a pretty picture on the Shrewsbury river and a Long Branch residence also are included in Mr. Morrison's exhibit. Mr. Wm. Drummond Craig has caught with his camera varied interior subjects, including landscapes sent to him during his recent Southern tour. A dilapidated shanty is one of the best subjects. Mr. G. Harry Squires presents "Catskill Studies", views at the residence of Mr. John Taylor Johnston and at Milburn Place and Milburn Brook, with "Studies in Foam". Under each view is neatly printed an appropriate quotation. One gem was in delineation of a juvenile proposal. The artist has caught the twain in a charming pose. The lad, in his tiny sailor suit, has apparently been urging a lover's claim with youthful impetuosity; he has paused, resting his chubby hand on the "black-eyed Susans" gathered in his sweetheart's apron; his mouth is drawn at the corners, and expresses a pathetic fear that she will perhaps deny his suit; his eyes rest eager glances on her lips, which pout and hesitate to frame an answer. She knits her brow over the question; it is dubious whether she will say yea or nay; she is perplexed with his pleading; the brain beneath her golden curls is troubled with a new idea. Another from Horace A. Pierson's "A poem without words". Mr. Squires fulfills the promise of the line by giving a glimpse of young womanly beauty. Three girls pose by the water-side. One is seated on an upturned rowboat; in her hand an open book, her finger resting on a chosen passage; she turns a face rippled with a sweet smile towards the girl at her right; the other two bend forward and review the author's saying. There is a tender grace about the study—an ineffable charm. Say's stanza

"How happy could I be with either
Were t'other dear charmer away!
But while ye thus tease me tog-ther
To neither a word will I say."

is aptly applied to another of Mr. Squires's views. Two young ladies and a young man recline on the strand. They are doing their best to entertain him with lively talk, but he modestly tosses on the poet's words as quoted. A crowded with several youngsters biding among the stalks is one of Mr. Squires's best groupings on a Plainfield lawn. Three young W. Serrell, jr., exhibited scenes of Colorado's grandeur. The "Gateway to the Garden of the Gods"; the huge "Balanced Rock"; the majestic "Sentinel", reaching its fingers towards the skies, a diminutive man amidst its magnificence only to augment its majesty; the "Pioneer's Home", with log cabin, shaggy-bearded man, his gun, his wife and child, and a sturdy donkey with a deer slung across its back; the Grand river at Windy Gap, with a glimpse of the sublime snow-clad peaks; a mad fall of tumbling, foaming, frothing water down the boulders of the Rockies: these were among the views. One paused a long time before them. Coming nearer home, Mr. Serrell gave a pretty grouping on a Plainfield lawn. Three young ladies and a male companion, with a bedarrow, garden rake, heavy roller and other similar utensils, throw mischievous glances and seem to have been having more frolic than work. Mr. A. J. Gavett's subjects were various, from a Trinity church steeple to a little beauty called "Tick! Tick!" This latter represented a mite of a child pressing a watch to its ear; and one could read the flitting thoughts that came to the tot with the gentle throbbings of the mechanism. Another pleasing photograph was the face of a child peeping through a broken envelope. Dr. A. Willis Anderson's views embraced seaside fancies. There was a fine portrait of a dog. Mr. W. Y. Westervelt pictured a dog begging, and gave a group at the North Plainfield public school, with other scenes. The Notch and its surroundings were reproduced by Mr. Frank S. Browne, whose local work was much admired. Mr. W.m. Lyon, jr., exhibited various beautiful mountings. One—quite a marvel—was the photographing of several children standing at a seashore; and the camera—although facing the sun, an infringement on conservative methods,—has produced a splendid picture in which the shadows fall towards the observer. Another of Mr. Lyon's views includes newsboys at the North avenue railroad station. The detail is so perfect that on one of the papers the printing may be read, by the aid, of course, of a magnifying glass. Mr. Lyon has produced a remarkably soft effect in a photograph of little children resting on the grass beneath a hammock swung in Plainfield's public park. Mr. Fred. Stuull exhibited reproductions of paintings, a gun boat scene and various other pretty views Mr. Alfred W. Day exhibited among other photographs that of a mammoth tree on Mr. Lyon's father's place near Dunellen. Mr. Day's framing was uniquely artistic. The background for the pictures was of coarse hemp bagging; the frame was a tasteful arrangement of cording. Mr. Chas. H. Davis had a somewhat similar style of framing; he used rough pine boards, stained with black natural and decorated with cord and splashes of gilding. Mr. Davis's views were many, and engrossed one's attention a long time. There were enlargements by the bromide process, re-enabling crayon work; blue prints and silver prints There were views, exterior and interior, of the Potter mansion. There were portraits and landscapes, postings and studies. One photographic lie-been was entitled "The Reverie". A maiden reclines in an easy chair, her thoughts gone day-dreaming. She has been reading, but her book is neglected; and the blossoms gathered at her waist have escaped from their fastenings and are romping about her lap and falling gently to the carpet while she muses. One recognizes a depth of beauty in the picture—and most of all in the dreamy eye—that stamps the scene a poem. The artist's work is so true that even the tint of the dress is distinct. Another photograph shows even the meshes in the veil over a girl's face, and every feature beneath. "A Bad in the Apple Tree" is a bit of perfection. The "bud" is a maid not yet in her "teens" seated on a swinging bough. "The Philadelphia Photographer" of Nov. 17th, 1888, reproduces this picture and speaks of its "sweet simplicity" and "lovely æsthetic qualities". There are only a few of many gems.

Those who saw the recent professional photographic exhibition at Cincinnati say that—laying all bias aside—Plainfield's amateur show surpasses it. At any rate, the Camera Club display affords an opportunity for seeing much that is "good and pure and beautiful"; and an afternoon or evening spent at the rooms this week will not be without profit.

THE CHAUTAUQUA CIRCLE.

An Interesting Programme for the Next Meeting.

The fifty-ninth meeting of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle will be held Saturday evening, Dec. 1st, at the "Y" rooms, 55 East Front street. At the roll call members will give quotations from "The Odyssey". Then will come Greek tales, including "The Lotus-Eaters" and "Cyclops" by Morrison; and "Odysseus and Polyphemus", by Miss Mooney. Readings will follow by Miss Lizzie Hasbrouck, descriptive of "Archilles's Armor" and "The Meeting Between Hector and Andromache". After music and recess Mr. Johnston will tell of "Alexander the Great"; Mr. D. M. Runyon will expect members to answer questions on his "Map-Exercise Showing the Conquests of Alexander"; Miss Chamberlin will read "Alexander's Feast and the Power of Music" as Dryden tells it; and a game entitled "Greek Mythology" will be played. The readings include Greek History, Chapter XI. the required readings in The Chautauqua and Chapter X of the Appendix of the preparatory Greek course.

A NEW EAGLE ROCK RECORD.

J. M. Sherman Goes Up and Down the Hill 24 Times.

J. M. Sherman, of Lynn, Mass., started out Sunday morning to beat the record made by Fred Coningsby, of Brooklyn, in climbing Eagle Rock Hill, Orange, on a bicycle, thirteen times without a dismount in 3h. 15m. 45s. The weather was clear, but rather cold for fast time. Sherman mounted the hill at a slow pace, and, turning about, dashed down to the bottom at railroad speed. The thirteen trips were completed in 3h. 5m., beating Coningsby's record by about ten minutes; but not content with that Sherman went on and made twenty-four round trips, a distance of forty-eight miles, in 6h. 36m. 15s., thus establishing a record which will doubtless last some time. Later in the afternoon Coningsby made an attempt to beat the "ordinary" record on the hill, which was 1h. 20m. He made the hill four times in 54m. 55s., over twenty-four minutes ahead of the record. Sherman is a B. B. Decoder, of Newark, N. J., and F. F. Prial, of The Wheel.

FOR CHILDREN'S THANKSGIVING.

Kind-Hearted Maidens Hold a Successful Fair.

Little Miss Louise P., daughter of Councilman Samuel Wilbur, with her friend Miss Nettie Chandler held a fair Saturday afternoon and evening for the benefit of the coming Thanksgiving dinner for the children of the Children's Home. The attendance was satisfactory, and the profits amounted to $22.16. All had a pleasant time, but no one was made more happy than the kind-hearted maidens whose charity reached so practical a result.

Burglars in Union County.

Thieves broke into the grocery store of Horace Looker, at Lyons Farms, near Elizabeth, early Saturday morning, and stole a gold watch worth $75 and $121 in money. The burglars in their haste to get away left behind them an overcoat and a razor, which prove to be articles stolen from the hotel at Millville which was robbed last Wednesday night. The burglars are evidently part of the same gang that have been operating lately in different parts of Union county.

Fell Downstairs 60 Death.

Mrs. Johanna Clifford, age 51, fell while ascending the stairs at her home at 200 West Third street, Sunday evening, and when picked up was dead. Heart disease caused her to rest and fall.

Mrs. Ryan Is Suited.

Mrs. Edward Ryan, of Brook avenue, North Plainfield, won the parlor suit at St. Mary's fair last night.

WHAT THE PEOPLE SAY.

TOPICS THE READERS OF "THE NEWS" FIND TO WRITE ABOUT.

The Rum-Traffic in Plainfield. The Prohibition Party "Conscience" Voters.—Woman and Her Sphere.—Facts About the Taxes.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Is the rum-traffic a benefit to good society, good morals, and a help to build up the churches in our town in religious life? If not, why should it be tolerated? Here we have some fourteen or fifteen regularly organized churches, The Young Men's Christian Association, the Sons of Temperance, the Reform Club, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Women's Temperance Aid Society, the Mission School, a score of Sunday or Sabbath schools, and other moral and religious organizations; and yet we average a dram-shop to every church. Is not this astonishing? Has godliness lost its power? Are we all "scribes and Pharisees" and "for a pretence make long prayers"? Are we attempting to "serve two masters"? For many years the saloons have held power over our beautiful city. Scores of men and women and boys have been led to drunkards' graves thereby. Churches have been robbed of their membership; and the business steadily and increasingly goes on. Has the church lost its power to overcome sin? and lost its hold on God? Are we yielding our selves servants to other than the true God? "Ye shall have no other gods before me", saith the decalogue; but to whom are we bowing and whom are we serving? "By their fruits ye shall know them." And what are the fruits manifest in our city? Drunkenness and crime walk abroad in our city of noonday. Who by their vote are sustaining it, and making it possible for the saloons to obtain their license? Are we to "continue in sin that grace may abound"? "God forbid"! Shall we nominate men for office whom we know will vote for the saloon as in the past, and then, after they are elected, for a pretence get up a great indignation meeting against the saloon and the license system? "Consistency is a jewel." But every attempt to lock the barn after you have opened the door and the horse is stolen shows weakness somewhere. Are the people to show the same weakness in our coming charter election? Ministers of our churches, and teachers of other religious institutions, is it not time, and high time, to sound the alarm of danger before the seal is set for the days to come for the destruction of the souls of men? Are we as churches and people like the churches of the Laodiceans, Philadelphians and other places of which John in Revelations spoke? "I know thy works, thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew you out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, 'I am rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing'; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked" notwithstanding the thousands of dollars you receive from high licenses! "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not" (temperance people) "but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet", etc. "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis" (Plainfield) "which have not defiled their garments: and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy". He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

Shall the woe of strong drink continue in our city? Say, ye children of men, by choosing whom ye will serve. What shall we say and what shall we do about it?

TEMPERANCE.

Women in Politics.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I saw in a recent issue of your paper that a woman would like to have room for the gentler sex in the political parade (or words to that effect) don't approve of women making themselves so conspicuous I would like to enter a remonstrance against all these women, 'and would remind her whose enthusiasm led her to spend election day at the polls that the scriptures offer no argument in her conduct. I refer especially to I Timothy II: 9-13; and I Corinthians XIV: 34-35. The passages are the se:

(From Timothy.)

9. In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array;

10. But (which becometh women professing godliness with good works.)

11. Let the women learn in silence with subjection.

12. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

13. For Adam was first formed, then Eve.

(From Corinthians.)

34. Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law.

35. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.

A PLAINFIELD WOMAN.

That Increased Tax-Rate.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—My annual tax bills have arrived and have brought with them a surprise in the shape of an increased tax all along the line of items, the total increase being from $41.02 in 1887 to $57.12 for this year—on exactly the same property. The items increased are for North Plainfield Township; everything except poor tax and special school tax. The whole increase in the Township tax is from $36.19 in 1887 to $43.32 in 1888; and for the Borough from $4.83 to $13.80. I notice two new items in the Borough tax: Fire Department and Board of Health.

The percentage is increased from 21 cents per $100 to 60 cents, an outrageous increase, in spite of the new buildings put up this year. What does it mean?

M.

North Plainfield, Nov. 18th, 1888.

[From facts furnished by Assessor Isaac Brokaw and Collector H. Newton Spencer it is learned that this year the increase in road taxes is $1,300; on street lights, $3,000; on bonded indebtedness, $4,000; with taxes for the Board of Health, $600, and for the Fire Department, $700. Besides, the taxes on $63,500 worth of property in the Borough, owned by men doing business in Plainfield, now go to the city, owing to a new law. In Plainfield the tax-rate is increased from $1.80 to $2.40 per $100, though the city is credited with having $400,000 more taxable property. The Somerset county tax is greatly increased on account of washouts at bridges, on account of the $5,000 improvement at the jail, and on account of the $5,000 Nolan-Race murder trial (a cost to be doubled by second trial).

The Plainfield tax in North Plainfield was formerly 30 to 30 per cent., but was always paid to a separate concern and strictly was not a North Plainfield tax.—ED.]

The Third Party "Conscience" Voters.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Now that the election is over, and the result having been put into columns of figures, we can discern the work of the Third party "conscience" voter. And what a showing, and what a result! The Republican party placed on the State books of this State, through its representatives in the Legislature, a Local Option or some exceedingly wise temperance legislation, approved by true temperance men of every party. But the few thousand Third party "conscience" voters joined hands with the saloon and now have aided in getting a class of saloon-members into the Legislature. This is the work of the pure temperance "conscience" voter, whose sole aim seems to be the defeating of every move for practical temperance, and putting the rum power in charge of State legislation. If ever a political organization did its work for the devil well, this "conscience" party led by Clinton B. Fisk is doing it. I charge him and his followers with joining hands with the very worst element of our voting population, gamblers, saloon-keepers, rum-sellers, bummers and the like, simply because they cannot bear to have passed by the Republican temperance men such restrictive laws as are backed by popular will and sound common-sense. These "conscience" voters stand in the same relation to the temperance cause that the man and dog, who lies under the fence and takes the chickens after they have been stolen by the petty chicken-thief does to his accomplice. They know that they are just as guilty of perpetuating the rum power as the Democratic party is. And yet these Republicans, and Democrats and look arms with them, as they go hand in hand, and vote a ballot of "conscience", assisting their friends the Democrats to place the giddy saloon on thousands of streets in every city in the entire length of the land. I repeat; the devil has no better friends on earth than Gen. Fisk and the men who are blindly following in his shadow—the Party of Prohibition. And yet, I predict, out of the evil work of this Third party of "conscience" voters will come some good to the cause of true temperance.

A BELIEVER IN PROHIBITION.

THE NEW M. E. PASTOR.

His Discourses to Furnish Much Pleasurable Profit.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—The Rev. Charles B. Mitchell—who began his pulpit ministrations at the Plainfield Methodist Episcopal church Sunday—comes to our city from Pittsburg, Pa., where he has been preaching two years past. His ministry for seven years before his last appointment was in Kansas, in which State he held several important charges. His appearance and voice are those of the entire opposite to those of the typical man in the minds of many Eastern people, which, in turn, is very different from the Kansas preacher in reality: for in that State, which we sometimes regard as a frontier region, we find as cultured and refined clergymen as anywhere in the East.

Mr. Mitchell is just a little under the average height, with a compact frame, a fine-looking head, dark hair and eyes—the latter seen through spectacles. Apparently, he is between thirty and thirty-five years of age. His voice is clear and musical and remarkably well-controlled. Most of his discourse is in a quiet tone, and only in two or three paragraphs does it rise above the conversational in loudness. Yet his utterance is impressive, and every sentence reaches the ear. Several tones were listened to with that particular stillness throughout the congregation which, always indicates the deepest interest.

In the introduction of his first sermon he allowed his manuscript closely, but after a few minutes he laid it aside, and, with arms akimbo, leaning slightly forward, but finished and well-arranged sentences throughout his discourse. His outline was clear and plain, the four points being so distinctly presented that even the youngest could understand them. His illustrations were forcible and brief, and hinted at rather than described; but were so drawn in a few sentences as to suggest the picture and its application to every listener.

Mr. Mitchell is an earnest direct preacher; he does not seem so much to be talking to a congregation as speaking to people. The aim of his discourse was constantly manifest, to reach men, to convince and to win them. "Without any parable of learning, both his discourses showed a familiarity with scientific knowledge. He did not preach science, nor preach against scientists; but quoted directly from the writings of scientific authorities, and used facts from the scientific world to illustrate spiritual truth.

Each of his discourses was symmetrical in form, was balanced in proportion under each division, having its beginning, its middle and its end; and each section was completed and brought up to the main theme. He spoke forty minutes. People will listen to a lecture for an hour and a half on political speech during a campaign for two hours; but to this age the sermon of Sunday morning, and especially the Sunday evening, must be less than three-quarters of an hour long.

We venture the prediction that the ministry of the Rev. Mr. Mitchell will be a success in our city; that his congregation will be large; and that his people will listen to his discourses with enjoyment and profit.

HE WILL STAY AT HOME.

Gen. Harrison Abandons His New York Trip.

THE ANXIOUS MUST SEEK HIM.

Mr. Morton and Others Going to Indianapolis—The Latest Rumors and Predictions—New Candidates Mentioned—Gov. Cullom Will Visit Virginia.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—President-elect Harrison has decided not to come to New York, and consequently the interested parties are going to Indianapolis. Vice President-elect Levi P. Morton will leave the city probably within a fortnight. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Morton, and possibly ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt, Cassius M. Depew, Warner Miller and Senator Frank Hiscock will also be of the party. Mr. and Mrs. Morton during their recent trip to Europe duly invited to Indianapolis by General and Mrs. Harrison, but his business and political engagements have heretofore prevented their accepting.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The Star says: The current gossip Mr. Dingley is being spoken of with growing frequency for secretary of the navy. The prospects still are the state department open to Senator Sherman, and it is pretty generally accepted as among the many things that Mr. John Wanamaker will be postmaster general. If Sherman goes into the cabinet it is said to be likely that Mr. McKinley would take the senatorship. It would be between Mr. McKinley and Foster, with the chances in favor of the former. Under this arrangement Mr. Dingley, it is said, Mr. Burkett would be speaker of the house. The opinion is very often expressed that the speakership will go to either Butterworth or Cannon, of Illinois. How much doubt expressed as to whether Mr. McKinley would want the speakership, even if the senate should not be open to him.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 20.—Among the callers on President-elect Harrison were, J. S. Clarkson and Col. Swords, of Iowa. Mr. Clarkson stated that he was here to talk over with the general the work of the national committee, and to make a report of their doings in general.

A significant proposition comes from Kansas. The Republicans of that state are once more that Senator Plumb should be made secretary of the interior. A dispatch sent by J. K. Hudson, editor of The Topeka Capital, will probably be here this week to urge the president-elect to give some consideration to the claim of their claims.

GOFF CLAIMS TO BE ELECTED.

Returns Indicate that West Virginia is Republican by a Narrow Majority.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 20.—The Republican claim of election of Gen. Goff to the governorship was apparently justified when Wyoming and McDowell counties sent in their returns. Wyoming gave seventy-five majority for Goff and Methowski 174, a Republican gain of 268 in the two counties. The official returns are slowly coming from the state, and Gen. Goff's majority will be about 2.0. The Democrats are alleging gross frauds in the two counties named, and the matter is sure to be carried to the courts.

The following telegram received by the editor of The Intelligencer explains itself, and is one of the few we know Gen. Goff ever great weight with it:

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Nov. 19.

Hallowell county gives two Republican to Bess. John County telegraphs from Braxtonhall that by majority in Wyoming is 152. Official returns from these two have carried the state, and I shall use all proper means before all suitable officials to secure the will of the people as expressed at the polls and to protect their interests and rights. N. GOFF.

Though the Democratic committee still claims the election, Gen. Fleming, Goff's competitor, admits it is not so.

THE HONOR IS ACCEPTED.

Philadelphia's Union League Secures Two Notable Democratic Members.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 20.—The following letters received by Secretary Huey and Vice President Houston, of the Union League, explain themselves:

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 16, 1888.

Samuel H. Huey, Esq., Secretary, Philadelphia:

My Dear Sir—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of Nov. 13, advising me that the directors of the Union League, of Philadelphia, have unanimously elected me an honorary member of that club. Will you please convey to the board of directors my grateful acknowledgments for the honor conferred upon me? It is a compliance to accept this relation to an institution so distinguished in its membership and in the work as the Union League of Philadelphia.

Very truly yours,

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19, 1888.

Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, President Union League, Philadelphia:

My Dear Sir—At a meeting held on the 17th inst. the board of directors of the Union League of Philadelphia have paid me the honor to elect me to membership in that association, and I write to say that you will assure them that I am duly grateful. I have in according him the honor to which I refer, but I shall be pleased to make the personal acquaintance of many of your members on Saturday evening, and remain, Yours very truly, GROVER CLEVELAND.

Epidemic in an Orphan School.

TRENTON, Nov. 20.—Later reports from Flora Vista orphans school at McAllister, Hunterdon county, confirm the rumor that a severe type of typhoid fever among the pupils of that school. It is known that a number of cases exist, estimated at from thirty-five to forty. It was stated that there had not occurred a death. Friday last and that the school was under quarantine restrictions. Mrs. Myra Attack, inspector of orphan schools, visited McAllisterville a few days ago and made a report of her investigation to the state department. Nurses were sent from the school at Glenwer, and it is thought a speedy recovery will be effected.

A Wife's Terrible Revenge.

ERIE, Pa., Nov. 20. — While Patrick Durkins, a longshoreman of the Pennsylvania railroad, sat at the supper table his wife threw a pail of hot lard in his face, burning both his eyes, disfiguring his face and neck and injuring him so much that he will probably die. His wife fled from the house after committing the deed and left her husband to suffer alone with his mother. When Durkins heard her coming, although he was blind and screaming with pain, he attacked and nearly killed her, in fact it is supposed he did. The wife alleges ill treatment and Durkins' threat to put another woman in her place. She was jailed and Durkins sent to the hospital.

An Elephant Neatly Caught.

VAN COUVER, B. C., Nov. 20.—Conductor Barnhardt, in charge of the Atlantic express which left Vancouver Thursday, having received a telegram at Spences's Bridge that P. Jackson, alias F. Sinnott, alias F. Scott, of Los Angeles, wanted for embezzling $15,000 from the Northern Pacific express, was preparing to escape on his train, he found him in the act of doing so. Barnhardt pointed a pistol over him and ordered him to have no resistance. When Moore was searched in his room he had $12,118, all in a small bag.

TALK ABOUT PROHIBITION.

Prominent Politicians Argue to Prove That It is a Failure.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—Hon. Warner Miller presided at the meeting of the Church Temperance society in Steinway hall, and delivered an address showing how well high license worked in Colorado, Nebraska and wherever it had been tried, and how useless it was to advocate prohibition, when the vote at the last election showed that in the two cities of every hundred citizens are Prohibitionists.

Bishop Coleman, of Delaware, spoke of the work of the society, and Rev. D. A. Greer, of this city, Bishop of Providence, and other Rhode Island prohibitionists was a failure, as shown by the fact that there was an increase of 50 per cent in the liquor traffic of Providence since the law was passed, while the number of arrests had fallen off owing to the refusal of juries to listen to the testimony of the officers obtained under the "spotters."

Hon. Seth Low told how, as mayor of Brooklyn, he had tried to enforce the saloon law impartially, and succeeded in making prominent citizens, the saloonists and the Prohibitionists. He favored local option and high license.

Chauncey M. Depew sent a letter of regret. Rev. R. S. Huntington was elected chairman of the society, Rev. E. Osborn, of Boston, vice chairman, and Robert Graham general secretary.

CHURCH CONGRESS.

Forecast of Important Deliberations Begun at Buffalo Today—Some of the Subjects Which Will be Discussed.

BUFFALO, Nov. 31.—The congress of the Episcopal church of America began its deliberations here today. Rt. Rev. A. Cleveland Coxe, bishop of New York presiding. Among those present and expected are Bishop Whipple, of Dakota; Andrew D. White, ex-president of Cornell university; President Potter, of Hobart college; Rt. Rev. Dr. Nichols and Dr. Nicholas, of Philadelphia; Professor William Clark, of Trinity college; Bishop Leigh Miller Thompson, of Mississippi, and hosts of others equally well known.

REV. BISHOP COXE.

The Episcopal Church congress is not a very old institution. The first congress of the Church of England was held in November, 1861, in Kings' college, Cambridge. That last the Episcopalians got a stand sponsor to this new born power, the next meeting was held in Oxford, in 1862, and was presided over by Bishop Wilberforce himself.

A small conference of clergy and laity held in Trinity church, New Haven, fifteen years ago, was the origin of the church congress in America. The idea assumed permanent shape and title at a meeting called a little later in Christ church parish, New York city.

The church congress has no official status; binds no one, controls no one. The discussions are merely facts and ideas to be carefully considered, and the writers and speakers to whom they are assigned are also carefully chosen. In such a cultured body brutal methods are already at a discount.

A number of important questions are coming up for discussion during this session. Three of them are especially interesting: "The Question of Divorce," "Where is the Limits of Discussion in the Church," and "What Principles Should Govern Church Extension in Our Country in Fields Already Occupied by Others."

On the question of race there will be those who will urge that on account of prejudice it is best that the colored people should organize churches by themselves. Among those who will speak on this subject is Rev. Dr. Lindsay, of Washington, D. C., a negro graduate of one of the best universities, and a man of culture.

The topic, "The Limits of Discussion in the Church," will be considered from two sides: first, that the doors ought to be thrown wide open to all discussion, no matter how startling the doctrine proposed; second, that there are limits in the church as to how much latitude of the merits of a theory or doctrine, and by adopting a harmful belief they may be injured.

It is expected that the congress will be about evenly divided on the question of extending the Episcopal church in fields already occupied by other denominations. The subject, which will be considered on Friday afternoon, is expected to bring out more warm discussion than any of the others.

THE SITUATION AT JACKSONVILLE.

New Cases and Deaths—Negroes Demand Work or Rations.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 20.—Eight new cases of yellow fever are reported and four deaths—W. A. Haney, Edward B. Derry, George N. Woods and John Butler. The two latter were colored.

The number of new cases only one was white—Mrs. L. Stone.

The force of men all negroes engaged in street cleaning, 300 in all, began their work, has been reduced from 1,400 to 400. The 1,000 thrown out of work congregated on the street corners and loudly demanded work or rations.

Finally a meeting was held, and Dr. J. C. L'Engle, P. McMurray and Walter Wetmore selected, to wait on Gen. Sickles, the mayor. They were promised relief where actual need exists. No further trouble is anticipated.

The question of force was necessary owing to a lack of funds.

Destitution at Gainesville.

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Nov. 20.—There were five new cases of yellow fever, one white and four colored. Two deaths—a negro. Great destitution prevails and business is entirely suspended.

Flouring Mills Shut Down.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 20.—Five of the Minneapolis flouring mills, representing 7,000 barrels daily capacity, or 25 per cent. of the city's daily capacity, are now shut down. To this number there will be several additions next week. When navigation closes and another ice begins to get troublesome in the river there will be a general curtailing of flour production. The reasons for this are the high price of wheat and the dullness of the flour market. Most of the big millers have large quantities of flour in stock, ready to take advantage of an improvement in the trade. It is estimated, however, that stocks will not be larger than normal by January 1.

A Brutal Murder Revenged.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20.—The Picayune's Yazoo City (Miss.) special says: "When Johnson was murdered by Dunbar and Arnold a week ago saying he had killed Capt. Robert Johnson at Sartoria in self defense, was released from jail by Johnson's friends and probably been lynched. Investigation showed that Arnold had needlessly taken offense at Johnson, who was heavily armed, and had deliberately killed him down in cold blood, shooting while down, and then crushed his head with the pistol."

THE TORIES ASTOUNDED.

Sensation in Parliament Over Mr. Madden's Bill.

GLADSTONE'S STRONG SPEECH.

Urgent Whips Issued by All Parties for the Debate, Which Will be Lively—Liberals Delighted—An Admission of the Rights of Irish Tenants.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—In the house of commons Mr. D. H. Madden, solicitor general for Ireland, brought forward a bill making £5,000,000 to the amount applicable under the Ashbourne act. In introducing the measure he said the government thought that the great success of the Ashbourne act justified them in seeking to enlarge its operations.

Mr. Gladstone moved an amendment that in lieu of voting £5,000,000 it would be expedient in view of the sufferings arising from the evictions which had recently taken place to extend the land law acts to empower the courts to reduce or cancel such arrears of rent as might be found excessive. He said if that the amendment did not strike at the Ashbourne act. He did not desire to stop its operations. He objected to the bill because he believed the government ought to have asked instead for a limited grant to enable it to continue the operations of the Ashbourne act until spring, when parliament could reconsider the whole matter. Instead of doing that the government had introduced a bill involving far more than a fresh approval of the land purchase policy.

Mr. Balfour, continuing, said it was the manifest desire of the government to withdraw the land question from parliamentary party politics, but that could not be allowed. He did not desire that the landlords should be removed in the body. He wanted to see them resident and not absentees. Under the Ashbourne act £5,000,000 had been obtained apparently as a precedent for getting the other £5,000,000, thus slowly dismantling the house into a system of peasant proprietorship. Landlords, without proper guarantees, He objected to the act as giving the landlords the initiative of purchase instead of the peasants.

But the governm nt, he asked, refuse to deal with arrears because arrears were in the nature of the tenant. This line of action would enable many to increase rents, while it would enable only a handful of tenants to acquire holdings. Doubtless the Irish tenants would be encouraged in resisting fair rents, but if another collapse in agricultural prices occurred the farmers ing it be unable to pay even installments the government, he declared, was not justified in relying upon good will to pay after the declaration of Lord Salisbury that the majority of the people of Ireland were perfectly willing to pay the demand to the minority. Ireland did not respect the pockets of their countrymen, would they respect the English contingent?

Mr. Goschen denied that the government was justified to introduce measures involving protracted controversy during the session. He quoted Mr. Gladstone's statement that if the government had asked for just enough to keep the Ashbourne act in operation the opposition would not have objected. He agreed to was not correct. Inquiries seen made into the matter, and the impression was that not encourage the government in making the bill the first step in the operation of land purchase was not incompatible with dealing also with arrears. The government would not be content to confine the operation of the ex-premier that the government was practically conspiring to allow the arrears to continue and to encourage evil practices was scarcely worth answering. All of the parliamentary parties have issued urgent whips summoning their adherents to be present during the debate on the bill, which promises to be a fight to the finish under the operation of the Ashbourne act, which the Irish solicitor general intends to act upon the very day after the bill becomes law.

The Times has pounded the Tories and highly delighted the Liberals, since it can be contrasted only into an admission that the liberals took a majority of the Irishmen's grievances and a majority of the landlords. This point has all along been considered by the liberals, but no Tory official has ever admitted it. [All the while,] Mr. Gladstone was in the video and time, and made a strong speech in support of his amendment to the bill.

The Church Review, a journal of immense circulation and influence, and unflinchingly advocating Unionist principles, has been converted to Home Rule.

The Two Emperors Meet.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The royal yacht, bearing the Emperor and Empress of Germany and the Prince of Wales, reached Port Victoria on the morning. Queen Victoria and her daughters, Princess Louise and Beatrice, accompanied by Count Von Moltke and Count Herbert Bismarck, went to the port to meet them. There was but a small crowd at the station to greet the queen, only those who were entitled to receive cards of admission being allowed to be present. The empress looked as well as she was received by the queen, who embraced and kissed her several times. Thousands of persons lined the route from Victoria to Paddington, where the emperor and empress were received by the prince of Wales, and the royal party then entered the waiting train. Cruel Evictions in Ireland.

DUBLIN, Nov. 20.—In the evictions from the estate of Hon. R. T. O'Neill, Conservative member of parliament for Middle Antrim, at Ballymena, County Antrim, yesterday, an old woman, a verdicken woman 102 years of age was taken from her bed and carried to a house some distance away. A fever case was prevailing at the time, and the woman was chilled to the marrow upon reaching her new quarters. Another woman became delirious from the shock of eviction, while her four children, one a baby only 3 months old. Her furniture was carried to the roadside, where it was thrown in the mud by the gaine and most of it destroyed. Fifty policemen were present to protect the evictors and arrest anyone making violent resistance.

Charged by the Police.

DUBLIN, Nov. 20.—Ten thousand persons attempted to hold a meeting at Rearcross, County Tipperary, in defiance of the government's proclamation prohibiting it. The police charged upon the crowd and dispersed it. Many persons were injured in the melee. The attempt to hold the meeting, however, was partly successful, and several speeches were made before and after the charge of the police.

Forced to London to Testify.

DUBLIN, Nov. 20.—Mullet and McCaffrey, the invincibles, were escorted by officers to London to give testimony before the Parnell commission. At Kingstown Friday night railway station McCaffrey shouted: "God save Ireland. We want the people to know that we are coerced, and are against our will."

An Accused Suicide.

ROME, Nov. 20.—A boiling mill, aged 30 years ago at Sicily, was found yesterday, with his throat cut. He was killed at his own request, it is said. At the time of the railroad murder of Signor Notarbartolo, Palizzi's friend, he was implicated.

IRISHMEN CELEBRATE.

Notable Gathering in New York—Many Telegrams of Regret.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—The Irish-American protectionists celebrated at Cooper Union the Republican victory, Patrick Ford presiding, and ex-Governor Alger, of Michigan; Patrick Egan, Edward O'Meagher Condon, David Bray and others taking part in the jubilations. Mr. J. G. Blaine telegraphed from Augusta: "I would gladly be present at your meeting if it were possible. The Irish-American protectionists are a very potential element in securing the election of Harrison and Morton, and have a right to rejoice that the policy which they favored has been so triumphantly vindicated and maintained."

Gen. Harrison telegraphed: "Please return to my friends, the Irish-American protectionists, now assembled in Cooper institute, my sincere thanks for their cordial congratulations and much more for their valuable co-operation in the victory which they contributed so to-night."

Telegrams were also received from Governor Luce, of Michigan; Governor Rusk, of Wisconsin; Congressmen Guenther, of Wisconsin; Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts; Congressman Kelly, of Philadelphia; Governor Foraker, of Ohio; Senator Riddleberger, of Virginia, and others.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Proceedings Yesterday — Powderly Scores the Villifiers — Barry Produces Another Batch of Charges.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 20.—There is some probability that the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor will finish its work this week, but no assurance can be given which will keep the delegates over until next week. At the morning session the committees on appeals and grievances continued its report.

General Master Workman Powderly created a sensation by taking the floor and reading a bitter attack in a Chicago paper called The Knights of Labor against the general officers, and saying that the present convention had been packed in the interest of Powderly. Mr. Powderly made a ringing speech, in which he denied the charges, and which would be presented at the proper time, which provided for the expulsion, without appeal, of any member of the villified brother in the public press, which if the charges were true or false.

W. F. Lewis, of the miners, agreed with Mr. Powderly, and wanted to know who was responsible for the publication of the charge in The Journal of United Labor that Chairman H. Litchman had stolen the mailing lists of the general assembly and given them to the Republican national committee. Powderly said no knew nothing of these charges until he had read them in the Journal of United Labor. Mr. Litchman defied anybody to truthfully accuse him of wrongdoing.

T. B. Barry has issued another installment of his charges, and Richmond the delegates were spied upon, and says that "the same system of spying prevails at this session. The spies have been found eavesdropping at the room doors and in the corridors of the hotels, and dogging the footsteps of delegates who had the honor and manhood to assert their rights as Knights of Labor. Robert R. Elliott, of Bridge, Ont., a member of the committee on appeals and grievances, was, on Nov. 17, engaged in the publication and Knights' interests, and was set upon by groups of delegates at the Occidental hotel."

Other cases of spying are given. Barry has received a number of letters approving his action. One is from Peter E. Moore, inspector workman of District Assembly No. 1, of Philadelphia. He says that if Powderly is re-elected the order is doomed. It will go to pieces. He gives a list of thirteen non-union persons employed in the general office and of twelve Knights of Labor who have been discharged.

ALBANY'S NEW CATHEDRAL.

The Beginning of Dedication Ceremonies Which Will Last Five Days.

ALBANY, Nov. 20.—To-day the dedication ceremonies of Albany's great cathedral begins, to last until the 25th. The intention was for the ceremonies to be on All Souls day, but the delay in finishing led to postponement. Ten bishops and about 100 clergymen, chiefly from other sections of this state, take part in the various ceremonies, and nothing will be wanting to properly signalize the occasion. The services of the day will be a cathedral began at a conference of prominent Episcopalians on All Souls day in 1873; exactly fifteen years afterward incorporated the association of the Cathedral of All Saints. $ [illegible] was raised, and in 1883 Ernstus Corning gave the association the plot of ground on which the cathedral has since been erected. The plan of Architect R. W. Gibson was adopted, and on Wednesday, June 5, 1884, the corner stone was laid. Since then the contributions amounted to nearly $ [illegible], exclusive of the site. A special subscription was then made to have the twenty-two columns in the nave memorials, the gift of each of some eminent churchman. The plan of the cathedral is early gothic, massive, with transepts, side aisles, and a nine ground tower and spire 300 feet high. But so far as has been so modified that none of an ecclesiastic organization of 1,840 people will have to sit behind the pillars. The auditorium is 55 feet long and 100 feet wide across the transepts. The west front measures 100 feet. There are two towers with spires 240 feet high, and a magnificent circular window. Below are three portals, and here the carving is of wonderful richness. There are statues. There are statues of the apostles and saints, and bas reliefs on scripture subjects. The interior decorations are still more impressive. The stone is near that of the noted old iron foundry which was used for many years as a place of worship.

Violated the Contract Labor Law.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—United States District Attorney Walker has begun an action in the name of the United States against Edward Gunther, a furniture manufacturer of this city and Cook's Falls, Delaware county, for violating the contract labor law. The signer named Victor Hegeman from Maisgeburg, Prussia, under contract. Hegeman came to this country on Aug. 18 under an agreement to work at Gunther's factory at Cook's falls for $9 per week and board. He became dissatisfied with his treatment, and County Tipperary, in charge of the government's prosecution prohibiting it. The police charged upon the crowd and dispersed it. Many persons were injured in the melee. The attempt to hold the meeting, however, was partly successful, and several speeches were made before and after the charge of the police.

ABOUT UNCLE SAM'S ARMY

Interesting Points in Gen. Schofield's Report.

COAST AND FRONTIER DEFENSES.

Soldiers Becoming Proficient in the Use of Heavy Guns—Remarks and Suggestions—Adjt. Gen. Drum's Report—Evils and Causes of Desertion.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—Maj. Gen. Schofield in his annual report says the past year has been one of peace among the Indians, formerly so troublesome in the division of the Pacific, and that in the division of the Missouri, with the single exception of the suppression of disorder among the Crow Indians, the use of troops has been limited to the prevention and punishment of trouble with Indian tribes. The system of practice of the artillery with heavy sea coast guns has been steadily developed and is now adopted for the artillerists coast defenses. He believes the troops will be fully prepared to handle, effectively, the weapons of modern construction and of the largest caliber as soon as such weapons can be made ready to be placed in their hands.

A moderate increase in the numerical strength of the force to handle the new guns will be indispensable.

Referring to fortifications, the general says the time and circumstances now seem peculiarly favorable to put the sea coasts and frontiers of the country in a state of security becoming the dignity of a great and proud, though just and peaceful nation. Referring to the great number of the sufficiency of the army through absence of officers from their regiments or corps. He thinks that the service would be greatly benefited if the number of officers could be relieved and their places filled by young and active men. If the retired list is temporarily increased for this purpose, after years of service the great number of veterans who were disabled in the late war will have passed away, and the list which now seems large will be found comparatively small in numbers. The reduction in pay of officers on leave is, he thinks no longer necessary and results in relative favoritism to the few officers who have other means of support besides their pay.

There were 2,436 desertions from the army during the past year, and the average desertions for each of the last five years was 53.3 per cent. of the entire enlisted strength, or 51.5 per cent. during the whole period. Gen. Schofield recommends that the pay of soldiers after arrest of a deserter be increased to $100, to be taken out of his retained pay; and that it be made practicable in time of peace for an enlisted man to discharge his contract of enlistment in a manner honorable to himself and just to the government by obtaining a discharge with a forfeiture of so much of his retained pay as may be necessary to reimburse the United States for expenses.

Adjt. Gen. Drum, in his annual report to Maj. Gen. Schofield, calls attention to the evil of desertion, which, he says, results principally from dissatisfaction with army life and its restraints; restlessness with restraint, and the desire to visit new scenes; failure to secure transportation to distant and supposed favorable points in the west. Desertion, he says, can never be eradicated, but may be greatly reduced by the adoption of remedial measures, such as the reduction of the term of service from five to three years and the right to purchase discharge. During the year there were 24,710 applicants for enlistment, 18,017 of whom were rejected. The adjutant general says that notwithstanding the efforts of recruiting officers, and the liberal appropriation would warrant, to secure the necessary recruits to fill the army, it is said more than 1,8 [illegible] by the authorized strength. The causes for the insufficiency of recruits are greatly reduced.

THE K. OF L. CAN BE TOLERATED.

Decision of the Sacred Congregation at Rome—Cardinal Simeoni's Reply.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—A Rome correspondent [illegible] says: Recently correspondence [illegible] sent by Cardinal Simeoni, prefect of the propaganda, to the cardinal archbishops [illegible] Baltimore, Cincinnati, New York, Philadelphia, St. Paul and Boston, asking their opinion as to the Knights of Labor. The answers of the archbishops are greatly reduced.

"It is my duty to inform your eminence that the fresh documents relative to the association known as the Knights of Labor, forwarded to this Sacred Congregation, were examined by it at the sitting of 16th of August of the current year. After having attentively studied the whole subject the Sacred Congregation has directed me to say that, so far as at present appears, the association of the Knights of Labor can for the moment be tolerated. The Sacred Congregation merely requires that the necessary modifications should be introduced in the rules of the society, to make clear what is or might seem obscure or might be interpreted in a bad sense.

"These modifications are required particularly in passages of the preface to the rules concerning local associations. And then the principles of socialism and communism must be corrected in such a way that they shall only affirm the right, conferred by God and nature, to acquire property, and to legitimate means and respecting the proportionate rights of all others. I am most happy to be able to inform your holiness that the Sacred Congregation has highly approved of the design of the American hierarchy to see with its zeal to this and similar associations nothing should be secretly introduced which is contrary to justice. In the future, also, it will entirely conformable to the regulations regarding the Masonic sect. Whilst confirming your eminence's exercise of zealous in the matter of the Sacred Congregation, I beg you to accept the assurance of our respectful and devoted sentiments."

The Ocean Eastern Record Broken.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The Cunarder Umbria, which arrived at Queenstown Sunday evening, made the fastest eastward run on record. Her corrected time was six days, two hours and fifty-five minutes. Her best previous record was six days, seven hours and fifteen minutes. The best westward run of the Etruria is six days, four hours and forty minutes, made in April last. The Umbria's time from the record by one hour and forty-five minutes.

Sackville's Sale.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—At the sale of Lord Sackville's household effects the furniture brought low prices. The buyers were mostly those who wanted the articles as curiosities and souvenirs. There was no appeal in the sale. A ramstorm prevented a large attendance. Neither his lordship nor Lady Sackville were present. It is reported that Lord Sackville will go to New York within a day or two, and sail on Saturday for England.

Bad for the Miners.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 20.—Forty coal operators and shippers met in the office of the Pittsburg Coal company this morning and formed a combination for an indefinite period, beginning Dec. 1. This action is caused by the heavy stocks of coal now above the river pools. From 1,000 to 3,000 miners will be laid off.

LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM.

Mr. and Mrs. Billiger McEwat's Wedding Journey.

The sun never shone upon a lovelier morning than that which ushered in the wedding day of Billiger McEwat and Lobelia Grubb. Far away in the dreamy distance stretched a landscape that seemed to tremble and vibrate in the mellow haze of the golden October day as if the unseen spirits that inhabit the air were beating it with fairy wings in the irresponsible exuberance of overflowing life and joy.

[Copyright. All rights reserved.]

Billiger and Lobelia McEwat had just started on their wedding journey.

Animated by the sincere and laudable purpose of affording no indication in their manner, apparel or behavior that they were taking such a trip, Billiger wore a suit of new black broadcloth, with a lavender wedding, and Lobelia was attired in a silk dress of a delicate lilac tint, with no conspicuous ornaments except a large solitaire ring on one of the fingers of her left hand and a few orange blossoms modestly and becomingly arranged in her Parisian traveling hat. They sat on the luxurious cushion of a palace car, Billiger's arm resting carelessly on the back of the seat occupied by his lovely bride, and Lobelia leaning toward Billiger in the easy, lovely, confiding manner of a mother in law reposing with her aged companion to an Old Settlers' meeting, or the secretary of a Young Ladies' Society for the Dissemination of Useful Knowledge accompanying an elder brother on a shopping expedition.

"Billiger," faltered the bride, turning her beautiful eyes trustingly to his, "nobody would suspect that we are—that we have just been—that we are on our—do you think?"

"Certainly not, Lobelia," affirmed Billiger, with great positiveness, as he smiled fondly and reassuringly upon her.

"They think we are brother and sister, Billiger, or at least that we are old married."

"Chestnuts!" exclaimed a voice.

The young landlord turned fiercely around to see who had spoken.

It was the train boy, an innocent lad of 17 summers, on whose face was a look of such childlike simplicity that Billiger's hasty suspicions were at once allayed.

"Lobelia, my love," he said, tenderly, "would you like some chestnuts?"

"If you like, dear," she replied, trustingly.

Billiger put his hand into his pocket.

Then he put his other hand into his other pocket, and his face turned an ashen grey.

"Lobelia!" he said, hoarsely. "I—I have left my pocketbook, with money and tickets, in my other pa—in my other trousers! Have you any money with you? Quick! Here comes the conductor!"

"I think I have, Billiger," said Lobelia.

She put her hand in her pocket and turned pale.

"Billiger," she exclaimed piteously, "I have left my pocketbook in my other dress!"

The station at which the train stopped was only seven miles from home. Billiger and Lobelia McEwat got out, the ecstatic bridegroom persuaded a grasping, sordid monopolist who kept a livery stable to accept his gold watch as security for the hire of a carriage and driver, and Mr. and Mrs. McEwat drove home in pensive silence through the balmy autumnal landscape, which the mellowed rays of the golden October sun bathed in a sea of molten glory.

If the story of the first day of Billiger and Lobelia's wedding journey shall serve as a warning to others it will not have been written for the sorrowing historian in vain.—Chicago Tribune.

A Blow to Civilization.

All the lovers of art will mourn over a late decision of the commissioner of internal revenue which is to the effect that the artificial coloring of butter transforms it into oleomargarine. This strikes a blow at the study of esthetics in the home. No longer will the dairymaid sprinkle the oleaginous product of the churn with chrome yellow, cochineal, cinnabar, dragon's blood, orange, orange vermilion, orange chrome, Venetian red, and other pigments, dyes and ochers. Nor will the butter dish present beautiful frescoes, chiaroscuro and distempers. Pale yellows and other grayish grass greeny tints will prevail. Insipid nature, with the crude assistance of the cow and the churn dasher, will be left to work her will. It is all very fearful. Strawberry tints and rainbow glories will no longer appear on buttered raisins and bread at 7 cents a loaf. By the removal of butter from the realms of art, civilization has been hit with a club and anarchy rejoices.—Chicago News.

His Only Redeemable Feature.

"I think I ought to have more than $3 a week," said the office boy, determinedly.

"Why, you little rascal," said the merchant, "what in the world do you mean? You are careless about your work, you never have anything done right, you are always late in the morning, if I want an errand done I have to do it myself—and yet you have the face to ask me for an increased salary!"

"I know," said the office boy, more determinedly than before, "but you forgot one thing. I don't know how to whistle."

And the merchant doubled his wages right away. Some day, if that boy keeps right on not knowing how to whistle, he will get taken into the firm.—Exchange.

How He Came Out Ahead.

"Well, Tompkins, how did you come out at the last race meeting?" asked a traveling man of a friend.

"As nearly as I can figure it I came out about $1,500 ahead."

"Fifteen hundred! That's not bad. What horses did you back?"

"None. I had about $1,500 with me that I did not bet."—Merchant Traveler.

THE LONDON COSTER.

SOME OF THE LIGHTS AND SHADES OF HIS LIFE.

Being Peculiar to England and Most Peculiar to London—Selling Eatables on the Street—Folk Lore and Tradition. Queen of the Costers.

The costermonger is a being peculiar to England and most peculiar to London. He is neither more nor less than a seller of eatables in the streets. Strictly in accordance with his name, he should traffic only in apples, for "costard" is a sort of apple, and "costermonger" a trader, for the Saxon "mangian," to trade. Thus we have ironmonger, cheesemonger, fishmonger, etc., words used here to designate those parents.

THE COSTERMONGER'S VOCATION.

The costermonger sells all sorts and conditions of things—fruits, vegetables, fish, poultry, flowers and "green meat," as watercresses, chicken meat, groundsel and turf are called. There are in London, roughly computed, something like 40,000 street sellers, or hawkers of market produce. These are men, women and children. Of these a large proportion are sellers of fruits, vegetables and flowers. Old Covent Garden market is crowded with them on particular days, frequently as many as 3,000 being assembled at once in the gray morning hours, when the market practically extends clear around into the huge Strand, and the world of newspaper offices and down to Charing Cross railway station. Here the traveler, embarking on an early tram to Paris, may pause to purchase a bottle of fruit or a nosegay from some market wagon, whose proprietor never hesitates to turn the honest English penny.

From 1 o'clock in the morning the market wagons begin to roll ponderously into town from the adjoining rural coast-ends. A later hour has seen others emptying their versilant freight into the market-vans of the early trains into London. And again, even as the supply has been put out into the market on sale, the people to be supplied have gathered their chiefs. For in nothing is that old saw so completely exemplified, namely, "The early bird catches the worm," as in the eagerness with which buyers, high and low, high up their place in order to compass an advantageous barter. There are unwritten laws of "place courtesy" here, as well as elsewhere in the world's hive of human bees. Certain stands, selected by the coster, with his quaint donkey barrow, he acquires a right to retain. This right is never disputed if he is "on time" at his post. But a five minutes' laggard discovers a rival on his vantage ground. The utmost good nature prevails. Chaff is heard, and the coster would not hesitate to taunt the Prince of Wales were he to pay an early market visit. Nor would such banter signify any want of respect to his royal highness. No, the quickness for such banter is that in market per se is the street mart for trader and buyer, and he thus is monarch on his own chosen ground, and will be content to be any respecter of persons there.

A QUEEN OF THE COSTERS.

He has, by the way, certain folk lore and traditions. These are variously poetic. One is that he elects a queen of the costers. A year or two ago the recognized queen died, and as yet no one has been found a worthy successor to her. She was a woman with a romantic history. Very handsome of face and figure in her early youth, in her age still strong and active, with all the vigor and wisdom was Minerva like. She was called the "queen of the costers." In her massive grasp of subjects in general, she might myself rise to the sublime of the absurd. Her advice was sought by all herself elected subjects. Her charities were enormous, comparatively speaking. She died at the age of 70 years, in which long life she had placed in charge of a well known London solicitor, all her mourners were white. It was a sad, sad funeral that day, and provision was made for a bountiful feast after the burying. Two hundred were thus provided for. The few hundreds of pounds she left were devoted, after the outlay mentioned, to dividing up into small sums toward a Christmas dinner to each of the mourners. It was a strange, fantastic funeral. So great was the crowd gathered to look on at Highgate cemetery that the police were kept within call to prevent any possible disorder or row. But no disturbance occurred. Some of her sayings are very quaint. It is said they are being collected into book form by an eccentric enthusiast. The costers, by her wish, attended her funeral on their donkey carts. She was not an ignorant woman and in her character resembled in no Greek opera. Like many another fine English queen, her name was "Ann," and as "Queen Ann" she was followed by her tribe. Whether she will have a successor is doubtful, and perhaps the increase in education among the masses would in any case cripple such self assumed despotism.

COSTER SLANG AND SUPERSTITIONS.

Costers are not overly ignorant. They learn to read and write somehow. They have a slang dialect, as thieves have. Some of their words are utterly unintelligible to educated ears. If they desire to mask their conversation they drop into their slang instantly. They are not a dishonest people. They are not great savers of "rhino." They have a horror of coding their days in the workhouse, as also of pauper burial. Occasionally they turn upon the police courts, but not as often as the setter side folk. They patronize a form of entertainment known as the "Penny Gaff," and unknown outside of London. This is a sort of amateur variety show of a strangely mixed character at moments.

Do they always remain costers? you ask. No; but, on the other hand, the departures from their calling are rare. If a coster is "off his barry," shadows his neighbors, he sets up a small green grocery shop. After that he may go still further in the trade. But, as a rule, he has only the ambition to keep his head above water, die in his bed, and leave enough to be buried decently by his fellows.—London Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

The Good Wife's Power.

Just realize the vast power which a sensible wife can exert over her husband first of all. In the words of Marion Harland: "As you are your husband's standard of safety and propriety in dress, of [illegible] thoughts and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

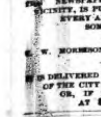
ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1888. PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS, A NEWSPAPER OF PLAINFIELD AND VICINITY, IS PUBLISHED AT 4:30 O'CLOCK EVERY AFTERNOON, AT NO. 11 SOMERSET STREET,

BY W. MORRISON, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

IS DELIVERED BY CARRIERS TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY AT TEN CENTS A WEEK, OR, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, AT $5.00 PER YEAR.

Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its produce bountifully; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and by mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His mercies in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the United States and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States one hundred and thirteenth.

(L. S.) ROBERT S. GREEN, Gov.

By the Governor:

ROBERT S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—The Fourth Ward Harrison & Morton Club is to meet Friday evening at eight o'clock.

—A good cook is the idol of the kitchen, but Tulip soap is the idol of the laundry. So say the manufacturers.

—A member of young men congregate congregate every Sunday in the vicinity of the Scott Printing Press Works and gamble with cards.

—Thirty thousand bales of cotton are detailed from exportation at the New York wharves on transports, owing to scarce freight accommodations.

—The Plainfield Republican primaries are called for Monday evening. The call is signed by Chairman C. M. Goddard and Secretary J. B. Coward and will be published tomorrow.

—A report was current to-day that the property corner of Front and Somerset streets (outlining) had been sold for $35,000. The Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. says that they have not bought it.

—Mr. C. E. Boss will meet his classes in English branches at the Y. M. C. A. rooms tomorrow, Thursday, evening at 7:30 o'clock. Young men receive such personal instruction in these branches as they may select. For information apply at the rooms.

—It does not seem to be generally understood that a law was passed at the last session of the Legislature prohibiting the use of sidewalks for bicycle riding. The law declares that bicycles shall have the same privileges on the public road as have carriages, but they are subject to the same penalties for using sidewalks.

—Gunners and hunters, with and without dogs, are are at present giving the farmers great trouble and annoyance. They do not confine their perambulations to the woods or swamps, but trespass on the fields, damaging crops and other property, and shoot anything from an English sparrow to a barnyard "pheasant".

—The Amaranthe Social Circle held an evening sociable last evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Boehm on West Front street. About thirty-five couple were present and all enjoyed the evening spent. Shortly after midnight refreshments were served. The guests departed for their homes at an early hour this morning.

—The Archdeaconry of New Brunswick will meet to morrow in Grace church. The programme includes Morning Prayer at 9:30 o'clock; Holy Communion with sermon by the Rev. Dr. Gallaudet, at 10:30 o'clock; at eleven o'clock, Missionary Service at 7:45 p. m. The topic for discussion will be "The Archdeacons", to be opened by the Rev. E. E. Smith.

PERSONAL.

Among the present absentees from town is Mr. Fred. H. Martin, of Mercer avenue, North Plainfield, who is now in Colorado.

John Taylor Johnston, of East Front street, was a close associate of the late Prof. Joseph Fowler, who died at New Brunswick yesterday.

Miss Mamie Cameron, daughter of ex-Councilman John Cameron, of North avenue, has entered, St. Elizabeth's academy at Madison, N. J.

Miss Opdycke, pupil of Mrs. Judd, of Somerville, will sing sweet lullaby and other numbers at the Thanksgiving Day entertainment at Music Hall. Mr. R. E. Barnes will be the pianist, and Mme. Alberti's drill of the performers and arrangement of the spectacle will meet the standard of good taste.

In the current issue of The American Bookseller there appears a large illustration in reproduction of a drawing from the pen of Mr. George Wharton Edwards. The work represents a fair young maid of olden time gazing wistfully across a beautiful landscape, perhaps looking down the road for her tardy lover. The picture merits the favorable comment it receives in other columns of the magazine. Mr. Edwards is a resident of Central avenue, Plainfield.

The entertainment given at Warren Mission Chapel Monday night by Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, United Order of Independent Odd Ladies, included readings and an address by Mrs. A. M. Maxwell, of Boston, songs by Mr. S. Chilvers, a dissertation by Mr. Fowler, songs and character-reading by Miss M. Fowler, a banjo solo by Miss Conover, songs by the Crescent Glee Club, a song by Mr. Kahrman, a tableau by Miss Ackerman, a song by Mr. Kahrman, a recitation by Miss Runyon, a solo by Miss Daisy Morse, a character-reading by Miss Fannie Westphal, a violin solo by Mr. Conde and a farce, "The Donation Party", by the Ladies' Company.

REQUIESCAT IN PACE!

LAST SAD RITES OVER THE TARIFF REFORM CLUB.

Thirty-One Mourners Attend the Obsequies. The Conscience-Fund Bequeathed to Charity. Praiseworthy Action.

The last solemn rites over the funeral services of the Cleveland and Thurman Independent Tariff Reform Club as such were held at their head quarters on East Fifth street.

The President, Mr. Otto Arens, presided, and in his blunt, honest way called the meeting to order about 8:30 o'clock. The Club claimed a membership during the campaign of 160 members, but there was present only about 35 survivors of the cyclone of a few weeks ago, which swept the Free Traders out and the Party of Protection in.

A Merciful Providence had permitted these 31 to return safely from Salt River, and be in at the death, although it had taken them some weeks to recover from the shock and to realize that it was a condition not a theory that confronted them. There were some present who wanted to do penance for their past sins, by some act of charity that THE NEWS could commend, as the faithful representative of the people. They would allow the Club to die in peace, take its effects and distribute them among the poor, and go home, never more to be caught in such a scrape.

Mr. Arens stated that the object of the meeting was to disband the old organization. It was proposed to re-organize permanently, but he was opposed to such a step. He was not a politician and did not want to be so considered. In the campaign just closed he had consented to become a member of the organization and its President, because he considered it the proper caper, but he did not expect by so doing he was surrendering his peace and happiness as a private citizen for all time to come. There was a surplus of $100 in the treasury, and the Club seemed puzzled to know what to do with it, just as the National Democratic Party were puzzled, (or pretended to be) about what to do with the surplus in the United States Treasury, until relieved by a vote of the people a few weeks ago to make way for a party of statesmen with brains enough to know how to manage public affairs for the good of the country, and so as not to surrender our interests to those of Europe, as seems to have been the sole aim of the Free Traders. But we must not speak ill of the dead. It has a spark of virtue left, and that, the greatest of all, charity, which covers a multitude of sins.

Councilman Bowers said that he had joined the Club as an independent. He was opposed to continuing the organization. The people had decided against them. There is no telling what new issues would arise within the next four years, in which the members might take opposite sides, and he for one would not be bound by any club against the free exercise of his opinion.

It transpired from the discussion that many other members, especially those not seeking office, were in the minority in accord with the views of Messrs. Arens and Bowers. They evidently penetrated through to the underlying motive of most of those wishing to continue as a political organization. Mr. Bowers moved that the $100 surplus be given to the charity project. Some one else offered an amendment that the money be kept in the Club and turned over to a committee for that purpose. The amendment was carried, 14 to 17.

It became evident that the minority did not like it, and Mr. Arens observed that those opposing the charity project were those who had paid least into the Club's treasury. He also wished the Club to understand that he would appoint as the committee those favorable to the charity project. He gave notice, as he did not wish to take any unfair advantage. He appointed Messrs. Stevens, Smith and Bowers. Appeal was made from the chair, but the chair was sustained.

A recess of fifteen minutes was taken, and, after conferring together awhile, the majority became satisfied that they would be compelled to yield to the minority and upon re-assembling the amended motion holding the money in the club was reconsidered, and Mr. Bowers's original motion was carried. Those who had favored the motion then wanted to know if THE NEWS would publish the matter. Mr. Bowers said he would see to it, and knew that THE NEWS would publish anything that was proper. The majority decided that THE NEWS have an account of the affair. Mr. Bowers called this morning and gave our reporter a note to the Secretary, Mr. Merritt, Mr. W. K. McClure's assistant, requesting that he be furnished a copy of the minutes, in order that the proceedings might be given. The reporter called, but Mr. Merritt said he had left the minutes at home and could not get them down before two o'clock, too late to be of any service to us as news. We have been compelled to depend on other sources for the above account, as the old organization never will meet again. It was voted to give $75 of the amount to the Children's Home, and the remaining $35 to Muh osberg Hospital. And then, in spite of all premonitions against, by those not trying to make a living by politics, a new club was organized out of the ruins of the old and many possibly will go on good condition, with some new heresy, for people who won't be cajoled to wipe out in 1892. Such's life!

Many Masons Make Merry.

The Worshipful Master of the Fifth Masonic District conferred the "M. M. D." at the regular communication of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, Free and Accepted Masons, last night. About three hundred and fifty were present, including the Grand officers of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Of course only members were admitted to the working, and the ritualistic work was followed. The good things were heartily enjoyed. The guests from out-of-town left on an early morning hour. The supper was served in the Lodge room.

—There are indications that corn will be an important feature of exportation this Winter, if wheat and flour remain high, as it table value is enlarging abroad.

THE PLAINFIELD Y. M. C. A.

A New Building Will Broaden the Field of Work.

The work of the canvassers for the new Y. M. C. A. building continues with encouraging results. Meetings of the workers in conference and reports are held at regular intervals and will be continued until the requisite sum of money shall have been pledged.

Some friends of the Association have feared lest the activity of the Building Committee and the interest of the members in that special direction should lead to neglect of the other departments of the Association work.

If these friendly critics will look in at the Association rooms they will see how little ground there is for apprehension. A few facts concerning the Autumn work of the Association will show redoubled activity rather than neglect. The November meeting of the Board of Directors was the largest and most enthusiastic of the year. The addition to the membership roll at that meeting numbered forty-nine. The number of new sustaining members received this Fall is twenty. The attendance at the young men's meeting Monday evening is unprecedentedly large. Sunday morning four classes assemble at the rooms for Bible study and training in methods of Christian work. The classes in mechanical drawing, German and common English branches supply a felt need on the part of the young workingmen of Plainfield. The mission work at Washingtonville and Mount Pleasant has been productive of much good. Class-s in physical culture assemble in the rooms twice a week; and the reading room is constantly patronized. In all these branches of work the Association is doing better than ever before. In almost everyone of them it is hampered and crippled by the small rooms to which it is confined. Without a building the Association seems to have reached its limit of usefulness. With a building it will doubtless enter a new era of usefulness.

MR. WM. H. SHERWOOD.

The Brilliant Musician of Thursday's Concert.

Concerning the concert advertised to be given in Music Hall this week Thursday night a contemporary says:

"The brilliant career of Mr. Sherwood furnishes a type of that truly American quality of mind and talent that commands success in whatever it undertakes, and which in this instance has placed its fortunate possessor in the foremost position among pianists of the present age.

Wm. H. Sherwood's instruction in his profession was begun in his childhood, by his father, the Rev. H. C. Sherwood, M. A., himself a graduate of the Royal Musical Academy, of Lyons, N. Y. This was supplemented by instruction at the hands of some of our most noted pianists, viz: Mr. Heimburger, Pychowski, and Wm. Mason. While still a youth he gave evidence of such marked talent that it was considered advisable to place at his disposal the best musical training that could be obtained, and accordingly arrangements were made for a stay in Europe. He first resided in Berlin, Germany, where Kullak and Ehrlich received his especial care and studies. Seven months later, being then but seventeen, he carried off the principal honors of the Kullak Annual Examination Concert, among his competitors being Moszkowski, Nicode, Neitzel, Martha Remmert, and Pri. Adele aus der Ohe. Subsequently the young musician studied with Deppe, and later went to Weimar, where he pursued his studies with Von Bulow and Liszt. Some one else also offered an amendment that the money be kept in the Club and turned over to a committee for that purpose. The amendment was carried, 14 to 17.

It became evident that the minority did not like it, and Mr. Arens observed that those opposing the charity project were those who had paid least into the Club's treasury. He also wished the Club to understand that he would appoint as the committee those favorable to the charity project. He gave notice, as he did not wish to take any unfair advantage. He appointed Messrs. Stevens, Smith and Bowers. Appeal was made from the chair, but the chair was sustained.

A recess of fifteen minutes was taken, and, after conferring together awhile, the majority became satisfied that they would be compelled to yield to the minority and upon re-assembling the amended motion holding the money in the club was reconsidered, and Mr. Bowers's original motion was carried. Those who had favored the motion then wanted to know if THE NEWS would publish the matter. Mr. Bowers said he would see to it, and knew that THE NEWS would publish anything that was proper. The majority decided that THE NEWS have an account of the affair. Mr. Bowers called this morning and gave our reporter a note to the Secretary, Mr. Merritt, Mr. W. K. McClure's assistant, requesting that he be furnished a copy of the minutes, in order that the proceedings might be given. The reporter called, but Mr. Merritt said he had left the minutes at home and could not get them down before two o'clock, too late to be of any service to us as news. We have been compelled to depend on other sources for the above account, as the old organization never will meet again. It was voted to give $75 of the amount to the Children's Home, and the remaining $35 to Muh osberg Hospital. And then, in spite of all premonitions against, by those not trying to make a living by politics, a new club was organized out of the ruins of the old and many possibly will go on good condition, with some new heresy, for people who won't be cajoled to wipe out in 1892. Such's life!

DARK ROOM MYSTERIES.

SOME SIDE-SCENES AT THE CAMERA CLUB EXHIBITION.

A Brief Study of Photography by a Novice.—How He Wasn't Graduated a Professional.—Personal News of Members.

The exhibition of photographs at the rooms of the Camera Club, No. 12 Park avenue, was well attended yesterday afternoon and evening. A reporter who was assigned elsewhere the day of opening found in the exhibit last night much to please and interest. Although he entered the rooms a novice he emerged with great confidence in his newly-acquired knowledge and some conceit of his self-unquestioned ability to "take" any style of picture a confiding customer might require. He defers filling orders, however, until his nerves have recovered from its first wrestle with its owner.

While at the exhibition the scribe was kindly inveigled into the "dark room", where all the marvelous photographic work he had seen on public view is done. The camera and its operator are, of course, responsible for the "negative" with its crude impression; but in the mysterious secret chamber with its light-proof walls is fashioned the finished picture. Here are the chemical "baths", the developing, the re-touching, the toning and other processes that make or mar the work the "artist", which is silver, blue, albumen or bromide, or a platinum- or tin-type, according to the preparations used. White or "direct" light falling on the negative after a properly-timed exposure would "fog" the plate, rendering it hazy, smoky, indistinct. "Ruby" light—of a red or yellow color—does not have that effect: so into the "dark room" of the Club only that light falling through red glass is admitted.

The reporter was granted the privilege to look at a few negatives, but after he had ascertained by the aid of a penknife that the gelatine film was protected from scratches by only a coat of varnish and that it wasn't inside the glass he hadn't his former tremendous longing to handle the plates. Somehow the members seemed to coincide in his view that his information about negatives by that time was positive enough.

There was found one square of glass the ownership of which nobody claimed. It had been through the camera twice and had two decidedly different views imprinted on it. Some one suggested that it was an attempt at composite photography; but this remark was silenced by a substitution of the phrase "non compos mentis" for the word "composite".

Among various interesting things which were offered as facts on the guileless visitor was the information that a dark-colored liquid in a bottle many sizes too big was just what it was labeled—"distilled water". It was surmised that the "water" had escaped from one of Mr. Pelletier's Passic river views. The remark was not intended as a reflection on the photographer.

Exhibition Personals.

Mr. Chas. A. Davis is an artist by profession. His portraits are perfect, and he shows the nicest taste in selections and groupings. Mr. Dreyer has also developed a talent for "Beauty in a Picture", in The Philadelphia Photographer for Nov. 17th, 1888, the same issue that reproduces his beautiful "Bud in the Apple-Tree".

The members say that ladies are welcome to join the Club. They might use the rooms all day long.

Mr. A. J. Gavett does all his own work—save when Mrs. Gavett aids him—; and his fellow-members agree that he ranks among those at the top.

Mr. T. Pelletier is very artistic in his selections. His specialty is landscapes.

Dr. H. E. Lowrie does all his own work and is very good at general photography.

Mr. G. Harry Squires is best at fine landscapes.

Mr. Wm. Lyon, jr., uses a small camera and does his own work, which is very good.

Mr. Lemuel W. Serrell, jr., is noted for his liking for clouds; he is quite famous, locally, for artifically producing them wherever possible.

Mr. W. T. Westervelt is the youngest of the exhibitors, but one wouldn't judge so from his work.

One Thing Born Not to Die.

The bloodhounds to be used in tracking Eliza in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" at Music Hall this week Saturday are not the ones used in attempts at tracing Loudon's Whitechapel murderer, but they are just as real.

"Some things"—says The Jacksonville Daily Journal—"are born not to die, and among them may certainly be ranked 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'. Although published over twenty years ago, the book continues to sell right along and troupes who present it on the stage are generally well-paid ventures. Harry Webb's 'Original Mammoth Combination' was no exception last night, people actually climbing over each other, almost, in their haste to secure tickets."

Increasing Fowler's Figures.

According to the Flemington Democrat the following is the "corrected official" vote for Congress in the Fourth District:

	Sep. Voorhees.	Dem. Fowler.	Ind. Dem. Boe.
Hunterdon	3,890	4,355	988
Somerset	3,145	1,742	1,305
Sussex	2,306	2,125	1,301
Warren	3,307	3,801	1,466
	12,148	12,023	5,079

Fowler's plurality, 75.

The Election Judges Feed.

The several judges of election who failed to attend the first meeting of the County Board of Canvassers were brought up in the District Court at Elizabeth yesterday. The men were discharged because the county failed to prove that they were regularly appointed representatives.

The Methodist Quarterly Conference of Jersey City and vicinity have organized an alliance, with Wm. H. Beach as president. J. M. Foley and Mrs. Dr. Hall as vice-presidents, Samuel Sterling as treasurer, and the Rev. Dr. Balloran as secretary.

The Raritan River Railroad tracks have now been laid about 5-8 feet beyond South River, on the line to New Brunswick, and trains for both passengers and freight will soon be running between that town and South Raritan. A large number of men are at work grading near Milltown, but it is not likely that the road will be running to New Brunswick before next Spring.

The people of Hightstown were greatly excited yesterday over the arrest there of James Mc Mills, who is charged with the murder of Howard, the eleven-year-old adopted daughter of John Beck, near Paoli, Chester county, Pa. Two months ago the child was missed and as soon as read the Philadelphia papers, which gave long accounts of the crime at the time it was committed, the wife of Mr. Beck told her that the author of it had been living near there.

Since the Elizabeth City Council passed the ordinance providing for the improvement of various streets, some of the residents of the lower wards have been at work underscoring to obstruct the carrying out of the project. Monday Judge P. Hamilton Gilhooly went before Judge Van Syckel, in the Supreme Court at Trenton, and obtained a writ of certiorari, which stops all proceedings under the ordinance until the case can be argued in the February term of the court.

John S. Clark, of New Brunswick, owner of Pavonia, a mare with a record of 2:15, the 7-day pacer, sold a team of horses to a railroad watchman named Phelan. Phelan got excited over a report that Clark had been swindled, and wanted to buy $50 that he was, staking the money in several persons' hands. Clark left town for Wall street. Phelan found out that he had lost he was very down-hearted. Having taken the bet only to encourage Phelan, and not to win, Mr. Clark returned the money to Phelan, and gave him some good advice along with it.

Edward Bunday, who says that he is a practicing physician living in New York, was arrested in Hoboken yesterday on an complaint of Mrs. Amelia Hillman, of No. 116 Park avenue, who accused him of having swindled her out of $33. Bundy's alleged method of swindling is original. In some manner he obtains the addresses of invalids and calls upon them. He soon succeeds in convincing the patient that he can effect a cure in a day or two. Then he collects his fee and the patient does not see him again except by accident, as was the case with Mrs. Hillman.

Professor Joshua Foster, late principal of the Pingry Training School, died at New Brunswick yesterday at the age of seventy-six. He was graduated from New York University in 1836, and was an associate of Gen. Grant, Wm. Taylor Johnston and Recorder Hackett. He then studied for the ministry, but ill-health compelled him to leave the seminary, and shortly after he became a teacher in the Pennsylvania Deaf and Dumb Institute, where he married Mr. Hutton as principal in 1839. He was connected with the institute, the second largest in the country, for twenty-four fourteen of them as principal. In 1884 ill-health compelled him to resign, and he made his residence in New Brunswick.

BASEBALL LEGISLATION.

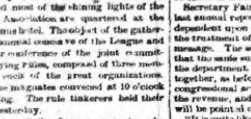
Few But Important Changes in Playing Rules.

EXPECTED CHANGES NOT MADE.

Pitchers Not Affected — Four Balls in Place of Five—A New Style of Base Hit. Washington Will Probably Get John M. Ward—Personal and General Gossip.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Every baseball man of any prominence in the National League and most of the shining lights of the American Association are quartered at the Fifth Avenue hotel. The object of the gathering is the annual convention of the League and the regular conference of the joint committee on playing rules, composed of three members from each of the great organizations. The League magnates convened at 10 o'clock this morning. The rule tinkerers held their meeting yesterday.

The roster of the League magnates who are on hand is as follows: N. E. Young, of Washington, president and secretary. Detroit club, F. K. Stearns, W. J. Gray and H. M. Vail; Washington club, Walter H. Hewitt and L. A. Bartlett; New York club, John B. Day and C. T. Dillingham; Boston club, A. G. Spalding, Boden, William H. Conant and J. B. Billings; Pittsburg club, W. A. Nimick, J.



DEAN. HINES. STEARNS. ROBINSON.

P. O'Neil and A. K. Scandrett; Indianapolis club, J. T. Brush and John Martin; Chicago club, Walter Spalding; Philadelphia club, William Rogers of the Baltimore club and John Schmelz of the Cincinnati club. These gentlemen represent the Association on the joint rules committee.

The interesting event of the day, of course, was the meeting of the committee on rules, consisting of Messrs. Day, Spalding, Rogers, Young, Brush and Barnie. They were in session almost all the day and evening. The changes they voted to recommend were not many, but the most important will be telling ones, to judge by the opinions of managers and players with much disappointment.

The committee will recommend that the number of balls necessary to give a batsman his base be reduced from five to four, and that the number of strikes remain as at present. They voted to abolish the foul tips as a means of putting out a batsman, and that last change is an innovation that the league's committee proposed in a somewhat different shape. It provided that in addition to a man's position in outfield on the ground each club have a fourth man, whose name shall appear on the score card. This man shall be allowed to play in the field only when a man of the nine is not even inning, a player being retired, of course, to make a place for him. A similar rule providing for two men was pushed hard by the league, but it failed, because the American Association refused to agree to it. These three amendments were the only material changes agreed upon, although many minor changes were made in the wording of certain rules, to make their meaning clearer.

The committee refused to return to the high and low ball rule by a vote of 4 to 2, and by the same vote declined to put the pitcher back to fifty-five feet. The committee was practically unanimous against the scheme to abolish the foul lines and to make the home base round to increase its size, and the proposition to allow base runners to overrun second base legally as was also promptly defeated. One of the minor changes proved a distinct score to shut be scored when a batted ball is accidentally stopped by a player while standing on the ground, and in such cases a fielder's choice records the ball and runner out ahead of the runner, the batsman being credited with a base hit without being put out. The committee was devoted to a consideration of ways to commit or raise and the small question of ball writers of New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Cincinnati on the changes necessary to secure a uniform system of scoring in the United States.

There was much speculation among the baseball men as to deals for players, and many changes are predicted before the season opens, but the day developed a surprise that didn't appear on the audition of the Boston club. Boston is a winner, and in spite of this fact the Boston people want to strengthen the team by the addition of the best that they have discovered, that another and more favored bidder is in the field and ready to put down the big Walter Hewitt, the young, rich and energetic president of the Washington club. When Mr. Hewitt left Washington for New York he stated that he was here to buy players, and he was ready to pay as much for a few good men as anybody. And Mr. Hewitt demonstrated what he meant by business before the day was over. He had several conferences with Fred Stearns in regard to the Detroit players, and Mr. Stearns tried to persuade the young Washington magnate that he would make a good thing by buying the release of Hanlon and Ward, but Hewitt was after bigger game. In fact he made it Mr. Ward and he says he has the cash to make good Now York's price. It can be stated that the result of Mr. Hewitt's negotiations was that Mr. Ward agrees to give Washington the preference over Boston.

All talk about Washington or Indianapolis getting the League grounds to be homeless. The only club to retire will be Detroit, and it is practically settled that the Detroit franchise will go to Cleveland.

International League.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 21.—The annual meeting of the International Baseball Association is being held here to-day. Jersey City is represented and it is said Newark will send a man, and an effort will be made to secure one from Rochester. Toronto, Albany from Toledo and Detroit. Buffalo, Toronto and London are in it for a pen, as against any one club. Nearly all the cities in the International association are represented.

THE COMING MESSAGE.

President Cleveland Goes Into Seclusion at Oak View to Prepare It.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—President Cleveland went from the executive mansion to Oak View last evening fully determined to spend that in the country home until after he has completed his annual message to congress, which he has not yet begun. He has most of the topics well in hand, but he finds it will be impossible to prepare it before congress meets if he does not escape from the unavoidable interruptions which beset him at the White House. Visitors at the mansion are quite as numerous as ever, but at Oak View the president will receive no visitors, and devote his time assiduously to the task before him.

Secretary Fairchild is hard at work on his last annual report. The president is largely dependent upon the figures in this report in the treatment of the revenue question in his message. The secretary's report will show that the same sorry question still confronts the department. The figures will be brought together, as before, to show the necessity of congressional action to lessen the inflow of the revenue, and the danger of further delay will be pointed out.

"It is quite likely," says The Star, "that Mr. Cleveland's message will possess some of the elements of cover retort that appeared in his first fisheries message. It is generally understood that he will stan up to the question of tariff reform as in his message at the beginning of the congress, and will make it the keynote of the document. He will not yield one jot from his position before the campaign, but he will probably make more emphatic his declaration that it is 'condition, not a theory, that confronts us.' It is likely that he will try to make it clear to congress that the necessity of checking the accumulation of surplus is so great that if the Democratic plan cannot carry through congress they should yield rather protest to the Republican substitute than allow there to be no reduction of the revenue at all. There will be no weakening from the former position and no confession that the popular verdict has condemned the tariff reform. Cleveland has said that he would sign any bill that should come to him making a reduction in the revenue, whether as to tariff duties or internal taxes, but he will never sign something about it absolutely vicious. If the senate bill should pass as it now is, it is almost certain that he would sign it—practically with some remarks in explanation of his motive."

England's Ministerial Candidates.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The government still has under consideration the question whether or not to appoint a successor to Lord Sackville as minister to Washington before Mr. Cleveland shall vacate the presidency, though a new minister may possibly be appointed in December. Lord Vivian, at present minister to Belgium, could have the post, but it is believed that he does not desire it. If this should prove to be the fact the choice rests between the Hon. F. R. Plunkett, minister to Japan; Sir F. C. Lascelles, minister to Roumania, and Minister Monson, now at Athens. It is understood that Lord Sackville will be made minister to Spain, Mr. Ford, the present British representative at Madrid, going to Vienna. Mr. Satow, minister resident at Bangkok, Siam, will succeed Mr. Pagrave, minister resident and consul general at Montevideo.

Annual Banquet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The one hundred and twentieth annual banquet of the New York Chamber of Commerce was held this last night was an elaborate and interesting one. Most of the leading business men of the metrop lis were present, and toasts were responded to by Mr. Depew, Chauncey M. Depew, Warner Miller, Hon. Goldwin Smith and Rev. Dr. Greer. Letters of regret were received from Gen. Harrison, Hon. L. P. Morton, Mayor Hewitt and others, and President Cleveland telegraphed: "I find it impossible to accept the invitation to be present at the banquet, but desire to express my appreciation of the consideration of which the invitation is the evidence, and my regret that official duties detain me here." Numerous speeches were made by Democratic and Republican orat rs of note.

Inauguration Prospects.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Postmaster General Dickinson has decided, in compliance with the request of the citizens' inaugural committee, to clear the ra.nway of the city postoffice of the obstructions in the present building, in order that the inaugural ball may be held there, as it was four years ago. The Harmony legion of Philadelphia is coming, with 600 men. The Buffalo league, the Lincoln club of New York and several clubs from Baltimore have already arranged to come. Lieut. D. Wise has been appointed chairman of the committee on street decorations. No general secretary has yet been elected by the committee.

Henry George in London.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The Pall Mall Gazette prints a two column article on the visit of Henry George, in which that gentleman declares that the government's purchase scheme will prove abortive as a measure affording the relief it purports to pretend to be seeking. A counter upon the Irish tenants. The creation of an army of small landlords will not solve the problem, and the old system is certain to come back in a most aggravated form. Mr. George will remain in London a fortnight, during which time he expects to deliver several addresses. His views are bearing no doubtless exerting some influence upon the operation of the bill.

Injured in a Wreck.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 21.—The Harrison accommodation train on the Big Four road pumped the engine of the train which left here. Five cars were overturned, and the following persons were injured: Mrs. Moore, New Haven, ribs broken, back hurt and head cut; Mrs. Hamilton, Sedamville, head cut and back hurt, serious; Harvey Hamilton, Harrison, O., hole cut in head and back hurt, very serious; Charles Hewitt, employe of the Big Four, hands almost cut off; James Dick, Harrison, O., hand badly cut. Many others were hurt, but the above named were most seriously injured. A broken rail was the cause.

Stout Want to See Harrison.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 21.—The Journal's Bismarck (Dak.) special says: The Indians on the Sioux reservation are now most anxious to form the acquaintance of Gen. Harrison. They realize that he will soon become the "great father," and they desire to meet him and form their own opinion regarding the proposed opening of the reservation. They want to visit him before he is inaugurated, and the agents will be greatly annoyed by their importunities unless their request is granted.

Mormon Converts in Alabama.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 21.—Alabama is receiving a peculiar field for the Mormon missionaries, and just now. They are in charge of a Mormon elder from Utah, who arrived here yesterday, all coming from the mountains of Utah. Some of them were converted while being mere children—all tickened for Utah. A carload went from north Alabama ten days ago and a large number went from south Alabama a week ago.

TALK OF THE PROPHETS.

Some Important, But Secret Conferences.

IT IS ALL ABOUT THE CABINET.

John S. Clarkson's Mysterious Visit to Harrison—Blaine said to Be Out and Platt In—Mr. Morton's Rumored Visit. The Big Four's Work.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The World's special correspondent at Indianapolis telegraphs the following:

"Chairman John S. Clarkson's social call here was no long. It means business, and lots of it. He has been the guest of Gen. Harrison, and his tongue is tied. Inc'e as is up to arms against Blaine. As between Blaine and Harrison for secretary of state, the dressers would take Sherman every time. Every visitor at all inclined to speculate on the cabinet remarks it, and not one in a thousand has an inkling of the reason. John Sherman is a strong man in Indiana, anyway. Blaine has not been since he cast upon Hoss or Jackie the stigma, famous as well as infamous, that he couldn't get a fair trial of his libel suit against The Sentinel in an Indiana court.

"But the cause of Blaine's unpopularity as a cabinet quantity with politicians here is something deeper than that. All that is needful to set an Indiana politician on edge is to tell him that Mr. Blaine must have anything he wants from the Harrison administration, because it was through Blaine that Harrison was nominated at Chicago. The Indiana leaders are jealous to the death of anybody or anything that stands to rob them of the glory of Harrison's nomination."

The Sun's Indianapolis special says: "Mr. Clarkson changed his mind about resuming the Republican headquarters here, and concluded to make another day of it. He and Col. Swords disappeared from the hotel at about the time they would have gone to church had that been what they had announced they would take, but they did not take any train. Neither did they call at the Harrison residence. Mr. Carlson has a long head, and he knows a thing or two. He has no use to talk politics with are not to be found at Gen. Harrison's house. Attorney General Miller and Col. Dudley Woodbridge are the men who are doing most of the conferring on matters below cabinet places.

"In the evening the whole Clarkson party dined with Gen. Harrison. It was noticed that this was a strictly social affair, too, and that politics was never mentioned.

"The other callers on the president-elect were numerous, but not important. The bulk of them were Odd Fellows, the state encampment that order being in session here.

"Gen. Harrison smiled when a Sun reporter told him that it was reported from New York that Tom Platt, Warner Miller, Frank Hiscock and Chauncey M. Depew were coming on with Mr. Morton to consult with him.

"Well," said he, "I do expect that Mr. Morton will visit me during this winter, and the others can come too if they want to and consult all they please, and the newspaper men can get from them all the information they can. But I am not at all sure of the consultation. There is nothing definitely arranged about any visits whatever yet, because for one thing our house is not in any condition for it at present. It won't be until these natural gas men get through with it. To-day they have been tinkering with the bath room, and the water has been let below the ashes up into the library, and all the correspondence is covered with them."

A candidate for public printer who may get as far as Washington is Col. Dunn of Texas—that the way has been opened by him in his district.

Chairman Quay's Belief.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Senator Quay said to several friends of the Philadelphia committee that he is here seeking quarters for the inauguration; that he now felt assured that the Republican majority in the electoral college will be increased by one; that he believed that the First district of West Virginia would have a Republican representative; that Goff (Rep.) was elected governor of that state by a majority of 240.

Dem crats Claim It To-day.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Secretary of State Henry S. Walker, of West Virginia, telegraphed to a friend here:

"Goff's claim that he has carried the state is based on falsified returns published in the Intelligencer. Fleming is elected governor. The legislature is Democratic on joint ballot by one m jority; Second congress district Democratic; First, Second and Fourth close, and awaiting final count.

Think Stanley Is Safe.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—Mr. Arthur Walton, in a speech at Kensington, expressed his belief that Stanley reached Wadelai and December or January, but was compelled to leave there in order to join the rear column. The speaker said he had received a letter written by the late Professor Jamieson last April, in which the writer stated that all were well.

CONDENSED NEWS.

John Bright's physicians fear a relapse in consequence of severe weather.

The engagement of Miss Ethel Randall is in a critical condition is unfounded. He is in better health than for some time and is actively at work.

Hon James Morrow, who was the competitor of Judge Fleming for the Democratic nomination for governor of West Virginia, died at his home at Fairmount and will be buried with Masonic honors.

Twenty-six students received the degree of M. D. at the graduation exercises of Dartmouth Medical college at Hanover, N. H.

The Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railroad shops at Hamilton, O., were burned Thursday morning. Loss of $30,000. Mrs. Mueller and Carrie Kerler were seriously injured by jumping from a second story window.

At Lancaster, Pa., Mrs. William Simmons went out of the house for a few minutes, and on returning found her husband dead. He was returning he ran from the house in a sheet of flame and fell dead at her feet.

A mysterious explosion, supposed to be a dynamite bomb, occurred at Lisbon, in a window, completely wrecked J. W. Johnson's cigar store on Chestnut street, Philadelphia. His living rooms on the third floor were also badly damaged. His family, consisting of his wife and two children, escaped with a severe shaking up.

Joseph Jones, a Dane, 30, employed by O. H. Jones & Co., Boston, while on the fourth floor stepped into the elevator shaft, and fell to the bottom, striking his head and fell to the bottom, striking his head and fell to the bottom, striking his head

CARL DUNDER.

Reasons Why He Decided Not to Become a Great Man.

"Schnilderer, let me tell you somethings. I vas no edit mans, and I knows petter as you. If you vant to haf some fun and be happy doun you try to be great. I doan' belief dot's vay vot I vas a yoy, und so I lay my aentire for myself.

"You haf all heard of Napoleon Bonaparte. He vas a great shentral. He can lets his Europe mit one hand tied behind his back. He vas der greatest man for a hundred years. Some peoples vas so afraid of him dot dey stump in der rifer, und some like him so dot dey sit oop nights to hurrah. Maype dot looks awfully nice to you, but how vas he. Dot Bonaparte can nefer go in a tobacco store und play shockers mit a fireman. He don' haf no time to go on a picnic. He nefer seen a game of baseball. He doan' haf some fun mit der boys at ward caucus. All he does vas to plan some fights und knock enferybody into dem middle of two weeks ago. Take him for ten years und he doan laugh once. He vas great but does not pay! Vhere vas der fun—der besiefits? Vhen you ery pecause dey vas not Sheorge Washington. Maype it looks awful nice to be president und a shenseral, und to swell around und lose enferybody, und to haf your name in der papers, but you hold on. Do you pelief Sheorge Washingtons safer haf some fun mit der poys? Does he safer steal some apples, carry off somepody's gale, or hook sugar from der pantry, und nopody dares slap him on der back und call him odd mans, und nobody dares ask him to stay his treat. He must vhist be a leg; gun und keep quiet und comb his hair fife times a day.

"Maype some of der little gals vas mad pecause dey won't nefer be queen of Spain. Aqueen has nice dresses, und she can haf some quails on toast eafery day, und if she says she wants this or that she can haf him. Oop she rides out eafery day in a kerridge, und boys und ehvers, und if she was seek der papers come out eafery hour. Dot looks nice, but hold on a little while. If you vhas queen you can't play ball, nit der poys, you can't eat some peanuts nor chew gum, you can't put on an old dress nor wear some old shoes, und if you go to a picnic you can't go to Tall eafen a fog and ate your own. How is would look for a queen to stand out by her gate und gossip mit Mrs. Blank about dot new neighbor und her nine cated. If her husband comes home late she can't say one word, und if she goes by der kitchen der hired girls bounce her out. She must ait oop very vrisket, und look very solemn, und if she looks out of der window und a poy falls down she can't eafen shmile. If you want some comforts in dis world doan' you to some queens.

"I must like to be as I am und like I vas. If some man calls at my house he takes off his hat und says my wife vhas looking pretty ash she vhas, und dot we vhas hafing such bad weather as he nefer seen pefore. Vhen a man comes in my place of pesiness he says, 'Heinl, Dundy, vhat a cold enough for her?' How vhas your left lung today, anyhow? I can laugh at him, or I can poke him in der ribs, or I can tell him to go by Halifax. Dot makes me happy, und it gives fut some more. If I vhis seech a great man dot I haf to hold my legs still as crowbars und my backbone like a gate post, und say 'und' und 'haf' und so py der harness once a day, I vould go seek und fired dot I run away from myself. When I vhas who I vhas I can wake oop in der morning und see Mr. Blake's mare, keep my dog out doors, shmile on my wife und go down town und feel dot I like to stay in Detroit ten hoonered years."—Detroit Free Press.

"Had Feasted There Before.

"You're not your usual self, George, tonight," said the girl somewhat coldly, as she sat away to the other end of the sofa, "you are nervous and distrait. Have you ceased to love me?"

"Ah, no, darling," he responded with emotion, "but I am not happy; the dog, as I left the house last night, nipped a chunk out of my leg."

"Why, surely, George, you and the dog are good friends!"

"Yes, we have been good friends of late, but he evidently did not recognize me in the dark; he only took one bite, however. I suppose I ought to be grateful that it was no worse."

"How did he know it was you then?"

"He must have recognized me by the taste."—The Epoch.

One Last Request.

"My dear friend," said the minister to the dying man, "it must be a source of great consolation to you as your end approaches to feel that you have always led a correct Christian life."

"It is sir," was the weak reply.

"And now," went on the minister gently, "is there anything more I can say to you, have you any last request to make?"

Whereupon the dying man feebly: "Will you please see that my diary is burned?"—Harper's Bazar.

LONGEVITY OF MAN.

THE LIFE TERM OF THE RACE SHOULD AVERAGE 98 YEARS.

The Genealogy of the Patriarchs—Monstrous Hygienic Superstitions of the Middle Ages—Keeping Disease at Bay. A Hint to Brain Workers.

The biologist Bichat, whose institutions so marvelously anticipated the conclusions of a later science, held that the normal longevity of our race should be an average of, ninety-six years, basing his inference on the fact that the life term of all known mammals exceeds at least six times the period of their growth. A dog, growing for three years, may live to eighteen or twenty. A horse, growing for four or five, attains, and often exceeds, an age of thirty years. A camel, growing twice as slowly, may live to forty years and upward. An elephant, even in captivity, does not attain its full growth before its fifteenth year, and in India often outlives two masters. Some of the larger quadrumana, likewise, grow very slowly; several varieties of baboons, for example, do not acquire the characteristics of maturity before the beginning of their teens; and the naturalist Brehm mentions a male cacma who, after bearing the patriarch of his tribe, raided the durra fields of the Zulu villages for nearly thirty years before he met his Waterloo in a fight with the outraged natives.

The males of our own species grow for at least sixteen years, but less than one-third reach even the threefold multiple of that age, and hardly one in 300 the normal sixfold. Attention has also to be called to the circumstance that, whether the years of Genesis may have been lunar years, days of the gods, the genealogy of the patriarchs records a steady decrease of longevity, since the author of that record can hardly be supposed to have lived within the same cheerier, two or three different units of computation.

Besides, there is an a priori probability that the natural duration of our life term must have been shortened by those three billion tons of virulent stimulants, which, according to Dr. Schrodt's estimate, have convulsed the stomach of mankind since the invention of alcoholic beverages, not to mention narcotic drinks, tobacco, made dishes, preparative marriages, indoor life, sedentary occupations, high-pressure schools, sleepless nights, and all the fracas, fret and factory smoke of modern city life. There is no doubt that the average of longevity has slightly increased since science has begun to dispel the monstrous hygienic superstitions of the middle ages, but it is equally certain that those superstitions enormously decreased the average life term of earlier generations.

CONDUCIVE TO LONGEVITY.

Mental activity, under the stimulus of a fierce competition, is a specially conducive to length of life, yet a surprising number of Grecian statesmen, poets and philosophers were octogenarians. The sun of the south did not prevent the passionate, though dietetically temperate, Saracens of Bagdad and Cordova from reaching an age which their Trinitarian contemporaries often ascribed to the machinations of witchcraft. Yet neither the Greeks nor the Koriscows were distinguished for the practice of the monkish virtues. They loved life for its own sake, and saw nothing meritorious in gratuitous self denial.

Physical exercise, out door sports, absence from toxic stimulants and premature incontinence, frugality in the original sense that implied a predilection for a mainly vegetable diet, and a fondness for simple and healthful recreations, generally suffice to keep disease at bay, though there is also a deep significance in Goethe's remark, that perfect health of mind and body depends upon the regular, though not necessarily exclusive, pursuit of some practical occupation. Business tinkers, he thought, should follow some mechanical by-trade, and counteract the one sided tendencies of their study by mechanical labor—say, in an amateur carpenter shop, or a private smithy, a la B. F. Burritt; or, better yet, on a little farm, with a bit of live stock and a thriving orchard.

Disappointment, oft revisited, undermines health as effectually as protracted physical pain, and for the worry of the vexatious incident to the complex and precarious pursuits of modern civilization there is, indeed, no better specific than the peace of a rustic garden home. Xenophon's hunting lodge, Felix Sylla's cabbage garden, Erasmus' green house, the patriarch of Ferney's home made Eden, with its pear tree nurseries and refugee settlement, and even the woodlands and wood piles of Hawarden, may have enabled their proprietors to outlive the rancor of their enemies, aught all secular pursuits the art of survival is a chief secret of success.—Felix L. Oswald in The Forum.

From a Jewish Standpoint.

Ask the Jewish housewife, the Jewish mother, whether marriage is a failure! She will not understand you. She will stand bewildered in the face of such a question, and if you explain to her what you mean she will tell you that a Jewish mother sees in marriage the acme of happiness, because of womanly duty; that all these newfangled notions are simply the outcome of the brain of some man or woman who missed the true mark of life, and whose life is a failure. She will point to her child—as Cornelia of old did. She will extol her husband as the ideal of her life. She may not have read as much as the girl of the period, may not be as accomplished, or figure as well as a speaker in semblages for the advancement of woman suffrage, but she will exemplify to you how a true woman lives, how a true mother, a devoted wife, arranges her life, and you will find that true happiness is found in such a family, and that marriage is the most sacred bond in existence, which is a question to be by a sacrilegious hand upon the rock upon which society rests.—Hebrew Standard.

Holding Their Shoulders Back.

Fashionable girls in New York are apparently gone daft on the question of square shoulders. Anything to catch the pose young women now effect is difficult to imagine. While they are on the right track they are hardly fair to look upon, and beyond criticism or cavil. It is when they are seated that the great defect in the present fashion in artificial and fashionable construction of the American young girl becomes evident. While they succeed in holding their shoulders back, it is impossible for them to sit at the same angle, when seated, unless their floors are held at the same level as the floor. Hence, their heads necessarily droop forward, leaving a long and undesirable curve between the neck and the back of the high collars. It gives the effect of cut throat suffering. Again, when they rise from the gilt leans forward again, or rises to her feet. Then everything fits in with the correct and shapely beauty that is the second nature of American women—beautiful and famous product.—The Argonaut.

After buttering the tin for a boiled pudding, dust it with cracked bread crumbs; baking pans can be treated with flour in the same way and the cake will never stick.

LOVE'S SUFFICIENCY.

"I'm said by poet, it is true for me
To love and live,
Than never to have loved at all. But I—
I may not choose.
For there hath crept one into my life's core
So fierce, so strong,
That I am helpless in its grasp, content
To drift along.

At first I knew not 'twas Love's sea I had fet sail upon,
So, happy, floated on, with half closed eyes,
Through shade and sun;
What heeded I which way I went, with him
My boat to guide?—
What dangers had the unknown sea, if he
Was by my side?

I woke to find myself in waters strange,
No land in sight;
All things seemed radiant, save. A mighty flood
Of rare delight
Swept o'er my startled soul; the sky, the waves
With glory shone,
As was revealed the rapturous thrill of love,
Till then unknown.

And now let shadows fall, let storms arise,
On his dear breast,
Shielded and safe, I lie, while shelt'ring arms
The night may come, it holds no dread for me;
His tender kiss
Bee's all my fears, and fills my happy heart
With perfect bliss.

A WEDDING IN RUSSIA.

The Guests and "Assistants"—Old Customs—The Maiden's Braid.

The guests are far more numerous at a Russian than at an English wedding. They are invited to be "assistants" at the wedding. The witness, who is generally the grandee of the "connections" of the family, is the most important person. He pays the priest's fees. Then come the ladies of honor and the bridemen. The latter have to purchase some article for the bridemaids. The "boy-gin," who carries the sacred picture of Christ in silver and gilt, is generally a little boy. Then the party arrives at the church. It is his duty to hand the pictures to the "render," who places them behind the "royal gates" or leaning against the altar screws.

The chief duty of the witness or supervisor intends the carrying of the dowry from the house of the bride to that of her future husband, and arranges everything for the use of the bride. He also takes to the register of bridemaids or the their costumes. The dresses are not all alike. On the eve of the wedding they sometimes a "farewell girls' party" is given. No gentleman attends this. All those present must be from the unmarried. They sing choruses, chase each other in the garden, and play many other innocent. They devour any amount of tea, ice cream, lemonade and sweetmeats. After supper they say farewell, and leave the intended bride very exhausted in view of the ceremonies of the following day.

The old custom is for the betrothed pair to *fast (eat nothing) on the day of their mar*riage until the ceremony, which, in the family of a noble, always takes place in the evening. This makes the day most tiresome to a girl. The bride's distribution her out of the girlish toys ribbons and jewelry to her companions. Those things are called "maiden shame" and "maiden heart." The peasant girls cut and divide among their companions, on their wedding day, the long ribbons which are fastened at the end of the plait of hair which hangs down the back. This custom, immediately after their marriage, have the hair braided in two plaits and wound about the head, then covered with a sort of light cap tied behind, or with a veil of silk handkerchief.

When at Pargola, in Finland, I often saw the unmarried girls trooping along in the eventide, linked hand, singing their wedding songs. My friends failed to notice the difference in the style of the hair of the unmarried and the married. The married women have no middle parting under the invariable handkerchief, a little piece of linen, a lappet about the size of a florin, hanging over the center of the forehead. This is a more evil-looking sort of marriage than a wedding ring. When the women begin to braid up the hair they sing part of a wedding song: "Ah! my braid, my braid of maiden hair. Ah! soon shall it be divided in two!"—Cassell's Magazine.

Fun in a Confederate Camp.

The following is a southern picture, but for the most part, barring the $40 for a pair of boots, the scene is such as might have been witnessed in many a northern camp. The writer says that the soldier, while life in camp, is a great "institution," one that must be seen to be appreciated.

A cavalry man's greatest enjoying is a pair of immense top boots, for which in fond pride he has invested full $40 of his pay. At once the cry from a hundred voices follows him along the line:

"Come up out o' them boots!—come out!—too soon to go into winter quarters! I know you're in 'dem boots'—you always sling out!"

A bumpkin rides by in an uncommonly big hat, and is frightened at the shout:

"Come down out o' that hat! Come down! Taint no use to tell me ain't up there: I see your legs hanging out!"

A fancy officer is horrified at the irreverent reception of his nicely twisted mustache, as he beats from behind innumerable trees!

"Take them mice out o' your mouth!—take 'em out!—no use to say they ain't that; see their tails hanging out!"

Another, sporting immense whiskers, is bidden to "come out o' that bunch of hair; I know that you're in that; I see your ears a-working!"

Sometim s a rousing cheer is heard in the distance, and somebody calls: "Boys, look out! Here comes old Stonewall or an old rabbit, one or t'other!"—Youth's Companion.

In a Mott Street Restaurant.

The chef at Hong Ping Lo's is paid $100 a month and all his expenses, which are enormous wages for Chinatown. Like all chefs, he is superior, haughty and somewhat capricious. He has a wide knowledge of Chinese medicine, and his dishes are compounded on profound hygienic principles, for the cooks of that nation are held responsible in large part for the health of their patrons. Dyspepsia is unknown among them. Unlike the French chefs, the Chinese cook condescends to prepare and cook his dishes with his own hands. The cooking is done on brick furnaces and with hickory wood, and the half globes of iron set into the blazing coals cook the food with a rapidity that would startle an American stove. The chef has opening into the kitchen a little closet into which he retires with his opium pipe when he feels the need of repose or inspiration, and his subordinates forbear to clatter the spoons or speak loud when the great personage is in the creative throes. He also requires poetry to excite and stimulate him in his labors, and both the kitchen and the restaurant are hung with long crimson fakemono which bear quotations from famous writers and sages, each one:

"Surely in the spring the sound of the wind is pleasant as it blows through the branch of the peach tree;" and:

"What thy heart desireth may thy hands strive to grasp;" and:

"He leaves their bones metallic ages drank; who leaves me a thousand."—New York Letter.

A WRITER'S NAME.

THERE SEEMS TO BE SOMETHING IN IT, AFTER ALL.

Some Authors Excusable for Adopting a Pseudonym—No Poetry in "Longfellow"—The Macaulay Flowers of Literature—"Carp," "Goth," "Howard."

Sometimes a writer's name is so uncouth or so commonplace that it seems of itself unfit for fame, and a pseudonym appears to be his only resource. It is hard to imagine a great novel making herself famous as a lyric poet, or a man named Mask becoming a world renowned novelist. The difficulty in such cases, however, can rarely be overcome. mated, and achievement of fame with such drawbacks, while it may be hard, is by no means impossible. We are apt to accept things as we find them, and to think them fitting because they were always to us as they are. Knowledge of the work a writer has done has a magical effect upon his name, and just as the old lady approved Adam's judgment and discrimination in calling the inhabitant of the pen "pig," "since 'pig' is such an appropriate name for such a dirty, repulsive, disagreeable animal," so we are apt to approve the names that masters of the other pen possess, because we have always associated the name with the work it represents.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Probably there is not a refined person in America to whom the name "Longfellow," for instance, does not, without consideration, suggest a poetic idea. We think beyond the name, and of the poetry of the writer; and yet, "Longfellow," when it is considered by itself, is not a poetic word, while its counterpart, "Shortfellow," is rather ridiculous. "Macaulay" seems, no doubt, to almost every one, a refined and stylish name, which would give any writer a long start toward making for himself a good reputation. The contemporaries of the historian, however, did not find that name distinguished, or Thomas when he first began to write would never have suggested that his essays were "the Macaulay flowers of literature." "Tennyson" by no means suggests a name as "Whittier," but the fame of his work has made the English laureate seem the equal, if not the superior, of the New England poet. Whittier is also, in not a few instances, such common names as Smith, Black, Green and Lamb, names so incongruous as Cable and Motley, and so uncouth as Keats and Shelley, have, with hosts of others equally ineligible, been given a share of immortality. When a man named Stubbs can make his name famous as an historian and a scholar, no writer need despair because his fate did not make him a DeQuincy, an Aldrich, or a Bryant, instead of a Jones or a Jacobson.

The man makes the name rather than the name the man. Still a good name is always an advantage, and in choosing a signature the young writer must decide whether he will conquer fate with the name his sponsors gave him, or whether he will choose a pseudonym that will put a Jenkins at once on a level with a Macaulay or Carlyle.

STICK TO IT ALWAYS.

When once he has chosen his name, however, be it his own by right of baptism, or a fictitious one, he must stick to it as long as he will conquer fame with the name his sponsors gave him, or whether he will choose a pseudonym that will put a Jenkins at once on a level with a Macaulay or Carlyle.

Sometimes there is an advantage to a newspaper writer in signing his articles simply with his last name. His signature then has to the uninitiated the appearance of a good pseudonym, while to those who are better informed it recalls the personality of the writer, "Howard" pursues this plan. "Carleton" and "Carp," two other well known newspaper writers, chose their middle names. "Gath" modified his initials into a signature that his letters have made famous. In each case there is something about the signature that suggests the writer himself, and he gets the advantage of a pseudonym, and of his writing signed by the same name.—William H. Hills in The Writer.

Industrial Insurances.

In these days the insurance of all kinds has become so common that the poorest and most ignorant laborer would laugh at the idea of a policy being a forerunner of ill luck. In the old country Tar laughs at the idea of misfortune following a voyage commenced on a Friday. Indeed, the laborer now has insurance brought to his own door, and the collectors find as ready a welcome afterward follow him to his factory and to his shop, ready to insure not only himself, but his wife, his bata in the cradle, his girls in short clothes, his boys in knickerbockers and his sisters and his cousins and his aunts." This is "industrial insurance," ready to insure the life of one from six months infant to the hoary headed grandfather of 70, at a weekly rate of from five cents upward.

There are three companies only in New York city that transact that is known as industrial insurance business. They are all conducted upon the same principle of granting insurance upon the lives of infants, children, adults and old persons, from one of from five to fifty cents, being for a young man of 21 insurance of $66 at death for five cents a week, or $260 for fifty cents a week.—New York Press.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

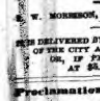
ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1888. PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS, A NEWSPAPER OF PLAINFIELD AND VICINITY, IS PUBLISHED AT 4:30 O'CLOCK EVERY AFTERNOON, AT NO. 11 SOMERSET STREET,

S. W. MORRISON, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

IS DELIVERED BY CARRIERS TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY AT TEN CENTS A WEEK, OR, PAID IN ADVANCE, AT $4.00 PER YEAR.

Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The soil has yielded its produce bounteously; prosperity has attended the efforts of industry, and by His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular labor, shall meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that He will bless us in all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation, State and people with peace, prosperity and contentment.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

By the Governor:

EDMUND S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary.

JOTTINGS.

—It will pay you well to investigate the merits of Tulip soap, the manufacturers say.

—One day's newspaper and magazine mail in the New York post office was 134 tons, 30,000 pounds.

—Saturday's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" matinee at Music Hall may be witnessed by school-children for fifteen cents.

—The polka and the mazourka came from Poland, and the schottische is a strange German perversion of the Scotch reel.

—The class in English branches will meet at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night. Those wishing to join ought to apply at the rooms.

—Mr. W. W. Martin will teach his class in light gymnastics at the Y. M. C. A. Friday and Saturday evening. For information apply at the rooms.

—The Mt. Horeb M. E. church donation visit was held Friday evening in the basement of the church. Considering the unfavorable weather there was a fair turn-out, letting about $60.

—Mr. W. Heumerich, whose earnest and interesting talks will be remembered in connection with recent Young Men's meetings, has been secured as leader for Monday night at the Y. M. C. A.

—During the Somerset County Public School Teachers' Institute, which was begun on Monday and will last a week, and which is to continue through Friday night, the school in North Plainfield is closed.

—Indian Summer has been unusually fine this season. It is not often one can gather a large bouquet of flowers in the garden so late in November. Last week they were abundant, but the frost of Saturday night sent them to sleep with "the flowers that bloom in the Spring, tra, la."

—Egbert claims now to be offering the largest, most varied and most complete assortment of dry and fancy goods, carpets, art squares and similar goods ever shown in this market, and says that he sells them at the lowest prices. He argues that it is greatly to the advantage of the purchaser of these goods to buy them where particular attention is given exclusively to this line, as the styles are sure to be correct, the quality the best, and prices lowest. If unsatisfactory, return to the patrons, or goods may be exchanged or money refunded.

—Each time week has a cartoon on its last page on a style of journalism we have for years condemned. It is a good hit on the scandal-monger class of newspapers, which thrive on the misfortunes of others. The cartoon is entitled "The Evil Spirits of the Modern Daily Press" (Ahem!) and pictures a demon in the shape of a printing press spitting forth its filth in the form of scandals, garbled news, boasting lies (3,000 circulation, for instance), sensational head-lines, suggestiveness, cheap sensations, paid puffery, objectionable ads., hypocrisy and abuse of rivals.

—For some time rehearsals have been held preparatory to the production of "The Land of Nod" under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. at the Music Hall Thanksgiving night. It is to-morrow night that Mme. Alberti has the entertainment in hand and that the little folks under her tuition have developed commendable skill; they will not only surprise their parents and friends generally, but disinterested auditors will be capitally pleased. Allover age of the ladies of the W. C. T. U. can supply tickets of admission. It is suggested that all early secure their seats for this popular home entertainment.

—Although the work of the W. C. T. U. and the "Y's" is directed against cider as exercising as against other beverages, there are many of the ladies on hand who give up their apple-juice, as sweet cider is preferable to the "hard" variety, it is perhaps well to know how to keep the drink through the Winter in an unfermented state. As authority given this recipe: "Add one pound of whole mustard seed to a barrel of cider; as soon as you put in the seed take a pint of ground black mustard seed and six eggs; beat together thoroughly and put into the barrel. It will keep sweet a year or more."

—Mr. Fred Clark, whose residence used to be on Orchard place, favored Plainfield with his presence Tuesday after a series of sojourns at Elizabeth. After a few hours spent in promenading the streets he met his old time friend policeman Lynch, who found him in so mellow a frame of mind that he invited him over to the station-house to spend the night. The invitation was accepted. This morning City Judge Suydam issued a pass for his safe return to his present home with Jail Warden Dodd, who will entertain him sixty days.

THE U. S. GRANT GUARDS.

The North Plainfield Citizens Feast Them.

The citizens of North Plainfield who desired in some way to thank the U. S. Grant Republican Guards for their untiring efforts during the recent campaign for the success of Harrison and Morton and the Protection of Home Industries decided on a supper in their honor. This was given last evening in the vacant store in French's new building, Somerset street, corner of Manning avenue. The Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, kindly volunteered their services, and appointed as a committee to take charge of the affair Mrs. William C. Smith, Mrs. Isaac Brokaw and Mrs. S. A. Somers. These ladies had prepared a supper of which even Delmonico might feel proud.

The Guards met at their headquarters at about eight o'clock and were serenaded by the Plainfield Cornet Band, which played in excellent style several inspiring patriotic and campaign airs.

The Guards later on found in the street, and with Lawyer Charles Reed, President, and Mr. Wm. Day, Secretary, of the U. S. Grant Club, and Editor Morrison, ahead as their invited guests, followed by the band, playing "Rally Around the Flag", marched to the banquet hall, which was tastefully festooned with stars and stripes, and was welcomed by a committee of ladies and gentlemen.

The tables were bountifully supplied, and the company at the word from Capt. Smith, as master-of-ceremonies, sat down, and, after the divine blessing had been invoked by Mr. Brokaw, proceeded to do justice to the feast.

Everybody was in the happiest of humor, and, when the feasting was over, President Reed was called for remarks. He was greeted with the most enthusiastic applause, and in a humorous vein, keeping the table in an almost continual roar of laughter. When he finally subsided, Mr. Morrison was called, and greeted with the same wild applause. He paid tribute to the zeal and devotion of the Guards during the campaign, ready to respond where they could help, and some, like Mr. Brokaw, for instance, overworking until ill, although well enough now. But they had a good cause, a good party, and good principles to work for, and could feel justly proud of the contribution they made to the general success. In conclusion he moved that a vote of thanks be given standing to the ladies and the friends who had provided such a feast, amended by Mr. Oakley to include the committee of citizens, and adopted unanimously, all standing. The ladies and gentlemen, nearly two hundred persons, and the affair was a grand success in every respect.

TO-NIGHT'S CONCERT.

A Brilliant Array of Talent to Please Plainfield.

At the vocal and instrumental concert to be given at Stillman Music Hall to-night Mr. Wm. H. Sherwood, "the great American pianist", will play a brilliant programme from the works of Wagner, Chopin, Schubert and Liszt, which is certainly a treat for music-loving people. Other interesting numbers to the programme will be contributed by Miss Mary Dunn, soprano of St. Stephen's church, New York city; Mr. Wm. R. Williams, tenor of Dr. Deems' church, New York; Mr. S. C. Harper, solo-baritone of Dr. Storr's church, Brooklyn; the "Hayden Trio Club": Mr. Milton H. Gruet, violin; Mr Philip Egner, cello; and Mr. W. Ward Stephens, pianist and director. "When you really see a good performance by the New York Times, speaking of Mr. Sherwood,—"come before the public, it is a positive relief. His crisp and graceful touch showed that he has not been over-rated among the distinguished pianists who have been heard in New York. He plays with a taste and finish that distinguishes him as a musical scholar of the first rank."

VAN NEST TO BE REFORMED.

The Boy Fire-Bug Sent to the Jamesburg School.

Willie VanNest, Plainfield's thirteen-year old fire-bug, who has recently convicted in the Union county Court of setting fire to the laundry of his employer, Mr. Henry C. Drake, on East Front street, yesterday was sentenced by Judge McCormick to the Reform school at Jamesburg, until he becomes of age. Willie was but a brother of two convicted fire-bugs who are now spending five years in the State Prison, and was a constant attendant at the Union county Court while their trial was in progress.

The Electoral College.

[From The Elizabeth Herald.]

Purity of the elective franchise, the preservation of political liberty, and justice to the electors who have so long been debauched by the corrupt methods of both parties, imperatively demand the abolition of the semi-monarchical Electoral College.

[From The Rahway Censor.]

This subject is discussed for a few days after every Presidential election, and that is the end of the matter. The question was more seriously considered after the contest between Jefferson and Burr in 1800 and then on the election of John Quincy Adams by the House of Representatives in 1824, when Gen. Jackson had a large plurality of the popular vote. President Jackson repeatedly called the attention of Congress to the necessity of amending the Constitution to allow the people to vote directly for President, and propositions were made in that direction in Congress; but there were very few supporters. We think that we can safely assure our contemporary that the Electoral College is not likely to exist until after we have some serious trouble in electing a President by the House of Representatives, in case of a failure to make choices by the College; and may that day be far distant!

—A third track is in progress of construction by the Central Railroad Company from Plainfield to the Grand avenue crossing. The intention is to extend this as rapidly as possible until there is a continuous siding from Bound Brook to Roselle.

—The shortest days of the year are gradually drawing nigh. Though short now, especially in the afternoon, daylight will be curtailed still further until the 21st of next month, when after a stand-still of some days it will again begin to lengthen.

THE GYMNASIUM PROJECT.

$20,000 Thus Far Subscribed to the Y. M. C. A. Fund.

The meeting of those who are working for the new Y. M. C. A. building fund will be held at the residence of Mr. H. A. McGee, Willow terrace, North Plainfield, Tuesday evening, Nov. 27th. The additions already pledged amount to about $2,000, making the total subscription thus far in the neighborhood of $20,000.

The Association claim that the establishing of a Y. M. C. A. gymnasium in Plainfield will benefit the residents of the city physically, mentally, morally and spiritually. The enterprise will include means and apparatus for healthful bodily exercise, an evening school, properly equipped reading rooms, a lecture hall, pleasant parlors and apartments for innocent games.

The question of preparing for the expense consequent on the erection of a new building has been carefully considered. The rent of the two stores for which the plans provide and the increased receipts from the greater membership which may reasonably be expected will easily meet the new demands on the treasury of the Association. It is fair to expect that the new building will bring great additions to the membership. In many cities such an improvement of facilities for young men has doubled the membership within a single year. The building is sure to be one to bear its own burdens.

No One Should Oppose Mr. Mule.

Ex-Mayor Rockfellow refuses to be considered a candidate against Mayor Male for re-election. Good. Now what more could be done than for all parties to unite and re-elect our Grand Old Man unanimously! He is the first Mayor of Plainfield, our largest tax-payer, the man who has done more for the welfare of the city than any one else here, the man loved and esteemed by all men, in the ordinary course of nature, he can linger with us only a few years longer, though still active and in the possession of all his faculties, and industriously at work daily for the good of the city. In party spirit so strong that we stand units in doing honor to one so worthy of honor! There are plenty of good men in both parties, but they can afford to stand aside a few years. We sincerely hope that Mayor Male will be nominated by both Republicans and Democrats, as the crowning tribute of our friends. Mayor Male has consented to be a candidate again, but only on condition that his nomination is unanimous. Why not go one better, and let each party stride to outstrip the other in the work of re-electing him!

The Langston Guards Still Live

The Langston Guards organized permanently Tuesday night with forty members.

The following officers were elected for the term of three months: President, Mr. Theodore Bonds; Vice-President, Mr. James Connell; Secretary, Mr. W. L. Sarvis; Treasurer, Mr. Louis Peterson; Recording Secretary, Mr. Edward Washington; Banking Committee, Mr. Louis Peterson, Mr. Elwood Ressoner, Mr. Prime Voorhess; Staff Officers, Major Wm. Washington, Mr. Mayhew, Mr. H. Lee; Captain, Mr. Irwin Young; First Lieutenant, Mr. James Babbett; Second Lieutenant, Mr. James Potter; Orderly Sergeant, Mr. Wm. Jackson.

Highway Robbers at Elizabeth.

Samuel Clarke, residing at No. 213 Bond street, Elizabeth, was the victim of a daring and brutal outrage Tuesday night. He was attacked by footpads while going home with his wife at 7:30 that evening, and was knocked down, badly beaten and robbed of his pocketbook containing a five-dollar bill and some change, together with his rent receipts. The affair occurred at the corner of Bond and Second streets, a populous thoroughfare. Mr. Clarke's face presented a frightful spectacle yesterday from the treatment he received.

The "Bl." Club's New Members.

At the last meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, Mr. Thomas Mason, Mr. John F. Munn, J. Frank Martin, A. B. Conant, David H. Lenox, Jas. C. Field, Harry D. Morrison, Ernest A. Van Zandt and W. D. Morgan were elected members.

PERSONAL.

Dr. Fred. J. Wells, of West Fifth street, is recovering from a severe illness.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Potter, of Mt. Pleasant, will celebrate their silver wedding Monday, evening, Dec. 3d.

Mr. Oscar S. Teale and Mr. David Titsworth are among the new exhibitors at the Camden Club exhibition.

Miss Annie M. Collins and Mr. William H. Lunger were united in marriage at the residence of the bride's father, Mrs. S. B. Joseph, of 43 Westervelt avenue, last evening. The Rev. Edward Judson, of New York, performed the ceremony.

A large gathering of friends—in all about two hundred—attended the wedding reception of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Tier at the residence of Mr. John H. Tier on Bank place last evening. The gathering had such a merry time that they did not leave till an early morning hour.

There was a wedding on Rose street, Somerville, Tuesday afternoon. The contracting parties were Miss Emma, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Polhemus, and Mr. Peter B. Hodge, of Stelle's Pharmacy, Plainfield. The wedding took place at the residence of the bride's parents, the Rev. E. G. Read performing the ceremony.

The Warrenville church was crowded to its doors Oct. 31st by those who went to witness the marriage of the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Badertscher, to Miss Mary Pabst, of the same place, at 4:30 p. m. Mrs. Wm. Miller, Jr., presided at the organ. The bride was dressed in white satin. The Rev. Mr. Leonhard, of New York, performed the service. The church was handsomely decorated. The happy couple have begun housekeeping in the pretty new parsonage.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

A new post office has been established at Kresson, Camden county. The new postmaster is George J. Kress, after whom the office is named.

James Milligan, of 142 Lewis street, New York, a collector, was killed yesterday at Orange. He fell out of car brake and another was passing and was struck by a box car.

The people of the Second Presbyterian church of Newark have passed a call to the Rev. A. T. McCormick, of the Second church, Detroit, to succeed the Rev. Dr. Foswaith. The salary was fixed at $4,500 per year.

The Paterson Musical Union, after an existence of about fifteen years, has voted to disband. It is the oldest choral society in the city and was prominent for more than a decade, the leadership of Florian Obrodzki, who organized it.

Dr. Patton, president of the College of New Jersey at Princeton has resigned his position as one of the Presbyterian revisers. B. B Warfield, D. D., the popular professor at Princeton Theological Seminary, takes President Patton's place.

Peter W. Blazer, of New Jersey, has been appointed Special Examiner in the Pension Office at $1,400 per annum, and E. J. Sharp, also of New Jersey, at $1,200 per annum. Blazer is Treasurer Camp 67 to go into private business. Sharp is Democratic Secretary of Bonnett, ex-Mayor of Elizabeth, has appointed Joseph W. Congdon to be Captain in that service. He has been assigned to Arctic waters.

Gilbert Johnston, of Paterson, is to have been married last night to Miss Agnes Alderdice. Instead he will be buried to-day. He was killed on the night of his wedding, walking along the track of the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad, near Park avenue, Paterson, when he was struck by a train and instantly killed. He was a bridge carpenter, 28 years old.

State Senator John W. Griggs, as counsel for William Bell, who tied with Tom McCoy in the election for Alderman in the Second Ward of Paterson last Spring, has obtained from the New Jersey Supreme Court a rule, returnable Monday, to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued compelling the Board of Aldermen to order a special election to fill the vacancy. The County and Supreme Courts have decided that there was no election for Aldermen in the ward last Spring.

The State Charities Association of New Jersey yesterday held its quarterly meeting at Association Hall, Newark. A report of the Rev. Dr. James M. Buckley concerning the investigation of the management of the Morris Plains Insane Asylum was read and indorsed. The work that had been accomplished by the society was indicated, it was thought, by the subsequent action of the Board of Managers of the Asylum. Mr. Charles F. Lewis read a report condemning the management of the Morris County Jail and the system prevailing there.

The Newark Health Board believes that it has discovered a method by which lead poisoning through the agency of bottles filled with metallic capsules can be prevented. The Board recommends that hereafter all manufacturers of mineral waters use only pure block tin for stoppers. Health Officer Wallace says that it is his intention to have frequent inspections of soda water, ginger ale and other bottled drinks. In case the sample examined be found to contain lead the full penalty of the law will be enforced against all offenders.

Christopher Kunsman, a Summit carpenter, has had his seventeen-year-old daughter, Mary Kunsman, brought up before a magistrate, as the only way of reclaiming her. She married Rudolph Houseman a year ago and soon after showed a great fondness for the society of other men. Houseman robbed a fellow-workman of $128, hoping, as he said, to make her more contented with the money, and after her husband's arrest and conviction the girl went downward fast and sure. She was taken before Justice Keller, but was released until yesterday on her own recognizance. She failed to appear, and her father followed her father told the story in court and yet hopes to reclaim her.

The dedication of the Webb Memorial Chapel at Madison took place yesterday afternoon. There was a very large attendance on this interesting occasion, and the beautiful little edifice was filled to its $50,000. It was very much admired. The Rev. Dr. Robert Allerman, the pastor, delivered an address, after which Mr. James A. Webb made a brief speech presenting the building to the trustees. Mr. Webb, the builder of the chapel, is a lineal descendant of Richard Webb, the ferryman. One year ago his only son, James A. Webb, jr., a Princeton College graduate and an exemplary Christian gentleman, died in his twenty-eighth year. The Webb Chapel will perpetuate his memory until time and the heavens be rolled together.

Wm. J. Davis, a young lawyer living in Harrison, had an unpleasant experience with a pet deer Monday. The Davis house stands in an orchard of about three acres, fronting on the main street in Harrison. A year ago Mr. Davis received a present of a young buck, about eighteen months old, which he had caught and tamed in West Virginia. The deer became a pet of the family and was fed out of the house. Every day it would leave the grounds over. Monday Mr. Davis was about to leave the house, and about five feet down the walk he encountered the deer and called to him. The animal instantly made for him, and, lowering its head, threw Mr. Davis to the ground. The deer has antlers eighteen inches long and very sharp, and with these he gored Mr. Davis in the breast and seemed bent on killing his master, whom he lifted twice bodily from the ground. A colored man saw Mr. Davis's peril and ran from the barn with a club, with which he belabored the deer. Others came, and the deer was finally driven off. Mr. Davis fled to the barn, where he was tied up. Mr. Davis was in a nervous condition yesterday. His face was not injured, but his body was bruised.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 22d. (Special.)—Gottfried Krueger, the wealthy brewer, has announced himself a candidate for United States Senator. He says that he will make a hard fight for the position and claims that he did much to bring about the present Democratic condition of the New Jersey Legislature.

THE INK-FIEND.

How the Latest Swindling Dodge is Worked.

[From The New Brunswick Home News.]

The latest swindling dodge, and one of the meanest because charitably disposed people are the victims, is the ink trick. The operator is described as a lanky individual, dressed in a faded blue suit of clothes plentifully bespattered with ink, and his manner of operating is as follows:

He will call on a farmer and tell him a pitiful story about being out of work and money; say that his wife is dying in a distant city, and he is tramping to reach her bedside before she dies. He claims to be an ink-maker by trade, and produces a long stone bottle which he will offer to the farmer a portion of it for a mere pittance, to enable him to continue his journey to that darkened chamber at whose portals grim death is already demanding entrance.

The farmer's sympathy is enlisted, and he hands up an empty bottle or tea-cup to help the gun along.

The ink-fiend, with pardonable pride, wants to convince the farmer of the merit of his ink, and insists on his trying it before buying.

The farmer hasn't paper or pen handy, and the fiend produces a crumpled sheet of paper and a stub pen.

The follower of the plow, who is more used to handling a pitchfork than a pen, takes the pen in his fist, places the paper on the top of a fence post while he laboriously scrawls the name which constitutes signing his name two or three times across the sheet. This is the most natural thing in the world and nine out of ten would sell the ink right there.

The ink-fiend then departs, and some time afterward the farmer receives notice from a bank that a promissory note of his is there awaiting payment. This note turns out to be that identical sheet of paper.

Agriculturists, beware of the ink-fiend.

—More than nine million pounds of wool were sold in the Boston, New York and Philadelphia markets last week; a surprising quantity, considering that prices have been advancing since this season's clip was secured.

ONE POSITION FILLED.

Gen. Harrison Appoints His Private Secretary.

CABINET PROGNOSTICATIONS.

An Indiana Editor Draws the First Prize. New Names Mentioned for Cabinet Places and Chances of the Old Ones Discussed—Outlook for Congress.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 21.—President-elect Harrison some days ago offered the position of private secretary to Elijah W. Halford, managing editor of The Journal, and yesterday Mr. Halford's acceptance was made public. His experience with men and affairs make this appointment a suitable one. Besides, for years a close friendship has existed between Gen. Harrison and Mr. Halford. The relations between the two gentlemen have been, at all times, of a confidential character. Mr. Halford, who is about 45 years of age, came from England with his parents when a child. The family lived first in Cincinnati, then in Hamilton, and and before the war they came to this city. Mr. Halford began life as a printer's apprentice, and his success has been achieved by industry, quick intelligence and keen observation of events. During the war he was a reporter and afterward the city editor on The Journal. He then passed to the managing editorship on that paper, but left it to accept the same position on The Chicago Inter Ocean, where he remained a

MARK TWAIN'S COURTSHIP.

Three Proposals Before the Humorist Got "Yes" for an Answer.

Mark Twain, if he is in the mood, will tell the story of his own courtship in a manner worthy of the greatest of living humorists. When he first met the lady who afterward became his wife he was not so distinguished as he is now. His origin was humble, and for some years of his life he had been a pilot on the Mississippi river. The future Mrs. Clemens was a woman of position and fortune, her father was a judge and doubtless expected "family" and social importance in his son-in-law. Clemens, however, became interested in his daughter and after awhile proposed, but was rejected.

"Well," he said to the lady, "I didn't much believe you'd have me, but I thought I'd try."

After awhile he "tried" again, with the same result, and then remarked with his celebrated drawl: "I think a great deal more of you than if you'd said 'Yes,' but it's hard to bear." A third time he met with better fortune, and then came to the most difficult part of his task, to address the old man.

"Judge," he said to the dignified millionaire, "have you seen anything going on between Miss Lizzie and me?"

"What? What?" exclaimed the judge, rather sharply, apparently not understanding the situation, yet doubtless getting a glimpse of it from the inquiry.

"Have you seen anything going on between Miss Lizzie and me?"

"No, sir, indeed!" replied the magnate, sternly. "No, sir, I have not."

"Well," Look sharp and you will," said the author of "Innocents Abroad," and that's the way he asked the judicial luminary for his daughter's hand.

Mark has a child who inherits some of her father's peculiarities. She kept a diary at one time, in which she noted the occurrences in the family, and, among other things, the mysteries of her parents. On one page she wrote that father sometimes used stronger words when mother wasn't by and he thought "we" didn't hear. Mrs. Clemens found the diary and showed it to her husband, probably thinking the particular page worth his notice. After this Clemens did and said several things that were intended to attract the child's attention, and found them duly noted afterward. But one day the following entry occurred:

"I don't think I'll put down anything more about father, for I think he does things to have me notice him, and I believe he reads this diary." She was Mark's own child.—Philadelphia Press.

A Head for Business.

Fond Wife—Now, children, run around and play. Make all the noise you can, because your father is writing a new poem in the next room.

Eldest Child—Shall we holler with all our might?

"Yes, dear. If you make enough racket he won't be able to get a clear idea of any sort in his head, and his poem will be incomprehensible. That's the kind that sells nowadays, and we need money to pay the rent."—Philadelphia Record.

And Kept in Close Confinement.

A man was noticed to fall off a street car the other day, and was found in an insensible condition. On reviving, his first words were: "Who thanked me, who thanked me."

"Why!" asked a man in the crowd.

"The lady I gave up my seat to."

"Impossible, it must be crazy," were the comments of those who heard the man's statement. And he was carried away to the asylum.—Yankee Blade.

She Had Lost.

"Mandy" almost shrieked the elderly aunt, as she entered the parlor unexpectedly and found the young lady clasped in the arms of a young man who was kissing her with every indication that he had had considerable practice, "what on earth does this mean?"

"Nothing but an election bet, auntie," replied Amanda, with a look of heroic, martyr like resignation on her lovely face; "I lost. Go on, Mr. McPelican. How many was that?"—Chicago Tribune.

Another Napoleon.

Magistrate (to prisoner)—So you claim to be something of a Napoleon in finance?

Prisoner—Yes, your honor.

Magistrate—Do you consider it Napoleonic to swindle a poor woman out of every cent she's got?

Prisoner—Yes, sir. I took everything she had. If that isn't Napoleonic, what is?—The Epoch.

Results of Habit.

Citizen A, viewing the games—Tom Tumbler will never make a good pitcher.

Citizen B—Why?

Citizen A—His delivery's too slow. Used to be boss of Manager Weller's messenger boys, you know.—Yonowine's News.

Appropriate Music.

Emma—What are you crying about, Tom?

Tom—Ma stopped me because I wouldn't stop singing.

Emma—What were you singing?

Tom—"Always Take Mother's Advice."—Time.

Short, but to the Point.

Dear Mr Editor—Please read the inclosed poem carefully and return it to me as soon as possible, as I have other irons in the fire.

Dear Mr. Smith—Remove the irons and insert the poem.—The Journalist.

In Cambridge.

Miss Arlington—We are very proud of our old Colonial houses. There's one of the best examples.

Mr. Derwent waterford New York)—What floor is the firm in?—Life.

More Than He Expected.

He is the Lancers is about to commence)—Shall I have your hand?

She (coldly)—With all my heart.—Harper's Bazar.

Can't Down Him.

Grand Avenue Barber (to youthful victim)—Shave up or down?

Youthful Victim—Down, of course.

Barber—All right; I'll shave down.—Yonowine's News.

Exactly So.

"I 'stumped' all through the late campaign," said the one legged man. "And I," said the one armed politician, "made a few 'all hands' speeches."—Norristown Herald.

Now, why will not women use hygienic common sense in trying to preserve their good looks? Twenty minutes twice a day is enough to win the boon of comparative youth—that is not a high price to pay—not nearly so high as lotions and powders.

Why do crow's feet come? Because the laughing muscles contract in a way to bring wrinkles to the corners of the eyes. These muscles get strong with daily and hourly service, and the skin in time falls into the rut, since there is little other development of the face to offset this. The mouth—the feature in first years—compresses often in a habit of anxious thought, nervous energy or in bad temper. The drawn down muscles harden in their work and the mask is soon fixed.

To keep the young outline the entire face should be equally used, nor any one set of —The members of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society advertise a grand sociable to take place in the T. A. B. Association Hall Thanksgiving Eve, Wednesday, Nov. 28th.

—There are about three thousand families in Plainfield, and it is estimated by a soap manufacturer that two thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine of them use Tulip soap.

—Farmers report gunners more impudent than ever before, and claim that they trample over the farms damaging fences and grounds, regardless of the posted warnings to "keep off."

—Among the pictures added to the exhibition of the Camera Club is a bromide enlargement of a baby daughter of Mr. Day from a negative by Mr. C. H. Davis and also a lady's photograph nicely framed, the work of Mr. Davis. Both are very creditable.

—Mr. Chas. P. Holahan, traveling man for Chickering & Sons, New York, who makes his headquarters in Plainfield, on the 21st inst. sold Mr. C. M. Finch, of Downs & Finch, large white manufacturers, a thousand dollar upright grand Chickering piano.

—The sessions of the "Yearly Meeting" of the Seventh-Day Baptist churches of New Jersey and New York city will be begun this evening in Brooklyn. There will be no services in the Plainfield Seventh-Day Baptist church to-morrow, except the session of the Sabbath school at 3 p. m. Services will be held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Fourth avenue and Twenty-third street, New York, to-morrow morning and Sunday morning.

—"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is to be presented in Stillman Music Hall to-morrow evening. It is promised "that from the great worth of the company, every act will be presented with new and elaborate scenery, painted by the master scenic artist of the world. The excellent company, two comical Topsys, the two ludicrous musical Marks, the elegant scenery, the novel mechanical effects, the ferocious bloodhounds, two brass bands, and all the celebrated Georgia Jubilee singers, will all unite in making the engagement one of the notable amusement episodes in our city."

PERSONAL.

Mr. William W. Smith, a member of the Senior class, Princeton College and a volunteer for the foreign field, is to speak on the subject of Foreign Missions in the Crescent avenue church Sunday evening.

Mr. B. C. Compton, of West Front street, starts to-morrow by the Steamer Old Dominion for a six weeks' shooting trip in the vicinity of Clarksville, Va., near the border-line of North Carolina. In the latter there is plentiful and consists of wild ducks, geese and turkeys, deer, otter and beaver. He will return by New Years Day. Mr. Compton is considered a good shot.

Mr. William Hendrickson, age 92, died at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. John Sutton, No. 85 Burn street, Newark, N. J., Thursday afternoon. The deceased was formerly a resident of Plainfield, and his remains will be brought here for burial Saturday morning. Mr. Hendrickson was one of the founders of the Second Presbyterian church (now Crescent avenue), and was a member of the Session, for over fifty years. He leaves three children—Mrs. John Sutton, Mrs. Jacob York and the Rev. Wm. C. Hendrickson, pastor of the Centennial Presbyterian church of Norristown, Pa.

THE SHERWOOD CONCERT.

Cultured Artists Entertain at Music Hall.

The applause of the two hundred at the Stillman Music Hall concert last night was sincere; and judging from that if from nothing else one might safely pronounce the musical entertainment a success.

The programme was opened by a trio in F Major, Gade, by Messrs. Milton H. Grusc, violin; Mr. Henry Schroeder, cello; and Mr. W. Ward Stephens, piano.

This was followed by a solo, P. DeFaye's beautiful "Tell Her I Love Her So" by Mr. Wm. R. Williams, tenor of Dr. Cuyler's church, Brooklyn. From a gentle whisper scarcely heard above the piano's notes Mr. Williams's voice swelled to a full rich volume that rose and fell in pleasing cadence till the final notes were silenced by an outburst of approval from the audience.

Mr. Wm. H. Sherwood was of course the favorite of the evening. He is a brilliant pianist. His first number included Chopin's classical Nocturne D Flat and the March-Militaire of Schubert-Tausig. In the Nocturne there was a grace of touch and a sweetness of execution that brought out all the beauty of selection. In the March was a fire, a grandeur, an impassioned silence, combined with a robust rhythm, which was understood by even those who failed to appreciate the nicer points of Chopin, and which drew an encore.

Miss Mary Dunn, soprano of St. Stephen's church, New York, sang Dossert's "Phyllis at the Fair" and Randegger's "Spring Fancies". She was recalled to the curtain and then made way for Mr. Milton Grusc, who gave a pleasing rendering of De Beriot's "Scena de Ballet."

The "Military March" next played by Mr. Sherwood was the composition of Mr. Dorsey W. Hyde, of Woodland avenue. There was vigorous applause for the work of both author and player. Liszt's "Woodland Murmurs" ("Waldesrauschen") closed Mr. Sherwood's part in the first half of the programme. Mr. W. R. Harper, soloist at one of Dr. Storr's church, Brooklyn, was last with Pomatowski's rollicking "Yeoman's Wedding Song".

Part second ran as follows:

Duo—"Homage a Handel"..... Moschelles
Messrs. Sherwood and Stephens.
"Come to Me"..... L. Denza
Mr. Williams.
Trio—"Te Sol Quem Adoro"..... Attilla (Verdi,)
Miss Dunn, Messrs. Williams and Harper.
"Fear-Zauber"..... Wagner-Brassin
Mr. Sherwood.
a; Cantilena, Op. 14..... Golterman
b 7 Spanish Dances..... Henriguhs
Mr. Henry Schroeder.
Ave Maria..... Ruff
Miss Dunn.
Tannhauser March..... Liszt
Mr. Sherwood.

The duo by Messrs. Sherwood and Stephens was so faultless that each congratulated the other as its close, and the listeners warmly testified their appreciation. In the trio was a perfect chime; and Mr. Harper's voice, whose power of music had not been fully recognized in his solo, was found to be just the thing to round out the tenor notes of Messrs. Dunn and Mr. Williams. Mr. Schroeder and his cello gave much pleasure. The other numbers were also of the best.

After the concert Plainfield friends met Mr. Sherwood and Mr. Stephens at a reception at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Munger, on Washington avenue, North Plainfield.

THE LEE WILL CASE.

Testimony in the $300,000 Suit Begun Yesterday.

Master-in-Chancery Herbert W. Knight, of Newark, began to take testimony yesterday in the Hermit Frazee Lee will case. The relatives are contesting the will because old Mr. Lee, who it is said had not been inside a church in thirty years, left $300,000 to the Scotch Plains Baptist church. The suit will probably last a long time. In his will Mr. Lee left his cousins, Mrs. House and Wm. Hetfield, who had nursed him, $500 each. They, with other relatives, backed by Daniel and Ezra Lee, uncles of the deceased, are fighting the will. Lawyer Lindabury, of Elizabeth, appears for them, and ex-Chancellor Runyon for the Church Trustees. Daniel Lee is ninety-two and Ezra is eighty-two. They were not present at the hearing, but some of their children, age seventy, were on hand.

RAN INTO THE DRAWBRIDGE.

An Accident Blocking Travel on the Central Road.

A schooner ran into the Central Railroad drawbridge across Newark Bay at four o'clock yesterday morning. The draw was knocked out of gear by the collision, and the vessel was badly damaged and got entangled in the opening. All travel over the bridge was blocked more than three hours, and passenger trains had to go around by way of Newark.

Coal and freight trains were stalled along the road for miles each side of the bridge, and travelers were subjected to great inconvenience. It was nearly eight o'clock before the draw was sufficiently repaired to allow travel over it to be resumed.

Heavy Trains Delay Traffic.

Coal trains lined the East-bound track of the Central Railroad between Plainfield and Bound Brook this morning, and passenger trains going both ways had to use one track. Cold weather makes it hard work for an engine drawing one hundred and twenty cars in Summer to pull eighty cars up-grade; and in consequence of a long train being unable to climb the hill from Plainfield to Park was for some time after daybreak traffic was delayed all morning.

Van Nest Taken to Jamesburg.

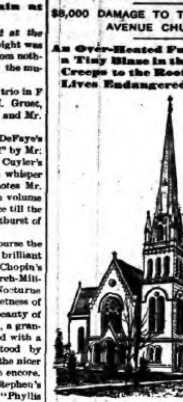
Willis Van Nest, the thirteen-year-old firebug convicted of setting fire to Henry C. Drake's laundry in Plainfield, was removed yesterday from the County Jail at Elizabeth to the State Reform School at Jamesburg, to which institution he was sentenced by Judge McCormick Wednesday.

The Riverton Gun Club, which was convicted of cruelty to animals for killing live pigeons at a shooting match, has decided to carry the case to the County Appeal Court.

A HARD FIRE TO FIGHT.

$8,000 DAMAGE TO THE CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

An Over-Heated Furnace Starts a Tiny Blaze in the Cellar that Creeps to the Roof—Firemen's Lives Endangered.



Ruin threatened the costly Crescent avenue Presbyterian church edifice this morning, when, at five minutes of ten, an alarm of fire was sounded.

With the clanging of the bell there was much of the usual excitement; and drivers with vehicles, leaving their heads as the engine-horses galloped along busy streets, narrowly escaped the consequences of a panic. First Assistant Chief Eugene A. Laine, reining his horse sharply around to avoid a collision at the corner of Second street and Park avenue, nearly drove the animal's nose, nasvoidably, through the plate-glass window of Mr. Garret Q Packer's store. The horses of Engine Company No. 1, also, were the source of considerable fear among spectators watching smoke issuing from the pores of the church at the Crescent. Just as they were being unhitched they managed almost to get control of their driver, and, breaking entirely loose save for one rein, pranced wildly about the roadway and sidewalk. Finally subdued, they were lost sight of in the interest centred on the fire.

There was no one with faith enough to give affirmative answers to the cry "Will they save the church?" Smoke poured from the cupola surmounting the ventilation shaft near the gable marking the juncture of the main building and the Sunday-school and lecture room; and through every crevice it could find in the stone walls it came creeping portentously.

It was at once seen that the fire had started in the neighborhood of the furnace in the rear of the basement, and investigation proved that a tiny blaze caused by either a defective or over-heated furnace had eaten its way through the floor-beams along the wood-work and up the shaft, grasping greedily at everything combustible within reach.

The entire Plainfield Fire Department was out. They set promptly to work and in three hours' time came out victors of a bitter fight. They had to work somewhat blindly at first, and for a while were drenching the furnace itself, so that smoke and steam filled the atmosphere and water too hot to wade in flooded the basement.

The men fought the creeping blaze from above and beneath; they ripped up boards and flooded the spaces between ceiling and floor; they burst through rich-stained glass windows and drowned out everything but smoke.

Gradually the heat ascending in the shaft sat fire to the cupola, and Chief T. O. Doane ordered two men to run up a ladder and hose. Obeying the injunction, they found the stream too weak to reach the blaze, and First Assistant Chief Eugene Laine mounted the ladder in the midst of a deluge of water shooting down from the steep roof, and directed the work with better effect, ordering the second stream of the engine shut down to throw more power into this one.

Spectators—among them Mayor Job Mak and Chief of Police T. J. Carey—protested against what was termed foolhardiness. It was urged that the stream was not powerful enough to do any good; and, besides, the men were in danger of sheets of dislodged slate which came flying downward. Chief Doane, however, insisted on having his mandate obeyed, and ordered the three to keep at work. Suddenly there came increased pressure on the line, and while the firemen were wrestling with the hose to keep it under control the cupola swayed violently, toppled and fell with a crash. Fortunately, it went to the side on which the firemen were not, and its flaming timbers and heavy iron gratings and bars tore their way along the roof, ploughing up the tin and iron on the Broadway side. Had the fall been to the Crescent side the three firemen along the eaves at the top of their ladder would without doubt have been hurled to the pavement near the carriage-shed seen in the cut—for they were in a direct line with the cupola. Events showed the truth of the spectators' claim—that the work aimed at the cupola was futile. It was, in fact, worse than useless—for the stream tore its way under the slates of the roof and flooded the frescoed ceiling of the main building, dripping down through to the pulpit.

While the men were fighting the fire and smoke the pastor, the Rev. W. R. Richards and some of his congregation, among them ladies in costly house-dresses from neighboring residences worked to save what portable property they could. Hymn-books and volumes from the Sunday school library, ottomans and cushions were carried out and heaped on private lawns.

The engines played away until nearly this afternoon; then left a water-soaked, smoke-stained and somewhat bursed building. The main part of the structure is unhurt, save for the water, and it is expected that services may be held there Sunday. The school and lecture department, however, is in a sorry plight. It is thought that $8,000 will cover the loss, which is fully insured.

The organ loft is over the vestibules at the front, and the organ was uninjured.

The church is heated by steam; the radiators are situated inside ordinary hot-air registers.

From the First Presbyterian church of Plainfield, which was organized in 1835, this church was formed March 21st, 1844. In 1856 the church dedicated its first house of worship, a plain but comfortable frame structure, which was afterwards enlarged by dimensions of about 28x70 feet. It stood on Front street, on the site of what is now Vandeventer Hall and the First National Bank. The Rev. Wm. Whittaker was the first pastor, holding the pastorate from 1845 to 1852. In January, 1856, the Rev. Theo. S. Brown became pastor, and so remained until March, 1867. On the 15th of November, 1867, the Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss was installed as Mr. Brown's successor. In October, 1870, the want of a new, larger and in every respect, better house of worship for the congregation became a necessity. The grounds at the junction of Crescent avenue and Broadway were secured, and under the plans of E. R. Roberts, architect, the present handsome edifice was built, at a cost of about $97,000. The corner-stone was laid the 17th day of August, 1871, and the church was dedicated Thursday evening, Sept. 26th, of the same year. By April, 1880, the church was entirely free from mortgage. Dr. Bliss closed his pastorate Sept. 23d, 1883. The Rev. Wm. R. Richards, the present pastor incumbent, was his immediate successor.

The church spire is 150 feet high. The building itself, including the Sunday school and lecture rooms, is 135 feet high. The church part proper is 104x90 feet, and the Sunday school and lecture part is 91x31 feet. The entire outside walls are of light-colored Ohio sandstone, backed by brick. The side walls from the ground to the top of the cornice are 29 feet high. The seating space in the audience room is 21x37 feet, affording room for 160 pews, besides leaving ample space for the hand-some pulpit, the organ and the choir. The building committee were Messrs. John Taylor Johnston, J. W. Norton and James T. Closson. Besides the church edifice, which is the most handsome and costly one in town, the congregation has built a beautiful parsonage costing $19,000, making the total value of the church property something like $116,000.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

During the last six months four alligators have been captured near Eatontown, in a small stream that empties into Sandy Hook Bay.

A petition is being circulated for the commutation of the death sentence against Robert Elder, now confined in the Atlantic county jail.

John H. Dialogue, the Camden shipbuilder, hopes to secure the contract for building a new twin-screw supply steamer for the Government lighthouse service. His bid was $171,000, the lowest entered.

Two new manufactories are about to be erected at Bridgeton—an oilcloth factory and a knitting mill. Together they will employ about 300 hands. The city has voted a cash bonus of about $500 and sites free, besides other favors.

The citizens of Hunterdon county are considering the advisability of removing the county's insane from the Morris Plains Asylum on the ground that the expense to the county of maintaining them there is approximating $12,000. It is thought that a saving of $5,000 per year to the taxpayers can be made.

New Jersey's finances will be easy next year. There will be about one hundred thousand dollars additional revenue from railroad and corporation taxes, and it is all probability the State will receive from congress next Winter her share of the direct tax paid early in the century, amounting to four hundred thousand dollars.

William Gruise, whose death at North Long Branch was reported a few days ago, reformed and has been living quietly ever since. This aged citizen was born in South New Jersey in 1787. He was a furnace-tender during his life, and old age did not stop his activity until a little over a year ago, since which time he has been confined to his bed. He was 101 years of age.

The Secretary of the Treasury has awarded a gold medal to Captain Christopher Ludlam, keeper of the Hereford Life Saving Station on the New Jersey coast, and silver medals to Jason Buck, Provid-ence Ludlam, H. W. Rhudreth, Willard F. Ware, S. C. Godfrey and Smith C. Ludlam, members of the crew of that station, for their heroism in rescuing the crew of the schooner D. H. Ingraham while it was ashore on the north bar of Hereford Inlet in December, 1886.

In many of the best game districts in Gloucester, Salem, Cumberland and Cape May counties, which have been posted this season warning gunners to "keep off, under penalty of the law", This is the case in a number of places in Burlington county, which have been hunting grounds for residents and non-residents, and the reason assigned by the owners of such property is that many of the non-resident gunners are so destructive to property, tearing down fences, overturning fodder stacks, and in a few instances, setting fire to woods and other property will be shot within a short distance of their farm houses. Farmers have posted notices of such treatment, and they now say that their only plan is to forbid any gunning on their premises. The reason given by the counties named state that rabbits are plentiful everywhere, and that the season for quail promises to be a good one.

Will Plainfield be the Station?

General Greely, Chief Signal Officer, informed a Washington, D. C. correspondent last evening that he would soon consider the advisability of establishing a signal service weather station in New Jersey. The idea of establishing such a station first originated with the late General W. B. Hazen, when he was at the head of the United States Weather Service. It is thought that Plainfield—where Mr. R. J. Shaw now displays governmental signals—may be chosen as the station.

Jack Horner and His Pie.

In addition to the fancy articles—which will be very attractive—offered at the sale for the benefit of the Children's Home November 30th, there will be the usual refreshments attending a fair and the novel attraction of "Jack Horner" and his famous pie.

FEES IN CRIMINAL SUITS.

A Big Decision for Justices: a Bad Thing for Tax-Payers.

[From The New Brunswick Home News.]

Judge Dixon, in the Passaic County court a few days ago, ruled that Justices-of-the-Peace have the right to collect their fees from the county for all criminal processes, whether the grand jury finds indictments or not. Should this decision be confirmed by the higher judicial authorities there will be a revolution in the workings of Justices' courts. It is understood here the rule to allow justices their fees only in cases where true bills were found by the grand jury. It is to be hoped that the higher courts will not support the at titude taken by Judge Dixon. In the most considerable part of their judicial functions justices-of-the-peace take many cases and issue processes where the grand jury afterwards find that there is no prima facie case whatever, but in the hands of unscrupulous justices, whose only object is to fill their own pockets with as little work as possible, the magisterial expenses will be trebled or quadrupled, and the tax-payers will have no redress.

THE HARRISON INAUGURAL.

Elizabeth Veteran Zouaves to Parade at Washington.

The committee having charge of the Harrison inaugural ceremonies at Washington, D. C., have been informed that the Veteran Zouaves of Elizabeth, N. J., will visit Washington in March to take part in the inaugural parade. They will be attended by a band of forty musicians and will remain three days under the auspices of the Union Veteran Corps ("Old Guard") and Kit Carson Post, G. A. R.

They expect to visit Fredericksburg, Va., during their trip, and again climb "Mary's Heights", but will not encounter the opposition they had nearly a quarter of a century ago, when they faced the long and sorried lines of Lee's grim veterans.

At Fredericksburg the command will be the guests of the Confederate veterans of that place. General Black (Commissioner of Pensions) and other honorary members resident of Washington will also go along.

A Little Girl's Gift.

To the Editor of The News:—The little daughter of Councilman Wilbur held a fair for the Children's Home Saturday, Nov. 17th. She sent to us the results, twenty-two dollars, with the request that the money be used in providing a Thanksgiving dinner for our little ones. May we bot hope that the memory of her thoughtful kindness to our children will be an element of Thanksgiving joy to herself? Gratefully, for the Association.

Salaries of Baseball Players Cut Deep.

THE OUTSIDE LIMIT IS $2,500.

Conservatism Spread Among the High Priced Beauties—Players to be Graded. The Weak Clubs and Smaller Leagues Will be Benefited.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The National League of Baseball clubs finished its labors last night. The League, after many hours of discussion, finally gave out a great scheme as an effort to place the weaker clubs on a par financially with the stronger clubs. This scheme has created a great sensation in the baseball world, and when it is thoroughly understood in all its bearings will cause a writing and reading of tee h among the ball players through all the country. For it is a scheme for equalizing and reducing the salaries paid to ball players and an effort to prevent the wholesale elimination of the minor leagues, which the present extravagant salaries in vogue is calculated to accomplish. The reduction is to be done by grading the players into classes, with stated salaries for each class; and in order to insure the carrying out of the plan in good faith by all parties, any violation of the rule will subject both the club and the player to severe penalties. The full text of the plan is shown in the amendments to the constitution, adopted by the League as follows:

Amend Section 22. Strike out second line to make it read as follows:

Section 22. All personal contracts between a club and its players shall be executed by the secretary of the League on behalf of such club and may be for a term of one or more years, to be followed within thirty days thereafter by a regular League contract, which, after registry, shall be transmitted to and shall bind and inure thereto transmitted to all other League clubs and all associations parties to the national agreement of professional baseball clubs, as follows:

Section 30. Strike out and insert:

The compensation of League players for services and expenses shall be limited, regulated and determined by the classification or grade to which each player is assigned by the secretary of the League after the termination of the championship season, as follows: Class A, compensation $2,500; class B, compensation $2,400; class C, compensation $2,300; class D, compensation $2,200, class E, maximum compensation $2,100. Provided, that no player shall receive any more compensation for the services and expenses of such club, as field captain or league manager.

In determining such assignment batting, fielding, base running and general baseball work and exemplary conduct both on and off the field, at all times shall be considered as a basis for classification.

Each player upon executing a League contract shall make affidavit in form prescribed by the secretary of League to the effect that the consideration proscribed in said contract includes all salaries, bonuses, rewards, gifts and emoluments of every kind and description except necessary or reasonably promised fare for his service as player, and that no violation of such contract and necessary proof to the secretary of the League in any false statement contained in such affidavit, or failure to make such affidavit, shall bar him from the ruling of the secretary he pressed by the board of directors of the League upon proper appeal, hearing and counter proof.

The president of each club shall, between the 20th and 30th days of October of each year, file an affidavit with the secretary of the League setting forth the full particulars as salary, bonus reward, emolument of and every other form of compensation expressed and implied, made to each player of his club for the season then ended, and for and during the season then terminated. A violation of the rule to compensation prescribed by the secretary of the League, or false statement

Thatch Fishing.

Mr. G. H. Mock, who resides near Cameron, says that Jarrell's lake, near there, is the best place to catch fish he ever heard of. That when the bream are in a biting notion any one can take a worm and rub it on his finger and hold it a bend in the water, and that the fish will come up and take hold of the finger, then by passing the thumb down on its head it can be taken in without any effort. This can be repeated until you become weary of the sport. Nothing could induce him to leave that section just now.—Sylvania (Ga.) Telephone.

THE FANCY WORK MAIDEN.

An' so you kinder wanter know why I broke off
It warn't because she warn't a good an' mighty purty gal;
For there ain't a blessed star in heaven shines brighter than her eyes,
An' her cheeks are jest like peaches on the trees of Paradise!

An' her smile is like the sunshine spit upon a flower bed,
An' her hair like sprootin' sunbeams on the garden sides of June;
An' her lip is like a singin' brook that bubbles as it passes,
Thro' shuck up tiger lilies and the purty smellin' grasses.

An' I told her that I loved her much as forty times a day,
But she hadn't much time to bother, an' kept on with her crowshay.
Was I plumped right down afore her, plumb upon my very knees,
She said, "Git off my ricrac, an' you're rumplin' up my fleas."

An' I tried to talk of love, an' things, an' told her I would die, Unless she smiled upon my soot. She simply said, "Oh, my!
You've have my purty duty down, an' hain't ye got no eyes?
You've tho'oughted them big feet o' yourn on them ar tapedries!"

An' she wore in big flamingoes, snipes an' turkeys on her rugs,
An' she painted puffer poodles on her mother's mouse jugs,
An' she painted purple angels on majesta colored pants,
An' five orange colored cherubs, with blue wings behind their backs.

An' when I talked of love an' stuff, she'd talk of rugs an' lamps,
An' me would I take my feet from off that Chiny vase,
I'd say, "My heart's love, O, be mine! be mine! an' wouldn't ye?"
She'd say, "You've got your elbows mired in that silk shade ye're on."

Now I'm goin' to Arizony for to do a cowboy's work,
Where I can't from civilization by the ends o' heavy work,
She her smile will allus haunt me, allus in my sight,
Blushed in hollow styles of stones, with a hole plum' out o' one knee.

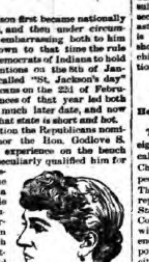
HARRISON GOSSIP.

HIS FIRST ROW BEFORE THE POLITICAL WORLD.

Some of His Personal Characteristics—His Home and His Family—The General Is Out Taking a Walk"—He Is Not Emotional.

Benjamin Harrison first became nationally prominent in 1876, and then under circumstances peculiarly embarrassing both to him and his party. Down to that time the rule had been for the Democrats of Indiana to hold their state conventions on the 8th of January—peculiarly called "St. Jackson's day"—and the Republicans on the 22d of February. The experiences of that year led both parties to adopt a much later date, and now the campaign in that state is short and hot.

At their convention the Republicans nominated for governor the Hon. Godlove S. Orth, whose long experience on the bench and in congress peculiarly qualified him for the post, but immediately after the convention a charge was made against him in connection with certain transactions in Venezuela of such a complicated nature that it would have taken all the campaign to explain them, and then the people would have been skeptical. So Judge Orth withdrew, and the committee substituted Gen. Harrison, who had held no higher civil office than that of reporter of the supreme court, and was almost unknown to most of the voters. Coming in as "second choice" and sneered at as a "kid gloved aristocrat," he suffered the additional disadvantage of being a candidate in the worst year, industrially and financially, that the state had ever known, and when all currents were against his party. Yet he made a "strong race." Then plainly of his opponent, "Blue Jeans" Williams, was very small, and Gen. Harrison at once took rank as one of the coming men of his party.



MRS. M'KEE.

It is just a little odd that Gen. Harrison should have been so vehemently denounced as an "aristocrat," for he was born in a log cabin, reared in a pioneer country, educated only by pinching economy, and has never been rich. In fact, he began married life with barely money enough to buy the necessary furniture, and was so poor for the following ten years that the small office of reporter of the supreme court was quite a boon to him. Of late years his successful law practice has brought him a competency. It is admitted, however, that he is not a "magnetic" in the sense that word is applied to politicians. He does not shine in conversation, and there is nothing at all effusive in his manner. With new acquaintances he is quite reserved.

MR. HARRISON'S LIBRARY.

As a lawyer he is extremely methodical—not at all eloquent. One never reads any quotations from his speeches in the reputed collections of oratory, nor do the people refer to any of his "brilliant efforts," as they do to those of Curtiss, Chamberlain, Erskine, Lamb, Beveridge, Nelson, "Dick" Thompson or other Indiana politicians, young and old. It is believed that all his speeches are written out in advance.

Personally he is as little like his illustrious grandfather as any other man might be. The latter was tall and spare almost to painful attenuation. The president-elect is the shortest man ever chosen to that office, rather stout in build, with fat cheeks and a broad, smooth forehead. His temperament seems more lymphatic than nervous, and one would say that his fate is that of a man not much disturbed by popular excitement or party clamor.

His domestic life is a model of quiet duty and enjoyment. His wife was a noted beauty in her day, and his married daughter, Mrs. McKee, is a lady of striking beauty. She has made her home with her parents for some time, and will go with them to Washington. Her boy is the pride and delight of the family, and will add a new feature of life to the White House, where the patter of childish feet has not lately been known. It is one of the odd facts of American history that every third president elected was children from Washington to Buchanan inclusive, and the record was only broken in 1876 by a contest so close that all patriots hope it may never be repeated.

IN THE HARRISON HOME.

Gen. Harrison's amusements are of the simplest, such as out-door and field exercises. "Croquet, golf or tennis" are words that have the reply to many anxious callers since the election. For a man of his mental activity he is comparatively an indoor man. His appearance on the streets was the signal for a demonstration; but since the jollifications ceased, he has resumed his habit of taking long walks, for which, by the way, so city in the nation has better facilities than Indianapolis. Outside of the business centers it is one wide, wooded suburban city of retired country seats, with elegant drives the convenients and handsome houses just far enough apart to give room for rural surroundings.

Gen. Harrison's residence, at No. 674 North Delaware street, is in no wise conspicuous, except that visitors have lately carried away the picket fence and damaged pavement, doorstep and front hall by extensive tramping. In doors are the usual parlor, back parlor, library, sitting room and dining room. To the first the great American public appeared to be welcome at all reasonable hours during the campaign; but for private consultations the library was reserved. It is no secret that the general was not enthusiastically confident of his own election, as he is not unreasonably elated over it. In short, the American people have chosen for chief executive a calm, cool, rather stemotional, cautious and conservative man.

THE CASE OF O. N. DENNY.

He Has Been Foreign Adviser to Corea's King, but Now He "Must Go."

The case of Judge Owen N. Denny, the foreign adviser of the king of Corea whose recall has been demanded by the viceroy of China, is not very well understood by most people. Corea is a dependency of China. There is a Chinese viceroy in Corea who represents the celestial emperor. The United States has treaties with both China and Corea, and in the first articles of its treaty with Corea it is distinctly stated, with reference to the United States, that "if other powers deal unjustly or oppressively with either government, the other will exert its good offices, on being informed of the case, to bring about an amicable arrangement, thus showing their friendly feelings."

The Chinese government has been accustomed to furnish the Corean king with a confidential adviser, of whom it was expected that he would not only advise the king as to his interests of Corea but also consistently with the interests of the Chinese empire. Mr. Denny occupies this position and was recommended thereto by the Chinese. He is a citizen of Oregon, though it is said that he has married a Corean wife. In 1887 he was appointed United States consul general to Shanghai, the salary attached to which position is $5,000 a year. In 1884 he was removed and returned to California, but was summoned to Corea by Li Hung Chang, the Chinese viceroy in Corea. He was then offered the position of adviser to the king, accepted and entered upon his duties.

Now Denny last February prepared an elaborate memorial in which he gave the status of Corean affairs and criticised the attitude of the Chinese government toward Corea. This was sent in confidential to Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, who laid it before the United States senate last August. It attracted the attention of the Chinese legation at Washington, who doubtless transmitted a copy of it to the Chinese government. Hence the demand for the recall of the king's adviser. Whether the king of Corea, having come to possess an adviser who stands by his interest, will consent to give him up, is a debatable subject.

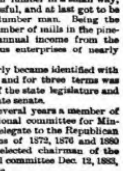
Judge Denny is a man about 55 years of age, broad shouldered, of medium height, with a florid face, and hair brushed straight back. He wears a low standing collar which exposes an inch or two of his chest; much of the time he wears the native costume.

As to the matter at issue Judge Denny claims that his memorial that he has promised the cordial support of the viceroy which has since been denied him. He then touches upon the dangerous ground China is trying to occupy the position to Corea that England is to Egypt, and in his communication by asserting that there is no doubt in the minds of Koreans as to who was the projector of the recent foul murders of foreigners committed on the streets of the capital.

HON. DWIGHT M. SABIN.

United States Senator from Minnesota. His Rise in the World.

It is said that Senator Dwight May Sabin, of Minnesota, who is rumored in some quarters to have declined to become a candidate for re-election to the United States senate, is a native of Illinois, having been born in Madison, Illinois county, in 1843. His father was a farmer on a large scale in Illinois, and the boy grew up on the farm, working in the fields during the season. In 1857, after the father's death, he was settled in Stillwater, Minn., being then about 20 years old. He began dealing in lumber in a small way, but was very successful, and at last got to be a very prominent lumber man. Being the owner of a large number of mills in the pineries, he enjoys an annual income from the profits of his various enterprises of nearly $2,500,000.



DWIGHT SABIN.

Senator Sabin early became identified with politics in his state, and for three terms was elected a member of the state legislature and two terms to the state senate.

He has been for several years a member of the Republican national committee for Minnesota, and was a delegate to the Republican national conventions of 1876, 1880 and 1888 respectively. Was elected chairman of the Republican national committee Dec. 19, 1888, by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Sabin was elected to the United States senate to succeed William Windom, and took his seat March 4, 1883, his term expiring March 3, 1889.

A Tendency to Monopoly.

Of newspapers Mr. Croly says: There is a tendency to monopoly in the newspaper world as in trade. A man comes to the front in a newspaper who has the natural business sense. He knows instinctively what readers want, and hence his journal gets the largest list of subscribers and the largest advertising patronage. The average New Yorker, for instance, in making out his list of newspapers, will have at his breakfast table the journal which he thinks is the soundest in its views on general topics, and which furnishes him with the news in the most attractive way. On leaving his daily business he will pick up that even-paper which gives the news of the day in a taking manner. Then the same head of the family has his trade journal, his religious and literary weekly, and perhaps a couple of monthly magazines. This is about as much reading as the average business man cares for, but on Sunday he has more time to read, and to the leading editions of all our papers in the leading cities furnish two or three times more matter—much of it of a miscellaneous character—than they do on week days.—New York Telegram.

HARRIET LANE JOHNSTON.

SHE WILL RESIDE IN WASHINGTON THE COMING WINTER.

How Different the Circumstances Under Which She Now Goes to the Capital from Those Which Surrounded Her When She First Went There.

Harriet Lane Johnston, almost as beautiful now, in her robes of widowhood, as when, in the days of James Buchanan, she was the courted of princes and the admired of queens, has taken a house in Washington for the winter and will probably make Washington her permanent home. It is curious, and not a little instructive, to think of the different circumstances under which she will again take up her residence, after over thirty years, at the national capital. She is now a woman past middle life; when she was last a resident of Washington she was in the prime of girlhood, and surpassingly beautiful. She was then frequently alluded to as the "American queen," and it was a rare occasion when her charms were not celebrated in the poets' corners of the daily newspapers. Nearly all her friends of those days have joined the great majority; even the birthplace of her fame, Washington, has so vastly changed that to this woman it must seem strange and new.

Little is heard of Harriet Lane now. Her day was before the present generation was born.

She is the niece of James Buchanan, and is one of the most distinguished women who ever graced the White House. She was educated within the walls of Old Visitation convent, which is still standing and educating at Georgetown. While her uncle was secretary of state under the Polk administration she spent Saturday and Sunday every month with him. At his house she was, when a mere schoolgirl, introduced to all that was best, most brilliant and distinguished in the nation. In this cosmopolitan society she acquired the grace and ease of manner which afterwards made her remarkable in Queen Victoria's drawing room, after leaving the convent school Miss Lane returned to her uncle's home at Wheatland, where she set up a household company, and occasionally visited the great cities.

HARRIET LANE JOHNSTON

Her fame dates from the time when, in 1852, Buchanan was sent to England as United States minister and she accompanied him.

Her success was instantaneous. She was the most popular American woman who had ever been known in the drawing rooms of London; admirers by the score hung upon her words; her wit was the fashion; her bon mots were repeated everywhere; the exquisite taste for which she has been always noted, was studied by half the titled women of London; her charms of mind and person made a decided impression on the queen herself, and the fair young American was the recipient of many distinguished marks of royal favor. She was but 18 years of age at this time. When last a child Her Royal Highness Prince of Wales, now fat and scant of breath, was infatuated with her, as he has often confessed.

Indeed, the fondness of the Prince of Wales for American dates from the time he first knew Harriet Lane. The famous incident concerning Miss Lane's presentation at court made the round of the globe, as well as the mother, warm friends of the young woman. On that occasion the ladies of the diplomatic corps had been marshaled in regular order by the lord chamberlain, and were awaiting the arrival of royalty, when a very ill bred English woman, married to a diplomat, deliberately took her place ahead of the American Lane and thereby not only greatly attracted the attention of the lord chamberlain. He came up, and she explained that, while her husband he was quite indifferent to the question of precedence, as the niece of the American minister she declined to yield her place.

The lord chamberlain promptly put the snobbish English woman back where she belonged, and Miss Lane's position was established for good.

When Harriet Lane returned to America, and shortly afterward became mistress of the White House, she was a fully matured and superb looking woman. She was a blonde. Her eyes were deep violet, and she was refined in toilet, speech and manner. She always avoided superfluous ornament in dress. Her complishments were many. She was a musician, painter, student and accomplished conversationalist.

The most interesting social event connected with the presidency of Buchanan was the visit of the Prince of Wales and suite to Washington in the autumn of 1860. This was the first occasion that an heir apparent to the English throne had visited the capital of the lost colonies. Miss Lane did the honors of the White House in queenly fashion, and when the prince returned to England he sent her a letter overflowing with grateful sentiments toward her for her cordial welcome. The most interesting circumstance of the visit was the presence of the great grandson of George III standing with bowed head before the tomb of George Washington, together with the president, Miss Lane and a large party of statesmen and ladies.

At the close of his administration Buchanan and his niece retired to Wheatland. Here Miss Lane remained until 1866, when she was married to Mr. Henry E. Johnston, a prominent Baltimore banker. The two had first met at Bedford Springs, Pa., in the golden days of youth. Her husband died some years ago, as did also her two boys, and since that time she has lived in the strictest seclusion. She has now no near relatives.

Turks Mourning Their Dead.

The moment life has departed from a Mussulman the women set up an unearthly wailing. As the depth and genuineness of their grief is measured by the quantity and volume of sound, the lungs are taxed heavily. In the case of a wealthy person numbers of professional mourners are engaged, and all night long the sound of their unearthly howlings is heard throughout the otherwise silent city. No more doleful music can be imagined than a company of Turkish women lifting up their voices in concert, when all other life and noise in a city has ceased for the day. Numbers of deaths naturally occur every day in a large city, and the more enlightened Turks have now awakened to the fact that the nightly lamentations of hundreds of women is a public nuisance. In Constantinople and Smyrna other means of mourning are used by the infidels, however, one is frequently startled in the middle of the night by their ghastly shrieks, which suddenly breaking loose near by.—Chic. Globe-Democrat.

THE BOSTON MASSACRE.

Boston Has Just Been Celebrating It by Erecting a Monument.

One hundred and eighteen years ago on the 5th of March next was shed the first blood in the conflict of the colonies of America with the mother country. Five citizens were at that time killed in an encounter with British troops. More than a century after the work these rebels began was finished the people of Boston have united in erecting a monument to their memory, and in commemoration of the beginning of a struggle which ended with the independence of the colonies.

Two British regiments had in 1768 been quartered on the people of Boston. The colonists were already much excited over the unpopular stamp act and were in no mood to endure the presence of soldiers.

The beginning of the affair was unimportant. A soldier was strolling by a ropewalk, and unluckily got into a row with the workmen employed there. The soldier got "licked." He went to the barracks, brought some other "redcoats," and together they thrashed the ropemakers and drove them through the streets. A crowd of citizens collected in the afternoon bent on vengeance on the soldiers; but it was Friday, and to two days it would be Sunday, and no Bostonian in that day would begin a work for the finishing of which there was not plenty of time before the Sabbath. They were bent on haunting the soldiers, but not on Sunday. So they waited till Sunday had passed, nursing their wrath in the meantime. Sunday was a day of long, religiously attended divine worship, they reassembled. They went at it early. Between 5 and 6 o'clock in the morning several hundred men, armed with all kinds of implements, assembled in Kings (now State) street, shouting that they would drive out the soldiers. They soon after had attacked some soldiers in Dock square. There was a good deal of shouting and crying of fire and alarming up of property; the citizens gloried into the streets in the wildest kind of commotion. This continued through the day, and before midnight the din of shouting, ringing of bells and rattle of musketry were a perfect bedlam.

Finally, as matters were quieting down, a tall man, Magistrate Dickes, in a white wig and scarlet cloak, suddenly appeared on the scene and commenced to harangue the crowd, concluding his remarks with the words, "To the main guard." The words were re-echoed by his listeners, and dividing in three divisions they went by different routes to the main guard. One of the divisions passing the custom house attacked a sentinel on post. He called on the main guard for protection, and Capt. Preston, the officer of the day, sent him eight men with unloaded muskets. A mulatto named Attucks, who was at the head of a party of sailors (who were pelting the soldiers immoderately), shouted to his followers to attack the main guard. The soldiers loaded and Attucks dared them to fire, the mob pressing all the more against the points of the bayonets. The discipline of soldiers is trained from firing without orders. Attucks and the mob, after they had knocked the muskets with their clubs and shouted to the mob to "come on." Meanwhile Capt. Preston came on the ground and endeavored to quiet matters. Attucks aimed a blow at his head, which the captain parried with his arm. The weapon was the first cousin of the bludgeon of the bayonet. At that juncture voices behind Capt. Preston shouted, "Why don't you fire?" A soldier struggling with Attucks, supposing it to be an officer, shot Attucks dead. Five other soldiers fired at intervals. Three citizens were killed, five wounded, and a few others slightly hurt. Crispus Attucks, Samuel Gray and James Caldwell were the killed outright. Samuel Maverick and Patrick Car received mortal wounds.

Boston was soon quieted down, but the "Boston massacre" became a horror throughout the colonies and went far to deepen the discontent with British rule.

It is in celebration of this event, and particularly of the part taken by Attucks, that the monument recently unveiled in Boston and here figured has been erected.

The monument is designed by Robert Kraus, of Boston. It is of Concord granite, 24 feet 4 inches high. On the face of the pedestal is a bas relief representing the celebrated "massacre." In the foreground is seen the body of Attucks. In the center is represented the old state house, and behind it the Old South church. Above the bas relief stands a statue of "Free America," at her side an eagle ready to fly. At the top of the shaft is a band of thirteen stars, beneath which is inscribed the names of the five victims. Below the bas relief is the date March 5, 1770.

Skillful House Feats in Japan.

At a recent Japanese dinner a foreign guest observed the juggler at work performing tricks about what the juggler did. He never let his glances be distracted, and was not once off his guard. Noticing this, the old juggler played his masterstroke. An immense porcelain vase was brought in and set in the middle of the room, and the juggler, crawling up, let himself down into it slowly. The company then sat for a half hour without taking their eyes from the vase that he had first been convinced was sound and free and stood on a firm bottom. After this prolonged watch the rest of the company assailed him with laughter and jeers, and pointed to his side, where the old juggler was seated, fanning himself, and had been so for some minutes. The skeptics were dumbfounded, and wished the trick repeated, but the whole company protested that it had had a fair chance to make the wizard and had failed.—Globe-Democrat.

JOTTINGS.

—Satins are going out of favor, but Tulip soup is coming in, say the manufacturers.

—We hope that all will unite in the nomination of Mayor Job Male. Let all do their utmost to honor our "Grand Old Man". Let every one attend the primaries.

—At the coming sale of the West End Literature Circle for the benefit of the Children's Home there will be fruits and jellies put up (or down) in jars by the ladies of the Circle.

—The commissions of thirty-two Presidential postmasters will expire during December. Altogether the commissions of seventy-five Presidential postmasters will expire before the 4th of next March.

—Mr. W. Hemmerich, a young German from Newark, will conduct the young men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms Monday evening. Good singing with orchestral accompaniment may be expected.

—Somerset Lodge, No. 43, I. O. O. F., conferred the first and second degrees at Somerville last evening. Delegations from White House, Plainfield and Bethlehem were present. The Plainfield Lodge conducted the work.

—The Post Office Department has given its approval of the proposed reduction of letter postage to one cent an ounce. The Department last year received $52,995,175 and spent $58,126,004, leaving a deficiency of 5,450,828.

—The almanac makers are authority for the statement that there will be five eclipses next year. The first is a total eclipse of the sun, which will occur New Year's day, at five o'clock five minutes in the evening, visible at the setting of the sun.

—"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is the Music Hall attraction this afternoon and evening. One of the bloodhounds with this company is said to be the largest in America. His owner claims that it weighs over 160 pounds and that it cost over $1,000.

—An exchange says that "a great many men will lose money this year by not having shoot to sell". Artemus Ward pursued the same line of thought when he ventured the remark that he narrowly escaped a serious wounding at the battle of Bunker Hill by not being there.

—If a no-license Common Council is wanted for next year it ought to be made known at the primaries Monday night. That does not necessarily mean a Council whose duty will be to grant licenses, but a Council which will not be under the control of the saloon rather than the people.

—Miss Helen Fuller, an accomplished young violinist from New York, is to be one of the attractions at the "Land of Nod" entertainment Thanksgiving evening at Music Hall. Madame Alberti has charge of affairs, and has arranged an interesting programme throughout. The seats are on sale at Field & Randolph and Shaw's drug stores.

—The Stetson "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company gave a parade this morning. The canines were were very handsome and are said to have cost $1,000 each. The parade included three drum majors and several bloodhounds. The Company have $5,000 in cash on deposit in one of Field & Randolph's show windows, as a guarantee that the show they give is the best of its kind ever produced in Plainfield.

—In this land of many good and many curious things there are papers devoted to the publication of advertisements of silly people who chose this method of looking for a wife or husband. In Plainfield there are a few people foolish enough to enter into the idea, and each week the mail brings issues of the papers which carries away a number of advertisements. In many cases the suave word, ing of the advertiser covers a mercenary scheme; and in nearly all the results are more and than pleasant. Through one of these matrimonial agencies an aged and uncomely widow of Brooklyn got $1,000 for a young husband. Her Henry of course obtained her cash—which was all he was after—, had a glorious spree, and now seeks another similarly gullible bride, as the other marriage has been annulled.

—"Here is a curious study in figures"—says The Buffalo Express.—"Multiply the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 by 45 and we get this result: 5,555,555,505. Reverse the figures thus, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1, and use the same multiplier, and we get another curious string, as follows: 444,444,445. Taking the same figures as a multiplicand and reversing the figures 45—54—we get an equally curious result: 6,666,666,000. Again reversing the multiplicand and using the same multiplier, makes the sum total all 3's, except the first and last figures, to wit: 3,333,333,334. You will perceive that the first and last figures put together make 54—the multiplier. Take the half of 54—27—or reverse 2 and 7 and use it as the multiplier and the result will be just as astonishing—all 6's or 7's. There is a witchery in these figures that I can't understand: can you?"

—The Superintendent of the Dead Letter Office of the United States Post Office Department, in his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30th, 1888, says that there were received at his office during the year 6,217,976 pieces of original dead mail matter, an increase of 882,519 pieces over last year. Of this number 4,800,615 were ordinary unclaimed letters; 18,947 bore fictitious addresses; 178,708 were returned from foreign countries as undeliverable. Of the number of pieces treated during the year, 746,413 were restored to the owners without opening. Of the number of pieces opened, there were enclosed 20,512 containing money amounting to $31,423; 3,497 containing postal notes amounting to $3,706; 28,398 containing negotiable paper, etc., amounting to $1,345,019; of less value, 37,619 containing miscellaneous paper etc.; 88,846 containing articles of merchandise, books, etc.

THE CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

An Investigation into the Cause of the Fire.

The Board of Underwriters inspected the Crescent avenue church about two weeks ago, and approved of the general precautions against fire They came here again about a week ago from New York at the request of Mr. John W. Murray, one of the Board of Trustees of the church and Vice-President of the German American Insurance Company, in which the church is insured. The Underwriters made some suggestions during their first visit which were promptly carried out.

Since the fire yesterday in the church causing a damage of from $6,000 to $8,000, an investigation to ascertain the cause of it has revealed that it was not, as was at first supposed, due to an over-heated furnace.

The cellar is divided into five sections separated from each other by brick partitions.

The first section underneath the "front of the church is used as a coal bin.

The second and fourth sections each contains a furnace, which heat the edifice. The section between is simply a passage. A pile of rubbish was allowed to accumulate in the second section, and by the side of it the ashes from the furnace were emptied. Some hot ashes dumped there yesterday set fire to the rubbish, and the communication with the building, which was saved only by the prompt action of the fire department.

The spectators at the fire were aroused at an order of Chief Doane, which it was thought needlessly endangered the lives of the firemen. The explanation of this act is given in the vote of thanks of the Board of Trustees, published elsewhere.

The Pastor Shut in a Closet.

While the firemen were fighting the fire at the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church, yesterday morning, the pastor, the Rev. W. R. Richards, joined in the work of saving portable property. While he was in a closet after books the door was closed, and a spring-latch held him prisoner. His outcries, however, soon brought release.

A Card of Thanks.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, held last evening, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Board of Trustees of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church for themselves, and for the people of the church, be extended to the firemen of the Plainfield Fire Department for their valuable services in extinguishing the fire which at one time threatened to destroy the whole church edifice. Also, The Board of Trustees of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church desire to express their thanks to Chief Engineer Thaddeus O. Dorne for his valuable services in conducting in person the arrangements for extinguishing the fire. Mr. Doane, being Master-Carpenter of the church, and knowing all parts where the fire could creep in and do damage, was thus enabled to render valuable aid in saving the main church edifice from being burned.

By order of the Board of Trustees,
CHAS. PLACE, Pres.
WM. F. ARNOLD, Sec. & Treas.

Fourth Ward Republicans.

At its regular meeting Friday night, Nov. 23d, the Fourth Ward Republican Club determined to keep up its organization and to make it a permanent club. Messrs. T. J. Carey, R. Mitchell, J. C. Manchester, C. Kirkham and Wm. Dukes were appointed a Committee on Permanent Organization; and Messrs. Louis De Camp, J. C. Randall and Wm. Wemhal were appointed the Committee on Rules and By-Laws.

Their next meeting will be held Nov. 30th, at Republican Headquarters, at 7:30 p. m. All are requested to attend.

Plainfield's Evening School.

All young men and boys who wish to join the evening school about to be opened by the Board of Education are asked to meet Miss Bulkley at the High School building on Fifth street, Monday evening, November 26th, at a quarter before eight. It is very important that all who intend to enroll their names as scholars should be present, as the establishment of the school will greatly depend on the the number present at this meeting.

PERSONAL.

—Mr. J. P. Segadlo's dancing class will not meet as announced next Thursday, as that is Thanksgiving; but will meet Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 28th, at the usual hours.

Mr. Walter L. Scott has been granted a new patent for an inking apparatus for printing-presses. Mr. C. W. Evans has secured a patent for a metal band for boxes.

The candidate on whom the degree Master Mason was conferred at Jerusalem Lodge, No. 36, Free and Accepted Masons, Wednesday night, was Mr. Lewis R. Blackford, of Grove street, North Plainfield.

Union County's Prosecutor, Mr. William R. Wilson, of Elizabeth, sailed Saturday for Europe on the Etruria. He goes on a legal matter which will occupy his time entirely while abroad, and he will be absent at least two months.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Gouverneur Timpson, who were married in Grace Episcopal church last week Thursday, were tendered a reception at the residence of Mr. Edward J. Waring, an uncle of the bride, at his home at Crescent and Myrtle avenues, North Plainfield, last evening. There was a fashionable attendance. Stephens' band was the caterer.

There was a most delightful reception given in Vincent Chapel last evening to the new pastor of the Methodist church, the Rev. Mr. Mitchell, and Mrs. Mitchell, who were cordially shaken by the hand by about every one present, and received many kind words. They have become very popular from the outset. In response to an invitation from the Rev. Dr. Hurlbut, the company present partook of refreshments provided by the ladies. The Rev. Mr. Mitchell will occupy the pulpit to-morrow morning and evening.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

What Religious Societies Will Do To-morrow.

Mr. S. A. Haines, of Netherwood, will be the speaker at Reform Hall to-morrow night.

Workers' meeting will be held at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-morrow at 9:30 a. m. Training classes at 9 a. m.

Sunday morning meeting at 9:15 and afternoon at 4 o'clock in Reform Hall. All are invited to attend. MRS. KIRK, Secretary.

Mr. W. Walter Smith, of Princeton, who is associated with Mr. K. P. Wilder in the "Student Volunteer Missionary Movement", will occupy the pulpit of the Congregational church to-morrow morning and will speak on the subject of Foreign Missions.

The Crescent avenue church will hold services to-morrow, Nov. 25th, in the Seventh-Day Baptist church, Central avenue, corner of Fifth street. Morning service at 10:30, Sunday school at 2:30. No service in the evening. The Rev. W. R. Richards, pastor.

In the Trinity Reformed church to-morrow there will be preaching by the pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. The subject in the evening will be "The Erudite Lawyer". A welcome is extended to all.

Mr. W. W. Scaith, of Princeton College, a student-volunteer for the foreign field, will speak on the subject of "Missions" at the First Baptist church to-morrow evening instead of at the Crescent avenue church as was announced yesterday.

THE SCOTCH PLAINS DIVORCE SUIT.

Alimony and Counsel Fee for Mrs. Illsley.

The Chancellor has refused to Mr. John H. Van Winkle, Special Master, the petition of Mrs. Illsley for alimony and counsel fee filed in her suit for divorce against her husband. Mr. Illsley keeps the DuBand Hotel at Scotch Plains and is well known in this city. He has made a stubborn resistance to the application for alimony and counsel fee, having employed Messrs. Jackson & Codington, and lawyer Cook of New Brunswick, to defend him. Mrs. Illsley's counsel is Mr. Craig A. Marsh. Several days were devoted to taking testimony. The Master heard argument of counsel on both sides last Saturday and to-day read his written opinion, which holds that the application of Mrs. Illsley should be granted, and that the husband should pay counsel for the wife a fee of $75, and contribute $3 per week from the beginning of the suit toward Mrs. Illsley's support.

New Jersey's Vote.

[From The Paterson Press.]

We have figured out the percentage of the total vote cast by each party in 1884 and 1888, which will show that the proportionate distribution of voters in this State has changed very little in the four years:

	1884.	1888.
Democratic	49.00	49.87
Republican	47.31	47.57
Prohibition	2.32	2.56
People's	1.37

The Prohibition loss from 1888, over ten thousand, proves the wisdom of the liquor legislation last Winter. On the vote for Congressmen the Democratic plurality is only 3,733.

No New Chimney Rock Road.

The Somerset County Chosen Freeholders appointed to review the action of the Surveyors of the Highway who laid the proposed new road from Bound Brook to Chimney Rock met at Boun.l Brook Tuesday. After going over the route they heard arguments pro and con and decided to vacate the road. If it had been laid out it would not only have been a shorter route but would have avoided the road along by the Middlebrook, which is often impassible because of high water and ice.

A Third Party Achievement.

[From The Elizabeth Journal.]

"The saloon is just as bad now as it was before election"—says General Fisk. Yes: it is very much worse. Before election it was held in check throughout New Jersey.

—A correspondent from Dover, N. J., informs us that the ice there is of a thickness to warrant good skating.

—Mr. H. R. Munger desires us to state that there was no reception, either formal or informal, given to his friends, Messrs. Sherwood and Stephens, at his residence Thursday evening.

—Some of our citizens claim to have discovered that under the law enacted last Winter to pay the Fire Department, this city may be bonded for other purposes as well. Judge Ulrich, who presented the bill, says he was not aware of it, if such was the case, and has promised, if he find that such is the case, to have the bill amended for the proper protection of the tax-payers. Meanwhile, it will be important to send no men to Common Council who are likely to be "on the make" (to use a vulgar impression), or who will be the tools of those who want some fat office made for their benefit at the public expense, resulting from a bonded debt. Let Elizabeth, Rahway and New Brunswick be warnings.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

The condition of George S. Knight, the actor, who is ill at his home at Orange, is improved.

Dr. G. W. Everett has been succeeded by E. D. Howell as editor of The Home Visitor, a Prohibition paper published at Clinton.

New Jersey liquor dealers cannot, under the new law, give their goods away Sunday. This was decided by a jury charged by Judge Kirkpatrick in the Essex Common Pleas Court last week Friday.

The Paterson Phelps Guards, named after Wm. Walter Phelps, and the oldest and strongest political organization in the city, have decided to go in a body to Washington on the occasion of President Harrison's inauguration.

A horse car on the Paterson City Railway narrowly escaped being smashed to atoms by a fast express on the Erie Railroad at the Market street crossing yesterday. The gates were not put down, and the driver of the car says the flagman gave no warning.

Workmen are laying the floor in the new State House, at Trenton. It will be of tile, and the designs are exceedingly beautiful. The centre piece in the Assembly floor is already completed and looks very handsome. The cement walks outside are nearly finished.

The Rev. P. A. Treacy, pastor of St. Paul's Roman Catholic church, Burlington, has issued a circular denouncing the performance of "Muldoon's Picnic" by a travelling dramatic company because the play contains the incident of the christening of an Irish baby by a Presbyterian minister.

Suit has been begun by Mrs. Henrietta Chandler, of Jersey City, against C. Chanfrau, against Clifton W. Tayleure, editor of The Long Branch News. Mrs. Chantrau bought the paper from Jacob Shultz about two years ago, and leased it to Tayleure for five years, he to receive half the profits and assume entire control. Mrs. Chantrau claims that she has never received her share of the profits, and has brought suit against Mr. Tayleure to have the lease annulled. Until this is done she asks that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the paper.

A frame stable in the rear of the Hamilton House, at Paterson, N. J., was burned late Thursday night. The building was the property of Mrs. George Oates and was worth about $600; no insurance. It was occupied as a back and livery stable by William A. Covenhoven. There were six horses and a cob in it, and all perished, together with several coaches and other vehicles. Only a lamentable mass of feed. Coventry places his loss at $5,000, about half insured. The origin of the fire is unknown. This makes three stable fires in Paterson within a year, in which a total of sixty horses have perished.

Two fires, believed to have been the work of incendiaries, occurred in Newark early yesterday morning. The one-story frame stable in the rear of No. 338 Warren street, owned and occupied by J. F. Cutty, was destroyed, with all its contents, including a horse and wagon. The loss is about $900. Shortly afterward, a two-story frame structure, No. 51 and 53 Golden street, used as a kindling-wood factory and stable, was discovered to be on fire. The flames spread to an adjoining dwelling, occupied by several families, who escaped in their night clothes. The factory and stable were destroyed and two horses burned. The dwelling was badly damaged. The loss is about $1,500.

BOUND BROOK'S LATEST NEED.

Citizens Agitating the Fire Department Question.

About twenty citizens met in the Republican Club room at Bound Brook Wednesday evening, in response to a call for a meeting published last week, to consider the subject of organizing a fire department for Bound Brook and Bloomington. Editor W. B. B. Mason was chosen Chairman, and David Hastings was made Secretary. The Chairman stated the object of the meeting and expressed his views on the subject, as did Messrs. R. A. Ross, R. H. Brokaw and others. Mr. J. A. Oldham, a member of the South Bethlehem fire department, told how they had started with a small sum as first and now had a department valued at many thousand dollars.

Mr. William Schure, in behalf of the Ivy Club, presented $50 to the fund, part of which was a donation from the Club and the rest represented half of the proceeds of the recent entertainment given by the Club. The meeting tendered a hearty vote of thanks for the efforts put forth by the Club on behalf of the town and for the handsome amount raised by that means. Mr. R. A. Ross was made Treasurer.

A committee consisting of Messrs. Fred. Pettengill, J. G. Smith, jr., George Carr, R. A. Ross and Frank Wheeland was appointed to solicit subscriptions for apparatus and building, and the meeting adjourned until Monday evening, December 3d, when the committee will report.

Mayor Male for Mayor.

There is a strong probability of the Democrats uniting on Mayor Male as a candidate for re-election. Should they do this, it will be an act deserving of the highest praise. His character and services fully entitle him to so distinguished an honor as the nomination by both the Republican and Democratic parties, and would be a fitting climax with which to grace the closing years of his life.

There is talk of a citizens' ticket with Mr. Male for Mayor, but we trust such a step will not be necessary, as we are sure it will not be if all good citizens attend the primaries and see to it that proper delegates are chosen.

We feel that we but express the sentiments of the representative masses of all parties in thus speaking of the man we should all delight to honor.

It is surmised by some that there may be those who will try to manipulate the primaries, to enable them to defeat the will of the people, but we think there are enough good citizens to prevent such a thing, if all will attend to their duty in this respect as American citizens, even if there should be any occasion for such a surmise, which we do not think is the case. Let all unite on Mayor Male for Mayor.

A Vote of Thanks.

At a regular meeting of the Fourth Ward Republican Club a vote was taken thanking each and every one who so nobly assisted in making the Club a success, and who so generously contributed to its support. It was also resolved that a copy of this action be sent to THE EVENING NEWS for publication.

Death from Heart Disease.

BOUND BROOK, N. J., Nov. 24. (Special.)—Mr. John K. Field, who lived along the Raritan river, Franklin township, while on his way to Bound Brook, yesterday forenoon, just as he was crossing the Central Railroad, spoke to the flagman about feeling ill. He was told to sit down in the shanty to rest. When the flagman stepped to his side after stopping a train he found Mr. Field was dead. Deceased was a brother to Richard and James Field, of this place, and was quite old.

Monmouth Wants Local Option.

FREEHOLD, N. J., Nov. 24.—The temperance people of Monmouth county, nearly 500 strong, met here yesterday in convention. Delegates, many of them ladies, were present from eleven out of sixteen townships comprising the county. It was decided to endeavor to secure for the county the benefits of the recently-enacted local-option law. To this effect petitions will be presented to the court at once, when an election to decide for or against local-option will be ordered. It has been decided that no such special election can be ordered by the court to take place before next May. The new law provides that the election must not be held within 60 days of a general election, nor fixed for less than three nor more than six months from the time the application is granted. The Spring election has been decided to be a general election within the meaning of the law.

—A new way of annealing small pieces of steel is given by a writer in The English Mechanic. "Heat the piece as slowly as possible and when at a low red heat put it between two pieces of dry boards and screw them up tight in a vice. The steel burns its way into the boards, and they, on cooling together around it, form a practically air-tight charcoal bed. When it cools off the steel is apt to be thoroughly annealed."

Flattering Farewell to the Sackville-Wests.

MR. HAWLEY FEARS TROUBLE.

He Thinks the Democrats May Control the House and the Republicans Organize the Independently—Cabinet Rumors and Speculations.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Lord Sackville, the late British minister, accompanied by his wife, children and housekeeper, left the Baltimore and Potomac station for New York. They were temporarily placed in the waiting car "Imogene," but were to be transferred to the Pennsylvania railroad Limited express, which had been assigned for their use. Many members of the diplomatic corps were at the depot. The Misses West were freely inundated with flowers, which were of course carried into the car as soon as they were beckoned. Each wore a corsage bouquet of huge dimensions, and successfully shielded the face from curious gaze.

A large attendance of the ladies of the diplomatic circles, who were present to bid the party good-by, exhibited considerable feeling at the parting. Amid a flu terring of handkerchiefs and a waving of hats the train pulled out, Lord Sackville and the Misses West standing on the platform bowing their farewell.

Three baggage wagons were required to move the trunks, boxes, chairs, etc., to the depot. They were closely guarded and checked by the attaches of the legation. The trunks were all conspicuously labeled: "Lord Sackville."

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain departed for New York upon the same train, and will sail upon the same steamer with the Wests.

He was accompanied to New York by Mrs. Endicott and Mr. William Endicott, Jr. The Misses Sackville-West expressed a strong hope that they might return to this city at no distant day.

SENATOR HAWLEY'S FEARS.

Senator Hawley said yesterday that he had not the least doubt that the Republicans had lost the House, but that he expected, or rather feared, that the Democrats would steal it.

The situation will probably remain unchanged until the certificates are issued. The most serious part of the affair arises upon the possibility of the Democrats having a majority of three. He believed that, according to law and usage, the Republicans will not permit the House to organize the next house without resistance. There have been talk of withdrawing and perfecting an organization of their own under these circumstances. Many Democrats, however, are disposed to regard it as to their advantage to be in the minority, and are especially opposed to any further resistance to the admission of new states into the Union.

MR. CANNON IN WASHINGTON.

Representative Joseph Cannon, of Illinois, one of the candidates for speaker of the next House, is a Republicans should have a majority of members and control the organization, arrived in Washington yesterday. To a representative of the United Press Mr. Cannon said: I support in Indianapolis to see John Sherman and pay my respects to him, but my visit had no political significance. I had no conversation with me Gen. Harris in did not connect himself in any way; in fact I do not think he has much time to think about his cabinet or anything else at present. I do not think he has considered the question of cabinet at all. The session of congress, and the country not organize the house for a year, is an idle one. I think, for the discussion of the subject.

WHILE DRAWING NEW CABINET CANDIDATES.

The latest speculation about the cabinet of President Harrison suggests J. A. Kasson, of Iowa, for secretary of state. Gen. Kasson was minister to Austria and Minister Morrow at Berlin, where he was succeeded by Mr. Pendleton.

The most prominent on foot, which is receiving the cordial support of a number of several cabinet, is looking to the appointment of Hepree Caleb Bardlle, of Maine, as secretary of the navy in the new president's cabinet. Mr. Bardlle was an officer in the late war, and naval secretary during the war, has been and is now a member of the house committee on naval affairs, and in the debates on congress took a leading position in opposing the Garfield appropriation bill. Gen. Harrison will undoubtedly be pleased to have naval officers, and Mr. Bardlle is a strong Whitney man who will be pleased to appoint naval officers.

The friends of Senator Dolph are pressing him for appointment as secretary of the interior.

ABOUT PNEUMATIC GUNS.

Capt. Zalinski was in consultation with the chief of ordnance about pneumatic guns and dynamite projectiles. The American iron company, of New York City, of John Peyton, president, that is operating Leon. Gravel at Plattsburgh, and Admiral Ammen's war vessel, are also looking to the appointment of Hepree Caleb Bardlle, of Maine, as secretary of the navy in the new president's cabinet. Capt. Zalinski was in consultation with the chief of ordnance about pneumatic guns and dynamite projectiles. The American iron company, of New York City, of John Peyton, president, that is operating Leon. Gravel at Plattsburgh, and Admiral Ammen's war vessel, are also competitors for furnishing guns for naval and coast defense, and for coast and harbor defense. Drawings and specifications of their dynamite weapons at various times have been submitted to Secretaries Whitney and Endicott, as well as to the engineers and fortifications board, of which Gen. Gillmore is president.

The army appropriation bill this year authorizes the expenditure of $445,000 for the purchase of dynamite guns, and the war department is now considering the proposals for furnishing them, and lively competition between the companies operating the Gravelet and Zalinski guns is expected.

YELLOW FEVER RAGES.

The Marine hospital has received a telegram from surgeon Ross, dated Fernandina, Nov. 20, stating that Theodore Fairbanks, one of the crew of the schooner Hattie Rollins, was attacked by fever. An engine was sent out to bring him to the hospital at Fernandina for treatment.

The dispatch says there have been about 1,200 cases and about 38 deaths in Fernandina this summer. "The rule," says Dr. Ross, "is one death to ten cases, with exceptions, a few of which have had yellow fever in former epidemics have not had fever this year, and no person, I believe, has had more than one attack."

Surgeon Hutton telegraphs from Camp Perry that he has closed the yellow fever station there for the season, there being no patients there.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS.

During October past 40,393 immigrants arrived in this country, against 44,170 in October, 1882. Of the number furnished the greatest number, 10,166, England and Wales, 7,477; Ireland, 3,833; Sweden and Norway, 4,852; Germany, 5,795, and Scotland, 2,004.

Strikers Mean Business.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 24.—The strike of the operators on the Bee line railroad, which began Wednesday night, when 200 men left their posts, was extended this morning to-night, the strikers blockading the Bee line, but the yard masters had been retained at work, and the company claims that it cannot only get enough of twenty-five days' experience to fill the places of the regular men, but that it can draw from the Pennsylvania lines.

GONE TO THE JURY.

The Hibbard-Fry Case Finished and is Awaiting the Verdict.

BEAVER, Pa., Nov. 24.—Eager listeners crowded the court room while the attorneys in the Hibbard-Fry breach of promise case made their arguments. Attorney Dougherty, for the defense, ridiculed Mrs. Hibbard's testimony at every point.

Of Mr. Hibbard he said: "She stands in the position of a woman who asked a man to marry her, and when that man has refused goes him because she has damaged her own affections. The standard by which he is to be tried there was any agreement of marriage between them; the only question being, who told the truth."

While Attorney Dougherty was speaking Juryman Job was taken violently ill, and had to be removed from the court room. After some delay counsel agreed to go on with eleven jurors in the box. Attorney Harran followed his colleague. During his concluding remarks reviewing plaintiff's testimony Mrs. Hibbard showed evidences of embarrassment. When he remarked that there would be about as much sentiment in Fry's holding a lock of hair and coming out in the "holding of pigs' feet with a pair of tongs" she hid her eyes behind her handkerchief. Later, when Mr. Harran began to pull the skeleton of carrie married Fry from the closet Mrs. Hibbard became manifestly nervous and took notes of his insinuations.

Attorney Cunningham made a vigorous argument for the plaintiff, and closed at 4:30 o'clock. The judge made a short charge, turned the case over to the jury and adjourned court.

NEW YORK AND NEW HAVEN.

Statement Showing the Great Progress Made by the Road.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 24.—The annual report of the operations of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company for the past year show that the gross earnings were $9,970,939; total expenses, including rentals of leased lines and interest on bonds, $8,370,317; net earnings, $1,653,719. Dividends amounting to 7 per cent. have been paid during the year; $360,979 was spent last year toward four-tracking the road, and $1,019,877 in doing away with grade crossings. The new station at Hartford cost $175,000. Six thousand tons of steel rails were purchased during the year.

The constantly increasing traffic of the company has outgrown existing facilities, and larger expenditures have been made to meet the public demand for the best service. According to the report of Receiver Bridgen at New London, a double track on the Shore line will be necessary. The New York division needs four tracks as soon as they can be provided. Grade crossings must be abolished and passenger terminals improved, even at great expense. But the company should not be called upon to furnish these improvements by adding to its debt. It seems wise to provide them, a nd proper to pay for them, by an increase of the capital stock as money is needed.

The total capital stock and funded debt is $85,419,000. The total train miles 3e was 6,628,547 miles, carrying 11,885,832 passengers and 3,109,116 tons of freight. The gross income for all the divisions is $426,598, larger than of all the property reported separately last year.

JUDGE RUCKER AMUSED.

He Says That President Cleveland Virtually Called Blackburn a Liar.

DENVER, Nov. 24.—A reporter of the New York Sun yesterday afternoon visited Judge Rucker at his country residence, Rucker-dale, and showed him a copy of the interview with President Cleveland published in The Washington Post, in which the president most positively denied having used the language attributed to him by Judge Rucker. Judge Rucker read and reread the interview, and then said:

"Now is there anything more amusing than this? Is it possible that Cleveland called his intimate friend Blackburn a liar, who, as you will remember, corroborated in part my statement that Cleveland was an interview in which the contest in New York was referred to? I don't believe a word of it. Another thing, this dispatch goes on to say that he [illegible] Gen. Harrison had put me on the day in question, which has never before been disputed

"In regard to the other two persons present at the meeting, I have decided that under no circumstances ever to divulge their names. Since there has been no answer to my open letter of a week ago, I can hardly expect one at this late day. But I expect to hear privately from Senator Blackburn. In case his letter is in any way an expansion of the statements in the Post I shall make it public, but if my challenge is accepted I shall remain a secret. I am daily in receipt of letters from parts of the country commending the course I am taking."

A Newspaper Robbed.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—O'Carlton Sands, counsel of The Daily News, has not been seen at his desk since Wednesday last at 11 a. m., and the police are investigating some peculiar private affairs in Brooklyn. Sands did not report for business Thursday, and Colonel Thompson, the publisher, sent to his house, 346 Bedford avenue, Brooklyn. The laundry informed the messenger that Sunday had eaten his breakfast there in the morning, and had been lying in the office. Subsequently the laundry-man, Charles Bryan, said that this statement was false, and that Sunday had not been at home since Wednesday. This statement caused the colonel to make an investigation. So far as known Sunday has got away with about $10,000. Col. Brown and Sands were aware of Sunday's peculations for some time, and endeavored to make an investigation. The cashier heard of it, and has undoubtedly left for Canada. He has been cashier of the paper for ten years, and up to last spring was believed to be strictly honest. Sunde lived beyond his means.

Bedell Gets Twenty-five Years.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—Forger James E. Bedell, the real estate clerk of Shipman, Barlow, Lawrence & Ward, who stole $250,000 and spent most of his dishonest gains in gambling, policy playing and dissipation, was taken up for sentence before Recorder Smyth, in the general sessions court, yesterday morning. His eyes were hollow and lusterless and a black circus was around them, but he appeared to be the last of justice with a nonchalant air. There was a nervous twitch to the muscles about his mouth which he tried hard to control. When Recorder Smyth spoke the words which sent him to state prison for twenty-five years and four months he was on the point of breaking down.

Milton's Windfall.

BOSTON, Nov. 24.—By the will of Isaac W. Nute the town of Milton is to receive $5,000, to be expended in keeping the cemetery in repair. Harvard college, maintenance and support of the common school in Milton, and the remainder to the Orthodox Congregational church, $10,000 for the support of preaching; $10,000 for the support of the Unitarian society in Milton; $10,000 for the church on Mt. Nebo farm, and $20,000 to support the same; $20,000, after the termination of a life interest, to the Massachusetts general hospital; part of the poor. Mr. Nute also agrees to pay $10,000 for maintenance and support of the common school in Milton, and $20,000 to the Orthodox Congregational church; $10,000 for the support of preaching; $10,000 for the support of the Unitarian society in Milton; $10,000 for the church on Mt. SEMI OFFICIAL WARNING.

Significant Words of Harrison's Private Secretary.

CIVIL SERVICE FULLY APPROVED

The Clean Sweepers Are Cautioned Not to Be Too Sanguine—A Probably Inspired Editorial Written by Mr. Halford—Office Seeking Discouraged.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 24.—Upon one after another of the questions of executive policy The Indianapolis Journal, whose editorial writer is Private Secretary Harrison's private secretary, sounds a warning and suggestive note.

On the utter silence of Gen. Harrison upon all these matters there can be no more significant indication of the trend of his opinions than the editorials Mr. Halford writes. He has been Gen. Harrison's companion on the political stump. In all his canvasses for the governorship, senatorship and presidency, Halford has been in his confidence, and at his elbow. The electors of Hilford upon the subjects as civil service reform and other issues are set great store by here, and office holders and office seekers read the utterances in the Journal. "Civil Service Reform Just a Clean Sweep," with conspicuency or discretion, according to whether they were in or wanted to be.

To this end the article says, "the doctrine and practice of 'to the victors belong the spoils,' which created a necessity for civil service reform. The movement di d not come any too soon. It has been made more or less odious by hypocritical professions and by ex-ssiffian pretenses as not the fault of the movement itself. The movement is essentially right. Civil service reform in its true sense, that is, in the sense introducing an element of stability into the civil service, and conducting it on a basis of merit and efficiency, has not been a political question. The Republican clean sweepers should not be unreasonable in their demands on the next administration. The Democrats made that mistake four years ago, and Republicans should profit by their example. The more unreasonable the demands and expectations in this regard the greater the shock by disappointment, and of the encouragement of party weakness. Those who make it forget that the Republican party is fully committed by the platform pledges to civil service reform, and that Gen. Harrison has declared himself in full sympathy with it. They forget that the clean sweeping cry of the campaign was not a cry for plunder in the indictment against the Democratic party, and the consequent demoralization of the public service was one of the principal causes of its defeat. If there is any hope for Republicans, the Republican party is pledged to undiscrimination in removals from office as well as to give fit and faithful service."

After remarking what offices are and are not included under the civil service law, the writer concludes: "From what has been said it is evident that the many things to be taken into account in connection with the demand of the clean sweepers, and if they will recognize the necessities of the situation. One thing they can rest assured of, the president-elect is as old and earnest a Republican as any of the sweepers can be desired on to do the very best thing for the party, as well as for the country."

SHERMAN AND THE CABINET.

Significant Meeting That He Does Not Want to Be a Member of It.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 24.—The politicians were all gossiping here by the announcement that Gen. Sherman, of the Harrison firm had gone to Cincinnati and that there met Congressman Grosvenor and Ben Butterworth. Grosvenor is John Sherman's friend, and the significance was added to the meeting in that Butterworth had no idea of going into the cabinet. The object of the appointment to Fraker would open the way for a settlement of many vexatious differences between Sherman and Foraker. The settlement of vexatious differences of this sort is the darkness that only begins the attention of Benjamin Harrison ab at this time, and accordingly private affairs in Brooklyn. While all not leave for business Thursday, and Colonel Thompson, the publisher, sent to his house, 346 Bedford avenue, Brooklyn. The laundry informed the messenger that Sunde had eaten his breakfast there in the morning, and had been lying in the office. Subsequently the laundry-man, Charles Bryan, said that this statement was false, and that Sunde had not been at home since Wednesday. This statement caused the colonel to make an investigation. NEW YORK'S OFFICIAL VOTE.

The Plurality of the Harrison Electors Declared to Be 14,375.

ALBANY, Nov. 24.—The state board of electoral canvassers began work in the secretary of state's office yesterday. Seven incomplete returns were received by the county returns, and it was thought they would have to be sent back. It was finally decided, however, to correct the returns, and the board completed its labors and adjourned sine die. The result, giving the highest number of votes received by any elector and the lowest, is as follows:

	Highest.	Lowest.
Republican	562,37	562,362
Democratic	535,987	535,988
Prohibition	30,031	30,031
Socialist	2,616	2,616
Union Labor	2,337	2,337

On the United Labor ticket Ralpath and Wilder, electors at large, received many more votes than the remainder. Ralpa h received 3,066 and Wilder 2,841, and on the rest of the ticke the highest was 339 and the lowest 307.

The vote on governor, lieutenant governor and judge of court of app als will be canvassed to-morrow. On president the vote of Kings county, as canvassed, was: Democratic, 87,898, and Republican, 36,057; New York, 122,783, and 71,281, and Richmond, 13,163. The officials report the vote of Hudson sections over the Cleveland electors in the state is 14,3 2. On these receiving the lowest number of votes the Republican plurality is 12,909.

GEN. PALMER LEAVES THE G. A. R.

Too Much Politics in It, He Says—Some Reasons Given.

CHICAGO, Nov. 24.—The news of Gen. Palmer's withdrawal from the Grand Army of the Republic was something of a surprise to most of the members here. The communication to Stephenson post, No. 20, announced at a meeting Thursday night, was: Comrade John McAuley Palmer has asked for and received an honorable discharge from the order.

Gen. Palmer, who was the candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket in the recent election, was the first department commander of Illinois, and was the senior officio commander in chief for the United States. It is said that he bases his withdrawal upon an alleged violation of the constitution and ritual, charging that the order has been perverted to political purposes.

The general's statement is more emphatic. He says: The Grand Army has been, and is now, a political machine. Comrade

Only One Case on Record.

The late William Warren was a wit as well as a comedian. Dresher Welch's bright little paper, The Theatre, relates that on one occasion Mr Warren was asked why he did not go more into society.

"Why should I?" he asked.

"Because," was the reply, "everybody wants to meet you. If you would only give us a chance we would be delighted to lionize you."

"Oh, well," he said, "it's much better as it is; I never knew of but one man who was not spoiled by lionizing."

"Who was he?"

"The prophet Daniel."—Detroit Free Press.

At a Whist Table.

"Whose deal is it?"
"Who dealt last?"
"You, didn't you?"
"I don't know."
"Oh, it's Mr. B's deal."
"Why, so it is?"
"What's trumps?"
"Diamonds."
"Diamonds! Well, if I ain't got the awfullest hand."
"Well, I, but haven't got a thing."
"I never did have quite such awful luck."
"Whose play it?"
"Let me see, what's trumps?"
"Diamonds."
"Oh, so it is; how stupid of me to forget."
"It's your play."
"Oh, is it? What led?"
"Spades."
"Let me see, now—um—un—spades led and diamonds are trumps?"
"Hurry and play."
"Oh! if you didn't have ten trumps."
"Who took that trick?"
"You mean thing."
"Oh-oh! if you didn't make four! You're horrid! Whose deal is it?"
Then they say it all over again.—Time.

In a Nutshell.

Ella Wheeler composed one of her poems while rocking her baby brother to sleep in his cradle. This accounts for the rocky nature of the meter of the poem.

The crown prince of Greece dislikes publicity, and often travels in third class railway coaches. In this respect he shares to some degree the peculiarities of the American tramp.

Lord Tennyson calls Mary Anderson "a living, breathing poem." If she is a poem, she is one that no sane unmarried editor would reject.

A Indiana man has a brindle dog that can climb a tree. That man's daughters must stand a mighty poor show of getting married.

Women can't vote, except for school committee; but they can veto, as suffering men unfortunately know.—Somerville Journal.

First Principles of Trade.

Jake—Mrs. Growler wants two more yards of that cloth she bought here yesterday, but she says we charged her ten cents more than Weal & Co.

Dealer—How much did they charge her?

Jake—Sixty cents, and we've been getting seventy for it.

Dealer—Well, why don't she buy it at Weal's then?

Jake—They haven't any; nobody in town has it except us.

Dealer—How much did you say it was a yard?

Jake—Seventy cents.

Dealer—And she wants two yards more?

Jake—Yes.

Dealer—Nobody else has it?

Jake—Nobody.

Dealer—Well, let her have it for ninety cents, then.—Detroit Free Press.

No More Browning.

"Are you going into the Browning club business as steep this winter as you did last, Kate?" asked Miss Chicago of her friend Miss St. Louis.

"Not for a long shot," replied Miss Kate, emphatically. "A reaction has struck our Browning club, as I knew it would. We've voted to choose Browning and have some of our good, old fashioned taffey pullings and cotillon and euchre parties this winter. How we ever got drawn into that Browning craze is a mystery to me, anyhow."—Time.

Jimmy's Experiment.

Jimmy went to the fair grounds and saw a balloon inflated with gas. Upon his return home his experiment upon Samuel (the youngest) was a perfect success.—Life.

No Man for the Place.

First Honest Dealer—I see that Jim Goodman is no longer in your employ.

Second Honest Dealer—No; I discharged him a week ago.

First Honest Dealer—Didn't take hold well, did he?

Second Honest Dealer—Oh, yes; first rate.

First Honest Dealer—Then why did you discharge him?

Second Honest Dealer—Because he always persisted in getting off the load when it was being weighed.—Yankee Blade.

The English We Use.

"Naomi, there is one reason why everybody should admire you."

"And what is that, George?"

"You use only pure English. So many young ladies have that detestable habit of Americanizing their sentences with slang. Don't you abhor it?"

"Well, yes, it does make me rather tired."—Lincoln Journal.

Winter in Iceland—How the Icelander Passes the Dark Season.

Mr. W. H. Carpenter says of an Iceland winter: "This season for the Icelander is a time of comparative rest. As nothing can be done abroad, its stays of necessity at home, but his life is no more hibernation. He sleeps a great deal, but this he takes in sufficiently lighted and the nights are long, but by daylight he has occupations enough. He has boots to build and oars to shape; saddles and harness to make or mend; or he sorts the wool which the women spin into yarn and then knit into stockings, or weave into coarse homespun or flannel, like wadmal. A busy, whirring sound of wheels often greets the ear when you enter the farmhouse, and you find the women all at work at one end of the long room. Another duty devolves on the hands of the household at isolated farms. There are good elementary schools in many places throughout the island, but in remote districts the children must be taught at home. In summer the time is occupied with out of door work, but in the comparatively idle days of winter the father, or not infrequently the mother, teaches the children of either sex the common branches. Iceland is perhaps the best educated community on the face of the earth; throughout the length and breadth of the land there is nobody who cannot read and write, and the general knowledge of some of these obscure fishermen-farmers is truly well nigh appalling.

Indian Reservations.

The Indian reservations in the United States are the Mauak and Quinailt, the Columbia, the Colville and Yakima, in Washington territory; the Biletir, Warm Spring, Umatilla and Klamath, in Oregon; the Round Valley, Hoopa Valley, Yule River and Mission, in California; the Hualpai, Colorado, Yuma Mill, Pima and Maricopa, Papago, White Mountain, Moqui and Navajoe, in Arizona. The Jicarillo, Zani and Mescalero, in New Mexico. The Uintah and Uncompaghre, in Utah. The Walker River, Duck Val and Pyramid reservations, in Nevada. The Shoshonee, in Wyoming. The Cour d'Alene, Nez Perces, Fort Hill and Lemhi, in Idaho. The Flathead, in Montana. The Gros Ventre and Mandan, Fort Totten, Turtle Mountain, Sisseton, Yankton and Crow, in Dakota. The Winnebago and Niobrara, in Nebraska. The Cheyennes and Arrapahoes, Creek, Cherokee, Choctaw and Chickasaw reservations, in Indian Territory. The Red Lake, White Earth, Chippewa and Fon du Lac, in Minnesota, and the La Point Menominee and Oneida Indian reservations, in Wisconsin.

No Votes in District of Columbia.

It is asked why the inhabitants of the District of Columbia have no votes. It is because, while they had votes, the district was badly managed; the people voted away great sums of money which the United States largely paid, and everything got to be at a stake and a-row. When in 1874 the United States assumed the debt it was also decided that, as the district depended on congress, congress should manage it through a board of commissioners, as the matter stands now. The people of the district, owing to the complications arising from the small size of the territory and the presence of "the government," couldn't run things properly, and so congress is running them. That the district people should have no vote is an anomaly in this country; but as there are comparatively few residents the number of persons disfranchised is not so large as at first sight it seems.

Translations of the Bible.

Only one Bible has ever been translated into English; but many translations have been made, some from the original Hebrew and Greek and some from other translations. An English version of the Psalms was made in 1290; Wickliffe translated the New Testament in 1380, and the Old Testament by Purvey and John Trevisa; and Wickliffe's translation in 1388, and in 1525 William Tyndale printed his version of the New Testament. Coverdale's Old Testament came out in 1535. Matthew's Bible, Cranmer's and the Great Bible followed. In 1560 and 1576 appeared the Bishops' Bible; in 1611 appeared the old version, and in 1880 the revised New Testament, followed in 1885 by the revised Old Testament. The Douay Bible was finished in 1609.

The Noise of a Great City.

James Russell Lowell says of the noise of London:

"I confess that I never think of London, which I love, without thinking of that palace which David built for Bathsheba, sitting in hearing of two hundred streams, streams of thought, of intelligence, of activity. One other thing about London impresses me beyond any other sound I have ever heard, and that is the low, unceasing roar one hears always in the air; it is not a mere accident, like a tempest or a cataract, but it is impressive, because it always indicates human will and impulse, and conscious movement: and I confess that when I hear it I almost feel as if I were listening to the roaring loom of time."

Kerosene.

In 1846 Abraham Gesner made oil from coal in Prince Edward Island, and was the first to give it the name kerosene. As early as 1826, however, a patent was granted for the extraction of oil from bituminous substances, such as shales, coals, asphaltum, etc. No practical results appear to have followed the discovery. Experiments continued experimenting for more than a hundred years, but their oils were principally used for medicinal purposes, and the first patent for the application of these oils to illuminating purposes appears to have been granted in 1852. It is difficult to determine in what year the oil was first used as an illuminant.

Lady Brassey.

Lady Annie, wife of Sir Thomas Brassey, died at sea, on board the yacht Sunbeam, on the outward bound voyage for Australia, Sept. 14, 1887. Regarding this and event, The Literary World says, "The picture of that white winged ship of pleasure, skimming the Pacific on its distant way, pausing a moment to drop beneath the waves the body of her who had been the life of all its motion, and then heading on towards the eastern horizon, like a body without a soul, is an impressive one."

Two Bible Words.

The words "selah" and "mizpah" are Hebrew and occur in the Scriptures. The former is of doubtful meaning, occurring frequently in the Psalms. It is supposed to signify silence or a pause in the music of the song, and again to signify that special attention is to be given to what follows.

"Mizpah" signifies "The Lord watch between you and me, when we are absent from one another."

Water White in Motion.

The method of taking up water by locomotives while in motion is as follows: The water is in a trough between the rails, and a side scoop is let down from the tender. This scoop up the water as the locomotive is passing its full time over the track.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

New Upholstery Fabrics of Exquisite Coloring—The Table Laid a la Russe.

Many and marked are the novelties in this season's upholstering fabrics. As described by Decorator and Furnisher, the more brilliant combinations of primary colors have been altogether done away with, and in their place we have tints and tones that in contrast with the shades formerly seen, look dull and dull.

DESIGN FOR PORTIERE.

Among new things in market is a very thick, fine, long pile, printed plush. The pile is entirely of silk, and the material is said to be more durable than any plush ever put on the market. The grounds are in various colors, a delicate cream shade with old rose figures being among the most attractive.

An attractive new material is in dull plush in cut and frise surface. These goods are brought out in all of the popular colors, and are among the most durable of all plush surfaced materials.

Plushes are in very general use for medium to high class furniture. They are now rarely used by themselves, but are combined with tapestries and various corded fabrics, and occasionally with plain satin. The new printed velours are exceedingly pretty and stylish. The surface is very slightly pressed, giving it none of the mussy effect so evident in the earlier productions of this sort.

Printed velour is brought out in the most exquisite colorings in exact copy of natural flowers. These velvets are coming into general use among dressers for applique work. The flowers are cut from the velvet and applique upon fine cloth, felt or other material.

Superb portieres, draperies and table covers may be made in the applique work just mentioned, according to the journal quoted, which also furnishes the accompanying design for a portiere. The figures, after being placed on the new ground work, are attached by buttonhole stitch, or by sewing through with a cord. A very easy fashion is to leave a wide margin around the figures, base them firmly in place and stitch the edges with fine silk on the sewing machine; the rough edge may then be trimmed off very closely and a braid so placed as to cover the stitching and the cut edge of the material. For the design here given, any suitable material of an opaque color may be used. Trellis, vine and grape to be appliqued in plush—natural colors. In treating the leaves the different shades of green will be obtained according as the plush is laid on, i. e., with reference to the direction of its nap.

Dinner a la Russe.

If dinner is to be served a la russe, that is everything handed by the servants, the table is prepared as follows:

When all is ready the maid arrange the colored mat, or "runner," as it is now called, in its place evenly down the middle. On this set the cruet, flowers, dried ginger, salted almonds or bon bons, all in cut glass, silver or fancy china dishes. According to Good Housekeeping, which gives these directions, the runner is optional, but it is very effective.

Now measure with the hand from the edge of the table to the end of the middle finger and place the first glass. Continue this measurement around the table for each goblet, beside which group the claret and champagne glasses, if wines are served. Then set a plate at each place, large enough to hold the majolica oyster plate of the first course, which is removed with the oyster plate. Now arrange three forks on the left (one of these is the oyster fork) and two knives on the right (the larger of the two being used for meat). The soup spoon and napkin are also placed on the right. Fold the napkin in a three cornered pyramid in which lay a roll of bread, and before each plate place a small salt cellar either of cut glass or silver or fine china. If a menu is used it is laid either in front or at the side of the plate, beside these. Nothing should be placed upon the table unless indeed it be a grand dinner), as everything is passed by the maids, and arranged for instead on the sideboard. An extra supply of knives, forks, spoons, sauce ladles, dessert forks, spoons and knives, plates, wine glasses, dinner plates and napkins should be set ready.

Tea Stains.

Practical housekeepers agree that tea stains are difficult things to manage. One says: Glycerine rubbed on them will often remove tea stains, but if they are of long standing they are very hard to remove. Another affirms that nothing will take tea stains out of a cloth that has once been washed, but if milk is poured at once on the spot where the tea is spilled washing will remove it.

A third is more hopeful and claims that these stains will yield to an application of chloride of lime. Stir a teaspoonful of this into a teacupful of hot water; when cold, and the sediment has settled allow the liquid to pour off the clear liquid and dip the stain into it three or four times, not letting it lie; rinse in clear water, when all traces of tea should have disappeared.

Macaroni with Tomato Sauce.

Macaroni with tomato sauce is very good when cooked as follows: For the sauce put butter the size of an egg into the saucepan, and when it is at boiling point throw in a minced onion, a little chopped parsley and pepper. Cook five to eight minutes and add a heaping tablespoonful of flour and a little broth or boiling water. Stir well and again cook five minutes or more. Now pour in a coffee cupful of stewed and strained tomatoes and stir all together. Boil half a pound of macaroni until tender, using boiling water and drain in the colander, place alternate layers of macaroni and sauce in a dish, pouring sauce over the top. Set in the oven for a few minutes and serve hot.

Squash Pie.

One-half pint of stewed and sifted squash, one egg, a piece of butter the size of an egg, one-half cup of sugar, one-half pint of sweet milk, one-half teaspoonful each of nutmeg and cinnamon, and a pinch of salt. Beat together all but the milk; then add the milk and bake in a deep pie dish three-quarters of an hour.

Railroad Tracks of the World.

We have the greatest number of miles of railroad track of any country in the world, but the Argentine Republic can beat us and every one else for making theirs straight. On the road from Buenos Ayres to the foot of the Andes is a stretch of 211 miles without a curve.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

SUBJECTS OF INTEREST TO PROGRESSIVE WOMEN AND MEN.

Investigations and Experiments in Regard to the Phenomena of the Surface Tension of Liquids, at Present Receiving Much Attention from Physicists.

It is now believed that at the surface of every liquid there is a thin film of the same substance, which is in a state of constant tension, like an elastic membrane. A rubber toy balloon distended with water roughly illustrates the conditions present in a drop of that liquid.

From certain investigations made by Plateau and Quincke, it is estimated that the thickness of this film is not more than 1-50,000 of an inch. The tension of the film varies with different liquids; for water it is about two and three-quarters grains for every inch of length, for alcohol a little less than one grain and for ether only about three-quarters of a grain. The experiments here illustrated by engravings from La Nature show how the existence of surface tension may be easily proven.

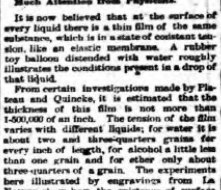

FIG. 1—SURFACE TENSION OF LIQUIDS.

Take a large and a small pencil, place them together, and, with the aid of a small brush, wet the adjoining surfaces. The tension of the film of water between them, as shown at A B, Fig. 1, will be sufficient to hold the two firmly together; and, when lifted up, the smaller pencil remains suspended by the larger one.

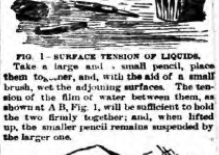

FIG. 2—CONTRACTILE POWER OF THE SURFACE FILM.

In Fig. 2 another experiment is illustrated which shows the contractile power of the surface film. Fold a piece of thin paper into the form of a little box about six inches long and half an inch wide and high. On pouring water into it, the surface film of water will draw the sides of the box together, thus proving that it is in a constant state of tension, like a piece of stretched rubber cloth.

Brick the Best Building Material.

There is no material, says The American Builder, that can be used for construction equal to brick. Every brick bears its own weight. Bricks have already passed the fiery ordeal before they are used in building, and are tempered. Cast iron is not substantial enough, and wrought iron, which is an improvement, stands fire but little better. For a fireproof building we would construct one of fire brick. Then glaze them and give them a good appearance, which is rather ornamental than otherwise.

There are, however, many kinds of material made for the purpose of fireproofing a building after it is constructed, but we are only speaking here of material which is used in construction, and we have the opinions of both insurance men and heads of fire departments, who are with each other that brick has stood the test better than any other material.

The Human Heart as Electrical Battery.

The most important of the addresses of the hospitals, says The Pall Mall Budget, was Dr. Waller's, at St. Mary's, on his discovery of electrical currents caused by the pulsation of the human heart. The researches which Dr. Waller described have occupied him during the last four years, and the record was interesting, he thought, as an actual example of what goes on in physiological laboratories, and correction of "that most unfortunate and mischievous error that they are chambers of horrors." He had endeavored to apply the results of the researches themselves; for if in each human heart there be indeed an electrical battery, then developments in the art of electricity may, since becomes possible, beside which Mr. Edison's wonderland will seem commonplace.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

Little Caprices of Custom That Puzzle the Neophyte in Society.

Few points of etiquette are more debated than those that relate to the leaving of cards. There is no end to the dilemmas of the novice as to how and when she shall leave the various contents of her card case upon a thankless world. Shall she leave her card after she has made a call? Shall she leave her husband's card if she is calling on a widow or a single lady? And what if there are daughters belonging to the family on whom she is calling? These are but a few of the questions that arise.

Now, the truth is that nothing changes more quickly than the fashions of card leaving. Time was when a woman left a dozen cards, the shibboleth by which the elect may recognize one another. People who are constantly in society do not leave cards at all, except after receptions, or when they are going to be out of town for a long time. Then a few cards are extremely varied; they embrace the running of sewing machines, printing presses and ventilating fans, operating dental instruments, driving street cars, coal and ore hauling in mines; pumping water; washing bottles, and in machine shops, shoe factories, bookbinderies, knitting works, etc. For Indianapolitans use they are becoming quite common.

A Solvent for Rust.

It is often very difficult, and sometimes impossible, to remove rust from articles made of iron. Those which are more thickly coated are most easily cleaned by being immersed in a solution, nearly saturated, of chloride of tin. The length of time they remain in this bath is determined by the thickness of the coating of rust. Generally twelve to twenty-four hours is long enough.—Popular Science News.

Electric Motors.

The Manufacturer and Builder affirms that there are no less than ten thousand electric motors in use throughout the United States. The uses to which these are put are extremely varied; they embrace the running of sewing machines, printing presses and ventilating fans, operating dental instruments; driving street cars; coal and ore hauling in mines; pumping water; washing bottles, and in machine shops, shoe factories, bookbinderies, knitting works, etc. For miscellaneous uses they are becoming quite common.

Wedding Announcements.

In case of a private or informal wedding, an announcement of the marriage is sent out next day by the bride's family to all friends and acquaintances. It is engraved upon a sheet of note paper after the following form: "Mr. and Mrs. William Hamilton announce the marriage of their daughter Agnes to Mr. Arthur Howard, on Thursday, Oct. 11, 1888. Toledo, O." In the left hand may be added: "At home after Nov. 4, at ——." By supplying the blank with the proper street and number. These notes are in many instances preferred for ordinary calls, when one could not present even at a large wedding. They may be sent in two envelopes by mail.

—Attend the primaries to-night.

—Thanksgiving is nigh: remember the poor.

—From blizzard to blizzard, just eight months and thirteen days.

—Remember the "Land of Nod" entertainment for Thanksgiving. Read the advertisement.

—Quality is what you get when you buy Tallyrand and not trash, the manufacturers assure you.

—Two masses will be celebrated in St. Mary's church Thanksgiving Day at 6:30 and 10 a. m., respectively.

—The Plainfield Republican primaries will be held to-night. The advertisement gives the location of the meetings.

—The Passaic & Delaware Railroad have been clearing ground for the erection of a large freight house at Basking Ridge.

—The Women's Temperance Aid Society will hold a Mother's Meeting in Reform Hall to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock. All are cordially invited to attend.

—The permanent headquarters of the Committee on the Centennial Celebration of Washington's Inauguration are now established in the Stewart building, New York. The great day is April 30th, 1889, which comes on a Tuesday.

—It will cost very little more to have the street cars lighted all night than to have them in total darkness after one o'clock. Nearly all burglaries are committed between one o'clock and daylight, "so it will be a matter of economy to incur this small additional outlay.—Union County Record.

—The types made us say Saturday that the Chancellor "refused" to let John H. VanWinkle special master the application of Mrs Illsley for divorce. It ought of course to to have read "referred". Mr. VanWinkle was directed be the Court of Chancery to hear evidence in the case and to report to the Court his opinion. His report as stated Saturday holds that Mr. Illsley shall pay to his wife counsel fees and alimony while the suit continues.

—The New York World yesterday contained a glowing account of the wealth of John D. Morrissey, $3,000,000 of which was acquired from silver mining interests in Colorado. He has recently taken hold of the Sylvanite Mine in that State, in connection with Norvin Green, the President of the Western Union Telegraph company, also President of the Sylvanite. Mr. E C. Mulford, of North avenue, as is told by the advertisement in another column, is the Plainfield agent, and is very sanguine over the matter.

PERSONAL.

Mr. James Sutton, of Grandview avenue, returned home Saturday from a week's visit to North Branch.

The firemen appreciate the generosity of Dr. Wm. Van Winkle, of Broadway, in furnishing them with coffee at the fire at the Crescent avenue church last Friday.

A meeting of the Building Committee and Canvassers of the Y. M. C. A. will be held at the residence of Mr. Henry A. McGee to-morrow evening at eight o'clock.

Mr. John Costello, of New York city, spent yesterday with the family of Mr. P. Casey, of New and Third streets. Mr. Costello is in the service of the United States Navy.

The many friends of Mr. John Evans, of Plainfield avenue, are urging him to run for Councilman on the Republican ticket in the Fourth Ward. Mr. Evans is the foreman at the Fuller Iron Works and is very popular in that ward.

Mr. W. Hemmerich, a young German of Newark who is especially gifted for evangelistic work, will be present to conduct the young people's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms this evening at 8 o'clock. There will be good music, consisting of hearty singing with orchestral accompaniment. All men are invited.

Mr. Arthur W. Tyler, who organized the public library system in Plainfield, has accepted the work of doing a like service for the city of Quincy, Ill. A handsome stone structure has already been built in that beautiful western city for a public library. Mr. Tyler has been engaged to exercise his judgment and intelligence in the selection of books and to oversee the circulating department of the city.

WINTER'S ADVANCE GALE

It Comes with a Howl That Indicates Business.

HEAVY WIND IN CONNECTICUT.

The Gale Reached Its Greatest Velocity in the Wooden Nutmeg State—Rushing at Fifty-one Miles an Hour—How it Caught Other Localities.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—The blinding snow storm which struck this part of the world yesterday came from the sunny land of Florida. It is believed that before it started on her ramble up along the Atlantic seaboard it killed the yellow fever germs in the southern city. The storm was three days making the journey, but when it reached the metropolis it came with a rush of wind, sometimes at forty miles and at other times at thirty miles an hour. Fences were driven in, trees were blown down in many parts of the city and through New England and the western states.

There were few pedestrians on the streets. In fact, everybody seemed determined to stick. That is, every one who ventured out. Those who were on the streets spoke of the night travel, and agreed that there had at no time since the roads were opened been so few passengers. The surface cars had their usual morning business to handle. But the horses had enough to do in hauling the unwieldy cars around curves and against the wind. Early in the evening it was blown off the track while moving from Park row into Bowling street.

Sergt. Dunn, of the signal service bureau, said that it was the worst case of a wind storm than anything else, and from present indications I do not think will last more than twelve hours. Only an inch of snow has fallen in this city. I doubt if the fever germs at Jacksonville have been killed. There is some weather there now. The storm is now at Salt Lake and as cold as ice. The snow still extends as far west as Buffalo."

The tide was unusually high at Coney Island and the water rushed across Sea Gate Point to the eastern point of the island, off the Oriental hotel. The chief damage reported was the washing away of some small frame buildings and shanties between Norton's Point and West Brighton. The storm was very severe about the shores of Staten Island. The snow settled through and the day was followed by a hail storm which acted for into the night. The wind blew a gale and many vessels took shelter in the coves and in the harbor.

Incoming steamships continued to report unusually rough weather at sea. The Celtic and City of Richmond from Liverpool, and Jan Thompson from Rotterdam, all of which arrived yesterday, experienced contin ua gales and strong head seas throughout their voyages. The steamer Rhein from Bremen was thickly coated with salt from the rough passage, and a few guard rails on the deck of the Richmond were splintered during the storm. The pilot boats say that they have about their same stories of damage done by the gale and wave.

A large three-masted ship, which was anchored off Tompkinsville, dragged her anchors and drifted down the bay, and nearly escaped colliding with the United States steamer Ossipee, which was also anchored off Tompkinsville.

A canal-boat loaded with coal, while being towed through the Kills, foundered in the heavy sea close under the Staten Island shore at Mariner's Harbor. After the crew had left with a cargo of brick from Haverstraw, bound to Elizabeth, N. J., was blown ashore on Prall's Island, off Constable Hook, and went to pieces. The crew were landed at the oil dock at Constable Hook.

Owing to unusually high tide along the Jersey coast, and much damage was done by the storm. Bath houses and small pavilions along the beach were washed out to sea. The Shark River and Spring Lake lighthouses were washed away. Similar damage is reported at other places along the coast.

The big wind caused considerable damage in Brooklyn. A three story frame building, the occupants of which at 1109 Third avenue, were blown down early in the evening.

ALONG THE COAST.

Vessels Dashed to Pieces—Four Inches of Snow in the Mohawk Valley.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 26.—The storm in this vicinity was very violent, but fortunately not disastrous. The snow in the city was three inches and suffered considerably. A few trees were blown over and some telegraph poles were also toppled over. Along the Delaware river and front it was driven into the harbor nearly, and forced to remain there all day. Off the Jersey coast the wind is very fierce, but the usual service officials report no loss of life or property. Vessels in the harbor appreciated the small coal that have suffered slow time.

BOSTON, Nov. 26.—The American bark Edward Lycke, bound from Philadelphia to San Francisco with 1100 tons of coal, arrived at the Delaware Breakwater Saturday indistress. She reported that on the Jersey coast the gale was driven on the Brea water, where she went to pieces. The crew were safely landed. A three masted schooner ashore at Cape May. The Breakwater. The Dark Hannah, from Philadelphia for Limerick, and schooner William D. Marvel, are reported ashore in the harbor, and a schooner ashore at Scituate. Schooner Elizabeth Hayward sunken. The crew were safely landed from the latter vessel.

CONNECTICUT'S BIG WIND.

The Heaviest Gale That the State Has Ever Known.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 26.—A tremendous wind and snow storm prevailed yesterday. The snow was very blinding and for a time it was said could be seen on the streets. Sergeant Rice of the signal station says that the wind that struck here was blowing at the rate of fifty-one miles an hour. He says that he is not aware that since the signal office was established here in 1872. At the time of the big storm of March it reached a velocity of forty-eight miles an hour, and March 9, 1877, it reached fifty miles, the nearest to yesterday's record that has been approached.

The telegraph wires are down at Lyme, on the Shore line road, forty miles from here, is open. The shaft was broken in hitting a shop through, and it cannot be closed. Several trees are down on the Shore line road, and it is said they have been stopped. The Shore line mail takes no passengers until the road is ablaze, so that the draw can be repaired. Passengers will be sent over the New England road from Boston to New York.

The Gale Elsewhere.

BOSTON, Nov. 26.—A storm of sleet, with a heavy gale from the northwest, began at 4 o'clock yesterday morning. In a few hours it turned to damp and very cold snow, continuing all day with a good deal of vigor, and at 6 o'clock this evening the storm is still raging. Fire alarm telegraph, telephone and electric lighting wires are down in a great many places. Lines to the homes of the fire department are broken or crossed so that alarms cannot be sounded.

Reports from the other portions of the state show that the storm has been even more severe than in Boston. In the western section six inches of snow fell and travel is greatly impeded, with no immediate prospect of a clear go, as it is still storming there.

On the coast vessels were driven into all the large ports, and there were 100 ships in Salem harbor last night.

New Hampshire reports a blinding gale of the same character, the worst known for this season of the year. At Nashua three inches fell, and at Claremont five. It is not yet over.

Vermont sends word of a genuine blizzard, with wind blowing forty miles an hour, and the thermometer at 20 degs. Freight trains are blocked and road-clearing impossible. Communication to the north and eastward is very imperfect.

The brig Alles, of Lockport, N. Y., drifted on to the coast near Gloucester during the storm. The schooner Medford lost her bowsprit, two masts and rigging. Capt. Burke narrowly escaped drowning.

It is reported that a dozen Gloucester schooners were wrecked on Norman's reef, and all but one of the crew saved.

BOSTON, N. Y., Nov. 26.—A high wind prevailed along the Hudson. It is feared that the boats in the Delaware and Hudson canal will be frozen in.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y., Nov. 26.—The Mohawk valley is four inches under snow, and the storm is still prevailing. The Erie canal is filled with boats stalled or fearing to move.

GEN. JOHN NEWTON RESIGNS.

He Has Private Business to Attend To. Talk About His Successor.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Politicians were excited by the resignation of the office of commissioner of public works by Gen. John Newton. The news startled the country people of Staten Island, but they had not been able to determine its possible effect on local affairs. So they were disturbed in mind, and many of them will continue to be so until the County Democrats by the hops of benefit to be derived from it, and the Republicans by the fear of injury to their present bright prospects—until Mayor Edward Cooper shall have selected a successor to Gen. Newton, and have appointed the period during which that successor, in his opinion, should serve as commissioner of public works.

GEN. JOHN NEWTON.

Gen. Newton told a reporter that his resignation was pursuant to a determination arrived at several months ago. "When I was made president of the Panama Railroad company," he said, "there was an understanding that I should, this autumn or winter, give up the public works commissionership and devote my efforts to advancing that company's interests, and I have acted now in accordance with that understanding."

The doubt and uncertainty of politicians must continue until Mayor Cooper shall have announced Gen. Newton's successor. He would not discuss possible nominees.

It is rumored that he may appoint Allan Campbell, now one of the commissioners of public works; and also that there is a probability that, accepting as valid the law which makes the term Gen. Newton has been filling expire Dec. 31, he will decline it to be incumbent to make a great change in the office, and so will appoint Deputy Commissioner D. Lowber Smith for the few months. Alderman Dowling, who was not re-elected this year, would be pleased to spend the early part of next year in the office.

BOULANGER TALKS PEACE.

The French Warrior Declares He Is More a Patriot Than a Soldier.

PARIS, Nov. 26.—Gen. Boulanger made a speech at a meeting of the Patriotic league. He spoke in terms of warm praise of Gen. Boulanger. Referring to the recent accident to the Russian imperial train, he expressed sympathy with the czar, and rejoiced over his escape from harm. The speech was greatly applauded, especially the references to Gen. Boulanger. The Gaulois asserts that the government intends to dissolve the Patriotic league. The meeting was held in defiance of the prohibition. The police soldiers was barred by the police, who prevented a proposed public reception. A few persons succeeded in passing the sanguard who followed the meeting Gen. Boulanger made a speech, in which he said:

"I am a more a patriot than a soldier. I am ready to go to prison—not because I am demanded, but peace imposed by a firm and dignified attitude. That is the only peace acceptable to the country. The unveiled support of the government by the foreigners country, causing a misleading appearance of weakness, and strongly denounced M. Ferry in the senate, and M. Gambetta in the chamber of deputies. Let parties be silenced and let France be united. Let us have peace with honor."

Card from the Inaugural Committee.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—The inaugural committee have issued the following: "Many organizations and individuals are engaging for themselves quarters in Washington during the inauguration without consultation with the inaugural committee. This committee is advised that in many cases exorbitant prices are being demanded. There are practical difficulties in the way of a record of the available buildings, halls, houses, etc., in the city, with a list of the prices thereof, and have opened a bureau of information at their headquarters, Nos. 928 and 930 F street. All parties will be aided and protected by communicating with the chairman at that address. It will also facilitate the assignment of organizations who may wish to take place in the procession, and will furnish a directory to the location of all strangers or organizations temporarily present in this city."

Wheeling Left in the Cold.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 26.—A land slide near West Alexander has caused the burst, and the result is that three-fourths of the families are without heat. All the hotels in the city were obliged to lay in a stock of coal and are doing their utmost to make their guests comfortable. Fully half the people were obliged to eat cold suppers, as a greater number passed the night shivering in their homes with winter wraps on. At the theatres people were obliged to retain their wraps and stamped their feet whenever opportunity offered in order to keep them warm.

Found in a Trunk.

COLOGNE, Nov. 26.—A trunk containing the corpse of Herr Hasselberg, forwarding agent of the Anglo-American Packing company, was found on the dock at Deutsch. The head had been fractured, and the victim's watch and $700, which he was known to have had when last seen, were missing. Suspicion fell on the employe of the company, named Daue, who arrested here on complaint of relatives of the murdered man.

Lower's Lower Law Sentence.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Nov. 26.—Judge Sievins sentenced George J. Bowman, convicted of selling Bogus imported from Indianola, to pay $1,000 fine, the highest penalty. The bond that the prosecution required of the sheriff was in original packages. The case was a test one. The decision indicates that whole-sale liquor men may not be prosecuted in order to strip local penalties of their terrors.

Lowe's Lower Law Sentence.

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 26.—It is learned that in Pitt county 100 negro women, dressed in male attire, voted at the late election. The sheriff was in organized resistance. The result was a riot, in which several negroes were killed. The matter is to be investigated. Two negro women of Greenville county have been arrested and are in jail on the charge of illegal voting. It is said a large negro vote was cast in Wilson county, which has always been Democratic.

OLD POLITICAL ALLIES.

The Friendship Between Harrison and Sherman.

WILL THE LATTER GET A PLACE?

A Bit of Political History that Would Seem to Indicate an Affirmative Answer. Editorial Opinions in a Scrap Book. The President-Elect's Menagerie.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—The Sun's Indianapolis correspondent telegraphs as fol ows:

The story of the friendship of Gen. Harrison for John Sherman is an interesting little side issue in the current of rehearsal that is prevailing everywhere except at the residence of the president-elect. Sherman and Harrison, as Republican senators from adjoining states, and men of similar tastes and manner of life, naturally formed a degree of intimacy while they were together in Washington. This friendship has been cemented by incidents that would have had little effect upon some men, but that make a stronger claim than any mere politics upon a man with Harrison's knack of never forgetting a way of paying back through the state in a battle which was bound to have a great effect upon the party all over the country. Only one such incident is needed to illustrate the appeal, and that was John Sherman. Sherman came to his help in time of need and when other party associates held away, and that time there has always been in the heart of the president-elect a very warm feeling of friendship for the Ohio senator.

The fortunes of the political war path thus against each other at Chicago this year. Yet even then it was always understood that the Harrison leaders, most of them, preferred Sherman for second place, and had Sherman's strength ever been enough to have placed the nomination within probable reach it is almost certain that whatever strength Harrison personally could have directed would have gone to help him on. Sherman made a tour of Indiana in 1888, speaking in many of the large cities and visiting the Indianapolis about ten days before election. Another complication less pleasant than the sentiments of the general rose out of that visit to this city. Sherman was entertained here on the night of his speech by Maj. Holstein, and at a dinner party at the house of the gentleman with him included John C. New, John B. Elam (Gen. Harrison's partner), E. W. Halford, Gen. Fred Knefler, Gen. James R. Carnahan and Hugh Dunn. Elam, Halford and Carnahan are of a subsequent conference, at which it is said Attorney General Miles ner and exGovernor Porter were also present, the nucleus of the proposed nomination in 1884 was talked over, and an understanding was reached that while Indiana was to be for Harrison, it would turn to Sherman as soon as Harrison's nomination was found to be impossible. Sherman, on his part, agreed that he would help out Harrison if circumstances should drive him to withdraw from the fight himself.

This agreement began to bear bothers one from which the Gresham movement reached its present proportions. It appears that to carry Indiana to Chicago for Gresham instead of for Harrison. When the arrangement was entered into the nomination of Harrison seemed such a remote possibility that Sherman thought he had the barga n entirely in favor of himself, but with Gresh an leading the party it is necessity for making some decker by which the Gresham mites might be brought into a state of complacency, to ward Sherman. This could not be done while Harrison was in the field, and the friends of Gresham and the friends of Sherman in Ohio began to write letters to Indiana disclaiming any knowledge of the deal which was entered, in any arrangement that Sherman might have made with New or anybody else.

The existence of these letters is presumably what Gen. Harrison means when he may explain the reason why no Ohio Republican except Sherman seems to be by him considered eligible for a cabinet position. Mr. Sherman's claims rest on more than does not extend to those friends of Sherman who were so anxious to be off with one bargain in order to get on with a new one.

He is a consolation to the unfortunate family of the president-elect. The beaver has been brought home. It was found miles out on the Illinois line, and the hunter who brought it home says he knows it is one will do it so thoroughly, it will never be found alive.

Gen. Harrison, however, he thinks he will establish a new order, that of head keeper of the administration menagerie. He has already on several applicants for cabinet places who stand taken a message to Garcia. Indianapolis editors through out the country who are grinding out cabinets for the president elect will be pleased to know that that about the latest addition to the list. The president-elect is keeping a scrap book of everything that papers say that he thinks contains information, and visitors are engaging for themselves quarters in Washington during the inauguration without consultation with the inaugural committee. This committee is advised on good head in many speculative prices. The inaugural committee will have a record of the available buildings, halls, houses, etc., in the city, with a list of the prices thereof, and have opened a bureau of information at their headquarters, Nos. 928 and 930 F street. All parties will be aided and protected by communicating with the chairman at that address. It will also facilitate the assignment of organizations who may wish to take place in the procession, and will furnish a directory to the location of all strangers or organizations temporarily present in this city."

Honoring Hendrick's Memory.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 26.—The *third anni*versary of the death of Vice President Hendricks was observed with appropriate ceremonies at his grave in Crown Hill cemetery. Early in the afternoon the members of the democratic state committee, headed by a brass band, rode out to the cemetery, followed by a large crowd of the friends of the dead statesman had already gathered. The grave was covered with flowers. Rev. A. Hyde, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church, offered a prayer. Afterward Governor Gray delivered an address. The widow of Hendricks was present.

Treasurer No Longer Champion Oarsman.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—John Teemer is no longer champion oarsman of America, which title he has held since the world's championship is crushed. Saturday's race was a revelation and a surprise to all save the unbounded backers of O'Connor, the Canadian oarsman. Teemer, the so-called invincible, was not in it at all. O'Connor took the lead with the first five strokes, and never relinquished it. Teemer spurted brewery coming home from the turn, but it availed him nothing. He was fairly and completely rowed out and out rowed. O'Connor finished first in 20 minutes, 39 seconds ahead of the ex-champion.

MRS. HIBBARD LOSES HER SUIT.

The Jury Decides That Fry Never Promised to Marry Her.

BEAVER, Pa., Nov. 26.—Every inch of space in the court room was occupied by those anxious to hear the verdict in the Hibbard-Fry breach of promise case. The jury returned a verdict for defendant.

John Hibbard, accompanied by a newspaper reporter, hastened to the residence of Mrs. Hibbard, who was found in bed fully seated in the rear of her store, with her daughter, Miss Kate. Both jumped to their feet. Mrs. Hibbard asked of her son John:

"What's the verdict?"

"For Mr. Fry," replied her son.

"No!" said Mrs. Hibbard in an incredulous tone.

"It's true, mother."

"Where did you hear it?"

"At the court house."

"Well, then, I suppose we are all Fry's here," said Mrs. Hibbard, as she dropped into a chair. "I didn't care about the money, as I wanted to vindicate myself before the world. However, there is not a single p r son, not even the jury, who do es not see my story. I have nothing but words of kindness for my attorneys and my friends. They did all they could for me. It was the power of money that crushed my cause."

Mrs. Hibbard declined to state whether she would take further action. She cannot be told now pre-fectly as to all its details, except by the general summit, or by one or two other men. Only one result will be reached by the appeal, and that was John Sherman. Sherman came to his help in time of need and when other party associates held away, and that time there has always been in the heart of the president-elect a very warm feeling of friendship for the Ohio senator.

The fortunes of the political war path thus against each other at Chicago this year. FOR CASH AND GLORY.

Thirty-six Men Off on a Six Day Tramp.

TEN THOUSAND PEOPLE PRESENT

Started by the Marquis of Queensberry, Who Receives an Enthusiastic Welcome. "Old Sport" Campana Wins the First Lap and a Private Purse.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—The great six day walking match started off under the most favorable circumstances, the large crowd in attendance remaining four of the days when Rowell was champion, and the enthusiasm being fully as great.

The Marquis of Queensberry entered Madison Square Garden at a few minutes after 11 o'clock last night in evening dress, and wearing a beaver overcoat trimmed with astrakhan. He was accompanied by two friends, with whom he entered a box. He leaned on a silver handled cane and good naturedly returned the curious glances of the multitude. At midnight there were 10,000 persons in the Garden.

QUEENSBERRY.

The six day race whose start attracted this crowd is for the championship of the world and a diamond belt valued at $2,500, together with $1,000 in the gate money. The entries in the hands Albert's record will get an extra $1,000.

Manager Billy O'Brien introduced Capt. Reilly and Mike Kelly, the $10,000 ball player, to the Marquis. Kelly was running later Charley Mitchell and Jak Kilrain entered the Garden and took seats in the box with the marquis.

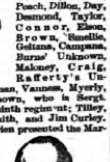
A few minutes before midnight Manager O'Brien invested himself of his overcoat and prepared to start the men on their arduous journey.

These were the starters: Littlewood, Mason, Hughes, Herty, Hart, Cartwright, Noremac, Golden, Hegelman, Vint, Howarth, Moore, Peach, Dillon, Day, Desmond, Lyons, Connor, Elson, Brown, Smellie, Golinas, Rampman, Burns, Unknown, Maloney, Craig, Rafferty's Unknowns, Meyers, Huffman, Vanness, Herty, Electric Club's Unknown, who is Sergt. Cramer, of the Sixty-ninth regiment; Tilley, W. Smith, Charley Smith, and Jim Carley.

When Manager O'Brien pronounced the Marquis of Queensberry as referee he was greeted with a round of applause, which the nobleman acknowledged with a graceful bow. Turning to Kilrain, Mitchel, and Mike Kelly, Mr. O'Brien introduced the former as the champion boxer of the world. This announcement was greeted with a round of cheers and hisses, which was continued when Mitchell was presented. Somebody in the crowd proposed three cheers for John L. Sullivan, and then they took to cheering Jake Kilrain's ruddy face in a brighter hue.



HART.

Promptly at 13 o'clock the Marquis of Queensberry said "Go," and the thirty-six contestants bounded away. "Old Sport" Campana, who got $5 for making the first lap, and Noremac were side by side, with Littlewood, Hegelman and Cartwright on their heels. Sport made the first lap and earned his money. Littlewood, Cartwright, Mason, Herty, Hegelman and Hughes were all going in fine style. Littlewood completed the first mile in 5 minutes and 2 seconds, with Herty at his heels and Lepper Hughes a close third.

Littlewood and Mason were the favorites with the crowd, and the betting when they indulged in between the admirers of these men generally ruled at even money. John Higgins, "the Lepper," tough Dan Hurley and fleet Frank Hart will uphold the honor of America.

No sooner had the men got in motion than Mike Kelly made a bet with a number of $100 to $150 that Dan Herty would finish first or second.

Littlewood kept up his steady pace, and, although constantly dogged by Herty, Cartwright, Hughes, Mason and Noremac, was slightly in advance of the others at the end of five miles, which he completed in thirty minutes and ten seconds, carry a floral horseshoe, the gift of Mitchell and Kilrain, on the last lap of the fifth mile. Herty was running in superb form.

The score of the leaders at 1 o'clock was:

	Miles.	Laps.		Miles.	Laps.
Littlewood	25	5	Howarth	23	5
Cartwright	25	2	Vint	23	3
Herty	25	2	Moore	23	3
Connor	24	1	Noremac	23	3
Hegelman	23	0	Golden	23	3
Hart	23	0	Hughes	23	1

THEORY AGAINST PRACTICE.

An Instance Where Book Learning Was Defective.

"I've lounged up considerable," said a red headed young man as he stood at the foot of Cortlandt street, waiting for the ferry, and fact of the repairs which had been put around on his face in the way of countenance. I'm learnin' pretty measurenably, but I guess I can hold out till I strike Jersey."

"Been in a fight?" asked a sympathetic bystander.

"Naw—I didn't git started 'nough so you could call it a fight. I've been licked though and I'am't tryin' to dodge the issue."

"What got you into the trouble?"

"Edjercation, sah—readin' when I orter been in better business; b'lievin' a lot of blame fool truck jes' 'cause it was in a book."

"How was it?"

"Why this way: You see I had one o' these 'er 'mmaz-rum books and read it. Says the book like this, you see: 'A man with his waist bigger around 'n'round than his chest ain't no good, physically.' That's what the book claimed. He's li'ble to give out at the critical moment, says the book. And if he's fat, went on the book, he's dead sure to give out at the critical minute. He's short winded and his muscles is flabby, says the book. He ain't no good on earth, says the book, awful certain, and no man needn't be 'fraid to tackle him. He's a 'cumbrance on the world, says the book, and he ort to train and git down the size of his waist and boom the dimensions of his chest 'cross some small man swats him one and walks on him. This was the idea the book held and I took it all in."

"Did the theory hold good in practice?"

"Ain't been able to see it in that light yet. I come over from Jersey this morning feelin' pretty O K. My dimensions are all right. You can crack hickory nuts on my chest—I ain't short winded. Nothing flabby 'bout my muscles. I don't give out at the critical moment, says I. After a while I was up on Blackwell street lookin' in a window watchin' a Frenchman cook pan cakes on an iron foot stool, when 'long comes a policeman as big's a load o' hay. He tried to run on me by tellin' me to move on. I stood him up. It was a foot further 'round his waist than 'round his chest if it was an inch. He was fat, too. Consequently, says I to myself, you're flabby and short winded, and, 'bove all, you'll flunk at the critical moment. Then says I: 'Old boss, dry up or I'll mob you' He steps up and I walk in, dependin' on the critical moment for him to cave."

"But he didn't do it?"

"Don't know, you see; I was dead at the critical moment so I couldn't tell. But I have a sneakin' lowdown notion that he didn't. I couldn't swear to nothin', but its my opinion that at the critical moment he was walkin' around on me and reachin' down and pumpin' me with a black club 'bout the size of a bannaner. He may have stumped at the critical moment, but I'd sooner think that he was slumped on a blanket fool about my size durin' sev'ral very critical moments. When I come to I put on my boots which he had pounded on me and went and bought court plaster by the roll like wall paper. I am now goin' home to burn up a green covered book on physical development, and when I git my amount of the sling I shall go to work again and try to forgit some things that I have read. Good by."—New York Tribune.

When Nellie's Husband Sat Down.

Mrs. Brown—Tell me Nellie, was your husband much embarrassed when he proposed to you?

Mrs. Youngbusband—Not nearly so much as he was after the bills for our wedding reception came in.—Boston Transcript.

One Who Didn't.

"Well, uncle, I suppose you got in your vote all right the other day," he said to Uncle Beans, of the market brigade.

"No, sah, I didn't."

"What was the trouble?"

"Our wa'd's a big town dat I reckoned I would wait till de nex' day, an' when I went ober agin de polls was dun gone an' shut up an' I cud'nt away."—Yankee Blade.

The Difference.

Customer—Well, I guess I'll take these pants.

Rabupacinstme—Ya, mein frent, tree tollars is very cheap.

Customer (aghast)—Three dollars! Why, you had them marked a dollar and a half in the window.

Rabupacinstme—Och, yal dot means ein dollar und feefty cents for von leg.—New York Sun.

Useless.

"Can I see Mr. Haggerty?" inquired the caller at the jail. "Before he was arrested he owed me a little bill that he promised he would pay at this date, and he has always been a man of his word." "You can see him if you will wait a few minutes," said the turnkey. "His attorney is with him now." The tailor shook his head and signed deeply. "There is no use in my waiting," he said.—Chicago Tribune.

Used to Horrors.

Dentist—The tooth you want extracted is very firmly set. Will you take gas?

Patient—No, I never take gas.

"Ever had tooth extracted before?"

"No, but I was best man at a wedding once, and I took no gas then."—Lincoln Journal.

Diplomacy.

Mrs. O'Kay—I'm going to Catlet's, Horace. Shall I order the Sunday dinner?

Mr. O'Kay—By all means, no! Just ask for it. Last month's bill is still due.—Time.

Absence of Mind.

A prominent physician of this city, upon meeting his own daughter on the street, politely inquired after the health of both herself and her parents.—New York Tribune.

A Slackened Demand.

There will probably be a drop in nails immediately, since there will be no longer a demand for them for nailing up campaign lies.—Somerville Journal.

THE SHOW AT PARIS.

IT WILL BE A GRAND AFFAIR ON A GRAND SCALE.

Germany and Russia Will Have Nothing to Do with It, but England Will Have a Large Exhibit—The Resurrection of the Bastile and the Great Dome.

The French are rapidly pushing forward the construction of the magnificent buildings designed for their great exposition in 1889, and as this is to be the last for many years they promise that it shall exceed all its predecessors in all countries. As the fall of the Bastille in 1789 is to be celebrated with extraordinary displays, they have reconstructed a part of the old prison, with intent to show it just as it was at the beginning of their great revolution. But the glory of the exposition will be the great dome over the central nave, of which the crest is to be 140 feet from the ground and surmounted by a statue thirty feet high. Inside this dome is to be completely covered (or, more properly, inlaid) with the finest decorations art and science can produce.

GRACEFUL STRUCTURES RISING.

The Parisian journals announce with a grand flourish that M. Formige has charge of the ceramics. M. Bouvard of the plagues and allegorical figures and M. Feutert of the operating machinery, which, the editors assure us, is a guarantee that they will be the finest ever seen in Paris and consequently the finest in the world. Besides the many thousand pieces that are to line the concave of the dome, all the upper part of the walls will blaze with allegorical figures typifying the mythology, genius and progress of all nations; and it is parenthetically added that some 50,000 ceramics and mosaics will complete the marvelous representation.

The exposition will consist of four grand divisions, all within one wall, known in their localities as the Champ de Mars, Trocadero, Quai d'Orsay and the Esplanade of the Invalides. As in 1878, the visitor will go through the series—from the Trocadero to the Iena bridge—without leaving the exposition. The four sections might be styled the horticultural, the industrial, the industrial and the artistic, the last for exhibits of the fine arts. In the historical M. Charles Garnier, the noted architect of Paris, will have a model of every sort of dwelling used by man since the earliest known period.

The Eiffel tower, which is to far overtop all other structures in the world, is now 660 feet high, and still rising. Its cost to Nov. 1 was 3,350,600 francs ($710,000), and 1,575,000 pounds of iron have been used, which indicates that the French have learned how to construct public buildings at reasonable expense. All the waste pieces are saved and made into ink stands, paper weights, etc., with appropriate settings and inscriptions, which are to be sold as souvenirs of the exposition.

It strikes one as an unpleasant surprise to learn that several monarchical countries have declined to be represented, as France is just now the supremely hated republic by most of the despots. Great Britain has taken all the space she could, and asked for more, as John Bull never allows politics to interfere with business. She has, however, refused to be announced from officially joining in the ceremonies, while Germany, Russia and some others have flatly refused, though their citizens have subscribed liberally and will take a large part in the exhibit. It is almost too much to ask those countries to join in celebrating the beginning of a revolution which embroiled them in war for a generation and made every throne in Europe insecure.

England designs to present models of her dairy farms, with mills, bakeries and, of course, schools. Morocco is to have an immense bazar with specimens of everything she produces or trades in. Egypt is to set up an exact reproduction of an Arab quarter in Cairo, with dogs, flies, fleas, story tellers, jugglers, dancing girls and Arabs complete. Every nation will have restaurants and bars, with the national style of cooking room, furnitures, dishes and cooking. One of the most interesting part of the show will be the Retrospective Military museum. All the old collections in France are being rummaged to secure objects representing the military progress of the country, and the history of each regiment of the line will be shown in its flags and trophies. In the fine arts this exhibit will be wonderful. In short, the French purpose to outdo all who have gone before them, despite the fact announced in the same issues of the journals, that something like a panic is imminent—attributable, say American correspondents, to the same collapse of the Panama canal scheme and the consequent scandal.

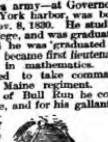
GEN. O. O. HOWARD.

He Takes Gen. Schofield's Place at Governor's Island. New York Harbor.

Gen. O. O. Howard, who has been ordered east to take the place of Gen. Schofield—made commander-in-chief of the United States army—at Governor's Island, in New York harbor, was born at Leeds, Me., Nov. 8, 1830. He studied at Bowdoin college, and was graduated in 1850. In 1854 he was graduated at West Point and became first lieutenant and instructor in mathematics. In 1861 he resigned to take command of the Third Maine regiment. At the first battle of Bull Run he commanded a brigade, and for his gallantry was made brigadier general of volunteers. He was twice wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, losing his right arm June 1, 1862, then was on sick leave for six months, but in September rejoined the army and participated in the battle of Antietam. Afterward he took command of Gen. John Sedgwick's division in the second corps. He was made a major general of volunteers in November, 1862, and commanded the Eleventh corps during Gen. Joseph Hooker's operations near Fredericksburg, May 2, 1863. He served at Gettysburg, Lookout Valley and Missionary Ridge, and was on the expedition to relieve Knoxville in December, 1863. From this time till July, 1864, he was at Chattanooga, when he was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee in the invasion of Georgia. He was engaged at Dallas, Bloody Pond, Kenesaw and Pickett's Mill, where he was again wounded. He was present at the surrender of Atlanta, and joined in the pursuit of the Confederates in Alabama under Gen. Hood, from Oct. 4 to Dec. 13, 1864. He commanded the right wing of Gen. Sherman's army during the march to the sea. Dec. 21, 1864, he was made brigadier general in the United States army. He commanded the Army of the Tennessee from April 4 till April 26, 1865, occupying Goldsboro, N. C., March 24, 1865, *and forced the surrender of Gen. John*ston at Durham, N. C., April 26, 1865. In March of that year he was brevetted major general for gallantry at the battle of Ezra Church.



GEN. O. O. HOWARD.

From March, 1865, till July, 1874, he was commissioner of the Freedmen's bureau at Washington. In that year he was assigned to the department of the District of Columbia. In 1877 he led the expedition against the Nez Perces Indians, and in 1872 he led the campaign against the Chiricahua Apaches. In 1881-83 he was superintendent of the United States Military academy. In 1886 he was commissioned major general and made commander of the division of the Pacific. He has received numerous degrees from various institutions of learning, and has contributed quite largely to the literature of the day.

A LOSS TO ST. LOUIS.

Recent Death of Col. Knapp, of The Republic.

The recent death of Col. John Knapp, in St. Louis, removed a prominent citizen of the state of Missouri. Col. Knapp went to St. Louis when a child, and almost from boyhood was dependent upon his own exertions for a livelihood. He learned the printing, then learned the tailor's trade and followed it for several years. Then he embarked in the wholesale grocery business, after which he purchased an interest in The St. Louis Republican and devoted himself to building up the paper.

Col. Knapp always took an interest in the state militia, and at the outbreak of the Mexican war volunteered and went to Mexico as captain of the First Missouri regiment. When the civil war came on he held the rank of lieutenant colonel at the time of the capture of Camp Jackson in Missouri; but he always claimed in reference to that title that his resignation of disloyalty to the United States was intended. Col. Knapp was of that class of men who are fitted to make a way for themselves in growing countries like the west. He fought his way from obscurity to prominence, and after being successful lent his assistance to many charitable objects.

Description of Tokio, Japan.

Tokio is a big city. It covers more ground than New York, and it is nine miles long and eight miles wide. Over it are scattered watchtowers for the discovery of fires, and a view from one of these shows an immense plain of one and two story low, tiled houses, cut up by unpaved streets and intersected with a network of wide canals. It makes one think of Amsterdam, and the overhanging eaves of the houses, the junk boats sailing through the city and the men acting as boats of burden carry out the idea of Holland. The wind mills are absent, however, but the bay of Yeddo stretches away in the distance and the country has that delightful green verdure which makes the Dutch land so beautiful. In the center of the city may be noted specially fine buildings. Some of them are of modern architecture and others are rambling Japanese palaces. They are surrounded by high embankments on which the trees grow and these are faced with massive walls of stone. Around the whole runs a wide moat and this is known as the castle. It was the seat of the feudal government and in it is now located the new palace of the mikado. The immense white stretching away on every side is filled with houses and there are a quarter of a million homes lying below you. Tokio has 1,600,000 inhabitants and a guide book of the town states that it was nothing before the year 1600. It is the youngest great city of the eastern world and it will probably grow under the new regime.—Frank G. Carpenter's Letter.

WILL THESE BE CALLED?

SOMETHING ABOUT MEN CABINET MAKERS ARE DISCUSSING.

They Are Senators Spooner and Hale and M. H. De Young, the California Journalist—Facts About Them, Grave and Gay.

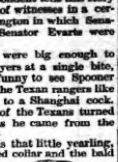
Senator Spooner, of Michigan, is one of those prominently mentioned as a probable member of the next cabinet. The senator is a small man, but he is gamey. A correspondent tells this story of an examination of witnesses in a certain case in Washington in which Senator Spooner and Senator Evarts were engaged:

"The witnesses were big enough to take both the lawyers at a single bite, and it was very funny to see Spooner side up to one of the Texan rangers like a game rooster to a Shanghai cock. One of the biggest of the Texans turned to a companion as he came from the stand and asked:

"'Who in —— is that little yearling, with the long horned collar and the bald faced shirt, that questioned me?'

"He's Senator Spooner of, Wisconsin,' was the reply.

"'He's littler than a pint cup,' said the ranger, 'but he talks as big as a mountain. I never see a kid of his size that was so —— easy.'"



SENATOR SPOONER.

Senator Spooner is a Hoosier by birth. He was born at Lawrenceburg, Ind., in 1843. So he is only about 75 years of age. In 1859 he removed with his father to Madison, one of the most beautiful places in Wisconsin, if not in the world. He was graduated at the state university in 1863. He served in the Forty-fifth regiment Wisconsin volunteers during the civil war, and was captain in the Fiftieth regiment. At the close of the war he was brevetted major. Then he was private secretary of Governor Lucius Fairchild. In 1867 he began his career as a lawyer, and served for several years as assistant attorney general of the state. Since 1870 he has been a resident of Hudson, where he has practiced his profession. In 1872 he went to the state assembly. He was elected United States senator as a Republican to succeed Angus Cameron, taking his seat March 4, 1885. His term will expire March 3, 1891.

The state of Maine is said to grow some pretty good timber for cabinet making, and many see a coming presidential adviser in Senator Hale of that state.

SENATOR HALE.

It was said of Senator Hale about a year and a half ago that having been accustomed to spend his winters in Washington and his summers in Europe, the people of the Pine Tree state were in danger of forgetting him altogether. Something had to be done. Mrs. Hale, woman like, took the burden upon herself, went to Ellsworth, Me., and in a great house and lived in it. Ellsworth is one of the most desolate places in Maine, perched as it is between pine forests and a bowlder strewn country. As in England fogs continually drift in and cover the town with mist and gloom.

The senator is a native of the state from which he gets his senatorial honor. He was born at Lewiston, Me., in 1836. He became a collegian; studied law and began practice in 1857. For nine years he held the position of county attorney for Hancock county. In 1866 and 1867 he was mayor of Lewiston, and from 1867 to 1880 a member of the state legislature. The Forty-first, Forty-second and Forty-third congresses contained Mr. Hale among their members. A re-election would not be new to him, as he held the postmaster generalship under President Grant and was tendered an appointment under President Hayes, but declined. He was a member of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth congresses. In addition to political capacities he was chosen delegate to three great national conventions—one at Cincinnati, in 1876, and the other two at Chicago, in 1868 and 1880. In the United States senate he succeeded Hannibal Hamlin, vice president for four years with President Lincoln. As in England, Mr. Hale took his seat March 4, 1881, and was re-elected in 1887, his term to expire in 1893.

The "big tree" state also has some material which she presents for this particular article, the president's cabinet. More than twenty years ago two young men, brothers, one of whom was M. H. De Young, started a theatrical paper in San Francisco. From this modest beginning grew The San Francisco Chronicle. It is now the leading paper on the Pacific coast and has an immense circulation. The De Young family have long had a feud with the family of Claus Spreckels, the California sugar millionaire, and there has been considerable lead flying at different times, but the war seems now to be over, at least there has been no shooting for several years. Mr. M. H. De Young was himself shot in 1884 by a son of Claus Spreckels.

It is said that the De Young brothers formerly as boys played about the mining camps of California, that their family were so poor that the mother and sisters were obliged to do washing for a living. There were three boys; one is now in an insane asylum, one has his life at the hands of a son of I. S. Kalloch, the minister whose career was from the first checkered, and the third, M. H. De Young, is the proprietor of The Chronicle. He has become a millionaire through the paper and is a prominent citizen. He is described as a short, well built man, with a rugged face.

The paper of which Mr. De Young is proprietor and manager is one of the most successful in the country, and up by "journalistic enterprise." The rule of the De Youngs was never to be beaten in the acquisition of news, and at times when laboring under the disadvantage of having their papers combined against them, and having to buy their telegraphic news in competition with the Associated Press, they still scored some strokes. Charles De Young was at the head so long as he lived, but now M. H. De Young is entire owner and manager.

KEELY'S CURIOUS CAREER.

He Has Kept a Secret for Nearly Thirty Years.

John W. Keely, of Keely motor fame, has been sent to prison for contempt of court. Judge Finletter, of Philadelphia, on April 7, 1887, ordered him to "operate and explain the mode of operation" of the Keely motor, so that experts appointed by the court might report as to the similarity of the machine which B. C. Wilson claims to have purchased of Keely and the Keely motor of today. Mr. Keely contended in his defense that he had not intentionally shown contempt, that on the contrary he had done everything in his power to obey the order of the court, and despite the fact that Professor Marks, one of the experts, had for years ridiculed his invention and pronounced it a swindle.

It was somewhere in the "sixties" that the public was startled by the announcement that a man in Philadelphia had discovered a new force, by which the motive power of the civilized world was to be revolutionized. Then there came a curiosity on the part of the public to know what the force was, but Mr. Keely, unlike German scientists, who give their inventions to the world, scorning to accept pay for them, did not propose to let out a secret of such vast importance. He kept it all to himself, and at once became understood that if the public wanted the secret it would have to pay for it.

A company was organized with plenty of capital to enable Mr. Keely to perfect his discovery and apply the power. It was generally supposed that all the stockholders would soon become millionaires, and happy days for Keely were put off from time to time, during which it was frequently announced that Mr. Keely had perfected everything, the invention would be patented and the golden harvest reaped.

After a while the capital paid in was exhausted. Another company was formed on the ruins of the first, new funds were advanced and the inventor went on with his work and his "fairy tales of science." Several years ago it was supposed that he had found pretty good application for his force in a gun. There was a grand trial before United States army officers, but there does not appear to have since been any revolution in the armament of the United States.

Meanwhile some of the most remarkable inventions of the age have been perfected and passed into use. Edison's application of electricity and the wonderful telephone have all come up since Keely announced that he had discovered a new force. Keely for twenty years has kept the stockholders of his company on the brink of fabulous wealth, but never paid a dollar. When they have become dissatisfied Keely has explained matters to some mutually agreed upon depositary, who has reported that there was great difficulty in Keely's secret, but that he didn't understand it.

Keely may have discovered a new force hitherto unknown to the world: the application at least is very slow. The world has been slow enough, in all conscience, in applying known forces without turning to new ones. The power of steam and electricity has been known for centuries—indeed, ever since the world began—but it remained for the Nineteenth century to set the locomotive a-going and to communicate across oceans. If Mr. Keely has really discovered a new force, certainly the world can afford to wait patiently for its application. Showing a electricity surely ought to suffice for the present. Perhaps Mr. Keely and all who have ever known him may pass away, indeed many a decade may roll away before the world will be the gainer from his discovery; but we must remember that the secret of the telephone has been in electricity for ages, and perhaps some day, long after Keely has passed away, he may be honored with Copernicus, or Galileo, or Franklin. Will this be so, or will Keely be lost among the many humbugs who never accomplished anything and never were likely to accomplish anything in the category of perpetual motion machines and machines for traveling alongside the birds? "Quien sabe." Meanwhile he is suffering the fate of unappreciated geniuses—indeed of the felon; for he is in jail.

James MacMillan Is Prominently Mentioned.

*James MacMillan is prominently men*tioned as the next United States senator from Michigan. Mr. MacMillan is a citizen of Detroit, is president of the Michigan Car works, and is supposed to be worth $15,000,000. He is not new to politics, having shown his ability as an *organizer at the head of campaign com*mittees. He succeeded Zach. Chandler, who died in 1879, as chairman of the Michigan state Republican committee, but served only a short time. He has been a member of the committee from Michigan several terms, and in 1886 and 1887 was its chairman. In 1876 he was presidential Republican elector. A prominent candidate for the United States senate to succeed Senator Conger, he withdrew just before the election. In personal appearance Mr. MacMillan is prepossessing. He is about 51 years old, wears spectacles and a gray mustache and goatee. Senator Palmer, whose place it is expected Mr. MacMillan will take, talks of retiring from the world of politics, but his friends are talking of him for governor. It is said that he would prefer being governor to senator.

Another Wreck on the Central.

Another wreck occurred on the New Jersey Central Railroad Sunday at Deck's switches, midway between Elizabeth and Elizabethport. A shifting engine was thrown across the track and several box cars were piled up in a heap and badly smashed. Travel over the road was much delayed until the damaged cars and locomotive were removed.

Crushed His Toes.

A heavy iron grating fell and crushed the toes on the left foot of Mr. Reuben McGinnis, of Harrison avenue, Elizabeth, while he was at work at the oil cloth factory, Saturday afternoon. Dr. M. B. Ling dressed the injury, which now confines Mr. McGinnis to the house.

PULLED HER RIVAL'S HAIR.

Recent Developments in the Illsley-Dunn Divorce Suit.

[From The New York Star.]

Harry Illsley is the proprietor of the sporting resort known as the DeBaud Hotel, at Scotch Plains, and, being of a sportive disposition, he was of late naturally away from home much of the time, leaving his attractive and pretty wife to dole out the liquids over the bar of the country inn.

Harry is about 30 years of age, dresses well, and is a favorite with the ladies, as later developments will prove. His wife is about the same age, and decidedly pretty. The couple have apparently passed the few years of their married relationship happily together. No children, however, came to brighten their household. About a year ago the tongues of a gossiping community took up the report that Mr. Illsley was paying marked attention to a young and pretty dressmaker in Plainfield that he was to his own wife, and in course of time the report reached Mrs. Illsley's ears.

She sought out the object of her husband's infatuation and, going to the woman's apartments on South Second street, gave her an unmerciful beating, pulling the hair from her head by handfuls.

People occupying rooms in the same house assert that Illsley was frequently seen to enter the dress-maker's apartments at night and to remain therefrom in the morning. The assault, therefore, furnished additional food for scandal.

After this escapade Harry and his wife dwelt peacefully together for a time, until Mrs. Illsley again learned of her husband's conduct, and a few weeks ago she left him and instituted proceedings for divorce, charging alimony and counsel fees. Mrs. Illsley engaged Craig A. Marsh to defend her, and her husband retained Messrs. Jackson & Coddington, of Elizabeth, and Hon. Wm. Cook, of New Brunswick, to represent him.

Several days were devoted to taking testimony. Special Master in Chancery John H. Van Winkle heard argument of counsel on both sides, and on Saturday read his opinion, which holds that the application of Mrs. Illsley should be granted in that the husband should pay counsel for his wife a fee of $75 and contribute $3 per week from the beginning of the suit toward Mrs. Illsley's support.

At the time the divorce proceedings were first instituted Mrs. Illsley met a merchant on the street, and during the course of their conversation the merchant made a bet with Mrs. Illsley of an entire new outfit of clothing that she would be living with her husband again before Christmas. Mrs. Illsley made a wager that she would not.

HER PISTOL DROVE HIM OFF.

A Plucky Borough Woman Shoots at an Intruder.

Mrs. John A. Goodwin, of Manning avenue, had quite an unpleasant visitor at her home about nine o'clock last evening. She and her daughter were alone in the house, Mr. Goodwin being down-town. Her daughter had retired for the evening; and she herself was sitting reading, when some one knocked at the front door. She called "Who's there?" No answer; but another knock. She again inquired "Who's there?" and this time a rough, harsh voice demanded admittance. This being refused, the fellow began to threaten her, at which she hastily ran upstairs, and, getting her daughter and her husband's pistol, threw up a window and ordered the fellow off the steps. He not obeying, she discharged the pistol, which had the desired effect, the man, whoever he was, running out of the yard and disappearing. It was too dark for her to see enough for identification. All that she could see was that he was a very large man.

TWO WORKMEN INJURED.

One Loses Fingers; Another Hurts His Hip.

Frank Bazley, age 31 years, a married man with one child, residing opposite the Pond Tool Works, where he is employed, had his hand crushed in one of the machines at the Works about five o'clock yesterday after noon, so badly that it was necessary to remove him to the Muhlenberg Hospital. This morning two fingers of the injured hand were amputated.

At about ten o'clock this morning James Phillips, age twenty years, unmarried, a laborer employed at the same place in the Pond Tool Works, had his hip injured while moving some machinery in the Works. He was removed to the Muhlenberg Hospital where he will be laid up for a week or two.

THE PUBLIC EVENING SCHOOL.

The First Session to be Held Next Tuesday.

Forty-eight young men and boys met the School Board in the Stillman High School last evening and were organized into an evening school.

Mr. Rush Rhees, a graduate of Amherst, is to take charge, with public school teachers—ladies—as assistants.

The first session will be next Tuesday at the High School, and school will be held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of each week. Rudimentary branches will be taught. One may receive lessons in whatever he desires. There will be a teacher in free-hand drawing.

Who Wants More Street Lights?

We understand that between now and the first of January the Electric Light Company is to add a number of lamps to the present street lighting system, and under an agreement made with Mr. Erickson, the Chairman of Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, no further increase after that date will be made for one year.

Any property-holders deeming the lighting a their vicinity insufficient ought at once to send in their applications to the Common Council for additional lamps.

Sneak-Thieves in the Borough.

Thirty-five cans of fruit were stolen from the grocery of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Tyson, of Manning avenue, North Plainfield, last week Thursday night; and an overcoat and a pair of gloves were stolen from the barn of Mr. Peter Cedar, of Somerset street.

REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES

TWO WARDS TAKE OPEN STAND FOR NO-LICENSE.

Dr. O. L. Jenkins, H. B. Newhall, R. T. Barnes, H. M. Beaman and E. D. Clark the Candidates for Council.—Other Nominations.

The Plainfield Republican primaries were held for each ward last night.

THE FIRST WARD

primary was called to order at Republican Headquarters shortly after eight o'clock. A large delegation of voters was present. Mr. J. B. Coward was elected Chairman and Mr. Nelson Runyon was chosen Secretary.

The delegates elected to the City Convention are: Messrs. Elias Bird, Gershom Frazee, J. B. Coward, Wm. Washington, Daniel Littell, Charles H. Rugg and William Clausen.

These are the nominations:

For Councilman—Dr. O. L. Jenkins.

For Constable—Robert Randolph.

For Justice-of-the-Peace—Lewis Peterson.

City Executive Committee—Messrs. J. B. Coward, Robert A. Meeker, and J. Fred MacDonald.

The Executive Committee was empowered to fill all vacancies which may occur.

THE SECOND WARD

primary was held at the Bryant school building.

The following nominations were made:

For Councilman, one year.—B. T. Barnes.

For Councilman, two years.—Henry B. Newhall.

For Justice-of-the-Peace—Cadwallader Jones.

City Executive Committee—F. A. Dunham, C. M. Goddard, George D. Patten.

Delegates to City Convention—F. O. Herring, F. A. Dunham, George Patten, William Messerschmidt, Stephen Cahoone, C. M. Goddard, F. X. Schoenmaker, John H. Doane, John Johnston.

The delegates were instructed that the sense of the primary was against granting licenses.

THE THIRD WARD

primary was held with F. E. Marsh Chairman, O. B. Leonard Clerk and T. O. Doane Inspector.

These were the nominations:

For Councilman—M. Marvin Dunham.

For Justice-of-the-Peace—M. M. Thorn.

City Executive Committee—E. R. Pope, Edw. L. Pisch, Geo. W. Rockefellow.

Delegates to City Convention—O. T. Warling, Wm. Stillman, F. E. Marsh, J. W. Murray, jr., T. O. Doane, Ernest R. Ackerman, O. B. Leonard.

THE FOURTH WARD

primary was called to order at Republican Headquarters shortly after nine o'clock. A large number of voters was in attendance. Mr. William Addis was chosen Chairman, and Mr. W. R. Codington was made Secretary.

The following were elected delegates to the City Convention: Messrs. E. W. Titsworth, T. J. Gillies, Abram Angleman, J. C. Randall, John Manchester, Amos Andrews, J. B. Higgins and Robert Mitchell.

Councilman—Mr. E. B. Clark.

For Justice-of-the-Peace—T. J. Gillies.

For Constable—Amos Andrews.

City Executive Committee—L. DeCamp, T. J. Carey, W. R. Codington.

The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the successful candidate be instructed that it is the sense of the primary that he shall be instructed to vote for no license in the coming next year."

A Card from Mr. Newhall.

TO THE VOTERS OF THE SECOND WARD:—I am informed that at the Republican primary meeting held last evening I was nominated as Councilman for the long term from the Second Ward.

I am also informed that immediately following my nomination there was presented and adopted a resolution intended to commit the nominees not only to a temperance policy of prohibition but to an absolute pledge under no circumstances to vote for licensing the sale of liquor.

I will not allow my fellow-citizens to cast their votes for me under the impression that I am in any way pledged on the subject of prohibition, or upon any other subject likely to come before the Common Council during the next two years.

It is not unlikely that during the term for which I was nominated a contingency may arise which would make it seem best to me, if a member of the Council, to cast my vote for liquor-licenses.

If I am elected to fill the position for which I am nominated, it must be with the clear understanding that my vote will always be cast towards the amount of such final result as I may believe to be for the best interests of our good city. HENRY B. NEWHALL.

BOYS TAUGHT TO SING.

Something About the Y. M. C. A. Singing Class.

The class for treble voices (as also one for adults which ought to accompany) is intended to procure a high standard of singing. By providing through the Association such instruction in voice-culture and music-reading as shall be valuable at home, in church and at the Y. M. C. A. meetings the aim is a high one, and no little care will betaken to reach the standard which it is hoped to attain. The condition of membership in the boys' classes will be as follows:

1.—A suitable age.

2.—A sufficient voice to warrant a good result from training.

3.—A written assurance from parents that they desire their son to join the class and that they will encourage them to attend regularly and promptly.

4.—And a promise that the boys when advanced shall in return for their instruction themselves impart the benefit they have received, by singing at the Y. M. C. A. when so requested.

St. Mary's Fair Clears $1,600.

The profits of St. Mary's church fair for the benefit of the parochial school are estimated to reach $1,400.

SAM. SMALL HIMSELF HATH SAID IT.

A Slap at Prohibitionists by Their Chosen Leader.

The scantiful of Prohibitionists in Plainfield who engaged the Rev. Sam Small to come to this city and exalt them to obtain money under false pretenses, by an alleged lecture entitled "From the Bar-room to the Pulpit", were wroth when we exposed them and replied to Mr. Small's attack on the Republican party. They re-engaged the Rev. Sam to come to this city to pay his respects to THE NEWS, which he did in his own unique style, and drew from us another reply, which did not lead them to hanker after any more. We showed that the methods of the Prohibitionists were Phobic, and that they were simply playing into the hands of the saloon. Now Sam. sees it in the same light. He was engaged to address the Prohibitionists in New York last Sunday, and he concurred in the views we expressed in our reply to him when he was here. The New York Tribune to-day refers to his address editorially as follows:

The Rev. "Sam." Small has a way of hurling out chunks of common sense with the velocity and destructiveness of a cannon-ball. One of these struck the Prohibition party of this town Sunday afternoon and knocked it even more senseless than it has been at any previous period of its history. He told the third party people that he didn't believe in National prohibition politics. The Prohibitionists had held the balance of power in fifty-two Congressional districts, and in several States, but by persisting in running independent tickets had left themselves without any representation. That comes, he said, of pulling party above principle, which was a mistake the liquor dealers did not make. Mr. Small might have gone further and reminded his Prohibition friends that not only do they fail to use their influence for temperance, but that all their work is thrown into the scale in behalf of immorality, drunkenness and crime. He might have suggested to them that it would have been better to elect Mr. Miller in this State, a pronounced temperance man, than Mr. Cleveland, a recognized saloon man. He might have told them that but for them probably 17,000 saloons now in this State would be closed to-day. The men who can not feel that they are responsible for the vast total of crime and wretchedness thus kept alive, and yet be undisturbed by the thought of it because they are so sure of their own wisdom, must be endowed with either superhuman self-conceit or very elastic consciences.

THE DAFT ELECTRIC MOTOR.

A Plainfielder's Invention on Trial in New York.

The weather was not favorable for the trial of the Daft Electric Motor on the Ninth Avenue Elevated Road last night. Around the Fourteenth street station, where the start was to be made, the wind howled and whirled the rain in scary corners the guests who were to take an electric ride. Nevertheless, the motor "Benjamin Franklin" glided up before the station with a train of three cars in a ghostly silence, spitting out lightning and blue fire in defiance of the storm, but without any thunderous accompaniment. Mr. C. K. Ernst, manager of the Elevated Road, and Sidney Dillon looked suspiciously into the little cab which was to draw the train, and having satisfied themselves that all was right stepped aboard. Nearly a hundred invited guests filled the cars, and the next instant the train glided away from the station.

The motor is nearly twice the size of the one with which Mr. Daft, the inventor, made his experiments two years ago. It now weighs ten tons and will carry as heavy a train, he claims, as the ordinary steam engine of eighteen tons which is used on this road.

Mr. Daft ran the motors. The engines generating the electricity are in Plinth street between Ninth and Tenth avenues. The circuit is completed by means of two wires, one of which runs over the roof and one running along the guard rail From this rail the motor gathers the electricity through an electric shoe.

The train moved swiftly, and Twenty-third street was reached in two and one-half minutes. For second street, up the steepest grade, in six and one-half minutes, and fifteen minutes in all was made. The down trip was made in seven minutes, giving a total of sixteen minutes for the circuit of nearly five miles. The trip is the first of a series of public trials which are to be made by the motor.

Mr. Leo Daft resides on Putnam street, Plainfield.

WHY NOT BETTER COUNTY ROADS?

Elizabethans Tired of District Independence.

[From The Elizabeth Journal.]

Another Winter season is here, and with it another six months of bad roads. From now until May or June the majority of all the roads in Union county will, for the most of the time, be in that plastic condition known as "unfit to drive over." Under the snow come and remain of sufficient thickness and for a sufficient length of time to give a good sleighing season, there will be little comfort in riding over Union county roads till kindly nature again warms the breezes and a hot sun to dry up the mud and give us the pleasant dirt road of Summer, with a little dust thrown in. Taking the whole year round, the Union county roads are poor a greater part of the time. These are exceptional localities in which this general condemnation does not apply, localities where cracked stone has been applied liberally and with splendid results, but as a rule the main thoroughfares across the country are in wretched condition. It will take a good deal of money to put them in proper condition, but that money must to come sooner or later. Good roads are what Union county must have. The law of self-preservation demands it.

Union county is losing every year that her bad roads remain unimproved. It costs more to travel over them than it would to pay for them every year. But so long as the present inadequate road system is in operation the county will be prevented from having the splendid roads it ought to have, and which it can have. Compare across the country are in wretched condition. It will take a good deal of money to put them in proper condition, but that money must to come sooner or later. Good roads are what Union county must have. The law of self-preservation demands it.

But so long as the present inadequate road system is in operation the county will be prevented from having the splendid roads it ought to have, and which it can have. Compare Union county roads with those of Middlesex and Somerset, and see how far behind we are. Middlesex has a splendid system of stone roads, and Somerset has a number of miles of the best roads in the State. Both are Democratic, and Mr. Trimmer voted against the bill on the passage last Spring.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

A MONSTER WITH HORNS.

Ravages of a Strange Animal in Jersey Stockyards.

NEW BRUNSWICK, Nov. 27.—A story comes to this city of the ravages of a strange animal among the stockyards of the farmers on the Raritan River Swamp. Many farmers have lost sheep, and many more of them have had their lambs emptied. No one has seen the animal except one hired man of doubtful veracity, who says that it is a big black monster with horns, about twice the size of a sheep.

Last Winter the farmers were excited over the depredations of what must have been the same animal. Sheep and pigs disappeared then just as now, and the only trace of their whereabouts was a series of irregular, oddly-shaped tracks. A doctor claimed to know what kind of animal would make such tracks, though many averred that their peculiar irregularity marked them as those of a kangaroo, and it was supposed that such an animal, having escaped from Philadelphia's Centennial, would refuge in the wilds of Jersey. This proved an unsatisfactory theory, however, because it is not known that kangaroos have a special liking for sheep and pigs to the extent of eating half a dozen of them each week, and the identity of the mysterious animal still remains. In fact, as it has not occurred to the farmers that the midnight thief may be of the human species, and they are the organized a committee of five to investigate the matter, with a search for the mysterious animal will be made.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

Joseph Jennings, who has a carp pond at Jennings, recently drew the water off and found that from fifteen breeders left in the pond last Spring he now had about four thousand carp.

Georges W Davies, one of the founders of the Young Men's Christian Association of New Brunswick and a prominent church worker, died yesterday. He was for twenty years head bo k-keeper for the Norfolk and New Brunswick Hosiery Company.

The Camden Evening Telegram has been purchased from John H. Fort by Thomas A. Hamilton, a well-known newspaper man formerly of the Camden Courier and Upton S. Jeffreys of the local staff of The Courier. The plans of the new owners have not made public.

Bennett B. Walling and Mrs. Mary Morris, residents of Port Monmouth, were married at that place a few days ago by the Rev. William Swan, Pastor of Baptist church. The groom is 82 years of age and the bride is 76. It is said that the marriage was the result of an agreement on the bride's part in case of Gen. Harrison's election.

General E. Burd Grubb, Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, and staff will pay an official visit to Atlantic City to-night and will be the guest of Post Hudson, No. 67, and will be received at the Morris Guards' Armory. There will be visiting posts from Hammonton, Egg Harbor City, and other places.

WAS THIS WOMAN MURDERED?

The body of Dinah Robinson, a colored woman, was found yesterday morning lying between the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad near Lawrence Station, seven miles from Trenton. There were several cuts and bruises on the body, which was cold and stiff when discovered. The body had evidently been lying where it was found all night. The County Physician declines to say that the woman met her death by foul play, as the wounds on the body and the scratches on the face may have been made by a blunt instrument. An investigation is being made. The woman was last seen alive Saturday night in company with several colored men at Lawrence. Near the body was found an iron pin used in coupling cars. There was a report circulated on the ground of the dead woman, and this wound is supposed to have been inflicted with a coupling pin. Coroner Hall has impaneled a jury and will hold an inquest Wednesday.

The Child of the Sierras.

Miss Annie Pixley is to appear as "Mlle. the Child of the Sierras" in Stillman Music Hall Friday night.

"Miss Pixley"—says an exchange—"is one of the very few comediennes on the American stage, and her personality, beauty and natural wealth, as well as her artistic and finished acting, have made her a great favorite. Miss Pixley's first appearance in this city has been remarkably successful, and she has evidently increased her popularity in all the large cities of the country from the first week that her name appeared on the bills as a star. Her support is also a strong one, and is sufficiently to her worth as an artiste, as she never condescended, even in the days when she was only a reputation, to cheap-jor questions, and shrunk from no legitimate opportunity of showing to the public ought to be proud."

Miss Pixley will wear a number of new and beautiful costumes and will sing several new songs.

Two "Dems" for High-License

I. H. Trimmer, of Hunterdon county, a member of the Assembly from New Jersey, and Wm. S. Naughright, a newly-elected member from Morris county, are reported to have declared that they will not vote against the High-License law in this State. Both are Democrats, and Mr. Trimmer voted against the bill on the passage last Spring.

A NOVEMBER BLIZZARD.

It Does Untold Damage Along the Coast.

MANY SAILORS WERE DROWNED.

Terrible Tales of Shipwreck from Many Places—Great Destruction of Property. Beaches Strewn with Debris—Telegraph and Railroad Lines Blocked.

BOSTON, Nov. 27.—The storm has abated somewhat here. It has been much more destructive along the coast than was the blizzard, and the damage to telegraph and telephone lines is almost as great. Wrecks are reported by the score every life saving station, and while considerable loss of life is reported it is feared that another day will show still more. But no eager reporter can get to the scene, as all the telegraph wires are down.

The schooner Avalon Millery, from St. John, N. B., for New York, with a cargo of 600,000 feet of spruce lumber, owned by Brothers, is ashore on Spectacle Island, in Boston harbor, and it is the crew were swept overboard by the gale. Their names are Charles Hall, of Gloucester, and James Tidd, also a Nova Scotian. A large American bark was stranded on Highland light Saturday night. Her name could not be learned, but it is probable that a full list of her crew will be known before long

Col. Shepard's Advice.

When Frank Gray went east last spring to become business manager of The New York Mail and Express he naturally felt timid lest his hearty western manners should shock his new associates and stand in the way of his success in that new field. One day his employer, Co. Elliott F. Shepard, invited him to lunch at Delmonico's, and a superb lunch it was to involving numerous courses and a vast amount of display. After this shbwy affair Col. Shepard drew Gray aside and said very seriously to him: "My young friend, I should grieve to wound your feelings, but there is one thing which I think I ought to tell you—one bit of advice which may come with propriety from me, an older and more experienced man, to you who are just starting upon a business career."

"Why, certainly," said Gray, eagerly. "You have a right, Col. Shepard—an undoubted right to advise me in matters which pertain to our mutual affairs; nay, it is your duty, for, as you say, I am young and unsophisticated, while, on the other hand, you are older and widely experienced. So, therefore, I beg that you will feel no hesitancy about confiding to me this counsel of which you speak, and which, I suspect, will greatly facilitate my success in New York journalism."

"But I fear," replied Col. Shepard, "that I shall wound your feelings."

"Have no fears on that score," cried Gray; "it ill becomes either of us to flinch in the face of duty."

"Well, then," said Col. Shepard, impressively, "what I wanted to tell you is this: Always eat ice cream with a fork—in fact, never eat with a spoon when a fork can be used instead."—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

A Few Errata.

A number of errors crept into the story on the first page of last week's issue, writes A. W. Bellow, in The Yankee Blade, the printer being intoxicated and the editor being off, that is to say, off on a hunting expedition:

For "she fell into a river," read "reverie."

For "he wore red headed hair," read "he was in hereditary heir."

For "in front of the mansion he had the bull pup," read "to pull up."

For "darling, this is your nasal morn," read "natal."

For "never was so awfully hungry in my life," read "angry."

For "you say she ate me with a smile," read "satiate."

For "she did not for a moment cease her violent trombone," read "trembling."

For "he gently threw her played out shawl around her," read "plaid."

For "some said it was the spinage meningitis," read "spinal."

For "Herbert, I know you rascal," etc., read "risk all."

For "she saw his lip grip ale," read "grow pale."

For "is it possible! And me owe for board, with nothing to sustain me," read "overboard."

For "he threw both arms around her ancient golden aunt," etc., read after "her."

For "but my age must be remembered," read "remembered."

For "her heart was filled with et ceteras," read "et cetera."

For "you are my last darling," read "lost."

For "I am thin, I am wholly thin," read "thine."

How He Secured a Pass.

When Agnes Booth was here as Mrs. Schoeffel her husband was on the door upstairs at McVicker's one night when a young man presented himself and asked that the privileges of the house be extended by reason of the young man's position as correspondent of some eastern newspaper. Mr. Schoeffel said he could not recognize the young man in that capacity.

"I desire to know who you are, sir," said the correspondent. "I'll attend to you in my paper."

"My name is Schoeffel, sir; John B. Schoeffel. You can have my name and be —— to you, sir."

"Didn't hear the name aright," said the fourth estate.

"Schoeffel, sir; J-o-h-n, John Schoeffel."

"Write it for me; I want to get it right," responded the correspondent.

Mr. Schoeffel wrote the name on a card and almost flung it in the correspondent's face.

That night when the "count up" was going on Mr. Schoeffel found his autograph among the tickets, and over it was written "pass two." The correspondent had utilized the autograph at the box office. Mr. Schoeffel is now the partner of Henry Abbey.—Chicago Times.

CYCLING IN EUROPE.

PLEASING INCIDENTS OF A JOURNEY FROM PARIS TO LYONS.

Solving the Question of Guide Books—Requiring a Break—Gestures and Signs of More Value Than Many Words—Cheap Lodgings—In a Snow Storm.

On a cool afternoon, the 1st of October, I started out from Paris on my bicycle for a tour down through France to Marseilles and along the Riviera into Italy. The several guide books, which are almost a necessity for such a trip, especially to one like myself, with no knowledge of the French or Italian languages, I could not carry along with me in the knapsack, but I could at least send them along by mail to the different points where they would be needed, and by so doing lighten the load in the knapsack. So I took "Northern Italy" with me, for that book began at Lyons and struck in Marseilles and Nice. "Central Italy" I sent to Florence, to be called for when I reached there, and "Southern Italy" I sent to Rome. Then, with a road map of France in the knapsack, I rode out through the 5th. Cloud gate, climbed up through Meudon and out of the great basin in which Paris is situated and out upon the level or slightly undulating country to the south of the beautiful city in which I had spent a month so pleasantly.

The second element I made, however, resulted in bringing the well filled knapsack down with such a strain upon one of the hooks that it broke short off. Here was trouble to start with. But the coil of pliable wire, which I bought for five cents in a small town in Indiana in 1886, and which was of great service one day out on the plains about Cheyenne, in Yellowstone Park once more proved to be a very handy thing to have in the house, and, with the break repaired, I was soon on my way again.

On leaving Paris I was advised to take a more circuitous route to Fontainebleau to avoid the block pavement which extends for miles over many of the direct roads leading to the city, but after following the route written out for me by a wheelman, who had himself never been over it, and finding nothing but cobblestones, I struck out for the asphalt road to find the direct road to Fontainebleau. To the first man I met I said: "Monsieur, the route to Fontainebleau." So much I could say in French, but no more. He bot only began to explain very explicitly the way—which, of course, I could not understand—but he also used many gestures and signs, which were of more value to me than a volume of words. When I came to the next turn in the road I repeated my first lesson in French to some one else, and in that manner, after being led six or eight miles out of my way by the wrong advice to start with, I got to the direct route and had no more trouble.

Since then I have found that one gesture, in directing me to take the next right or the next left in going through a town or in looking up the postoffice, is worth more than the most careful verbal directions. "Monsieur, the post and telegraph," if repeated every few blocks in French, which is much the same as in English, will lead one to the postoffice in any large French town or city. And the French are particularly free with their gestures, so I get along very nicely in regard to finding the way, for not only are there some posts along the main roads giving the distance in kilometers to the next place, but at every cross road there are blue sign boards, so that a wheelman, though a foreigner, need not err, but travel along in comparative confidence. I forged on south Fontainebleau the first night, but at dark found myself twenty miles from that place, and with little else than the open country for prospect. The color of the stones is considerably lighter than that of the surrounding soil, and after gliding along a mile or more over the beautifully smooth road it was quite disquieting to ride up over the brow of a low hill and, in the dark distance, see the light colored pavement rising up before me, like Banquo's ghost, between the long lines of tall shade trees, giving me a premonition of the pounding I must endure before the next town could be reached.

But the lights of houses finally came in sight at the top of the hill, and I walked down into the town, for the place was too poorly lighted to ride with safety. To the first man I met I said: "Monsieur, the hotel or boarding house." He did not understand my French, and so, for his sake, I shortened the sentence into "the hotel," for I found I was by no much volubility, making it difficult for the French people to understand their own language. I saw that they could not grasp a long French sentence. "Hotel" the man understood, and pointing to a lighted lamp in front of a building down the street he started off. The first I went straight for the fire and found a very good hotel. At least they understood perfectly what I wanted when I said: "I am hungry, I sleep." Those few words I picked up in Paris and hid them carefully away for just such use as they now were put to, for of all the words in the French language these two "hungry" and "sleep" were sure to be the most important ones to me.

The next morning a large bowl of hot milk, about a wineglass of black coffee brought in a bottle and some bread were my breakfast. The coffee curdled the milk as soon as it was poured into it, though I did not know but it always acted that way in France. The best sugar, of which there is a great quantity grown in France, helped to make the coffee palatable, however. The bill at that hotel was $1.20. The next night I found fully as good accommodations at the first hotel to which I applied, and the charge was but eighty cents for a whole thing—dinner, room, breakfast and service.

The country from Paris through Fontainebleau, Montargis, Moulins and La Palisse is generally level or slightly undulating, but to Roanne it is more hilly, and from there towards Lyons, for twenty miles, it is really mountainous. In one of the climbs, I know, that entire distance, and before I got to the top the snow blew across the road and the hills were white. Even the exercise of hill climbing, with a thick coat on and the knapsack on my back, was hardly sufficient to keep my body warm with the wind blowing in gale from the north. It would be a most enjoyable trip over these hills in summer weather, for even with the clouds and sleet shutting out much of the view to the south the prospect in all other directions was very extended and showed smooth, rounded hills capped with clusters of tiled roofed houses, harmonizing well with the reddish, upturned pantile roofs of the cottages. The only pleasant incident I had in the three hours' climb was the coast that was sure to come, and when it did come I enjoyed it to the utmost. The first of the miles was down a steep road, loosely road which wound about the sides of the hill were made in fifteen minutes, and after that there were several short coasts of a mile or more, but the one especially fine thing, I thought, at a town called Bailly. I reached Lyons that afternoon about 5 o'clock, having ridden 150 miles in the past two days. The distance ridden from Paris was 383 miles, and the whole distance ridden since leaving Glasgow has been 2,223 miles.—George B. Tinker in New York World.

LOVE'S FIDELITY.

Set me whereas the sun doth parch the grass,
Or where his beams do not dissolve the ice;
In temperate heat, wherever he is felt and seen;
In prostrate pride of people mad or wise;
Set me in high, or yet in low degree;
In long or short, in free or bonded day;
In clearest sky, or where clouds thickest be;
In lusty youth, or when my hairs are gray;
Set me in heaven, in earth, or else in hell,
In hill or dale, or in the foaming flood:
Thrall, or at large, alive whereso I dwell,
Sick or in health, in ill fame or good:
Here will I be; and only with this thought
Content myself although my chance be naught.
—From the Italian of Petrarch.

THE "LATE MODERN" CRAZE.

A Craze for the Newest Instead of What Is Oldest.

There is a new craze this fall. It is a craze for what is new instead of what is oldest in household furniture, bric-a-brac and related articles. Those who are the victims of this craze do not go up and down the city attending auction sales in the second hand shops in search of claw footed tables, high shouldered clocks, sniffers, spinning wheels, china dogs and the like, to be restored to be antiques or the money refunded. No. None of these things move them. The fact is that they have renounced the old and have flown for relief to the contemporaneous. The newer a thing is the better they like it. Unless, for instance, a piece of furniture is so fresh from the manufacturer that the varnish is still a trifle sticky it fails to attract them. They call themselves the Society for the Promotion of the New; they have adopted as their motto, "Is not this one of the newer times were better than these?" and they have chosen Mr. Veneering as their patron saint.

The origin of the society is rather interesting. Several ladies well known as indefatigable collectors of old things spent last summer in a quaint village among the New England hills. They were aware that the village had acquired a high reputation among the lovers of the old, because of the many venerable warming pans, sideboards, candlesticks and spinning wheels that had been collected and had been induced to part with for a consideration to meet a great popular want. The ladies settled down on one of the shaded streets of the village, reflecting that the place was dull and hot, but "sustained and soothed" by the hope of hunting up and purchasing at a bargain a lot of choice old things to take back with them to the metropolitan. The harvesters had been through that field and had done thorough work, and so, too, had the gypsies who had preceded them. Those ladies arrived on the scene there was not a portable thing left for sale—save, possibly, a pair of chickens—in the village that was more than a year or a year and a half old.

The grief and despair of the collectors may be imagined. At first they refused to be comforted, although the village pastor called and did his best. At length one of them suddenly dried her eyes and exclaimed to the others: "I have it. The very thing! Why didn't we think of it before? Let's cut the old and go in for the new." Her comrades in misfortune were delighted with the suggestion and at once resolved to adopt it. Such was the genesis of this interesting craze; so it came to pass that these collectors suffered the "late Modern," as one of them styled it, to take the place in their affections that had been held by the Early Ancient.—New York Tribune.

Life on a Chinese Sampan.

The most interesting feature of Chinese life to me was that on board their boats, or sampans, as they are called. These boats are about 30 or 40 feet long with a flush deck and very low sides, except midships, where they have a little covering, resembling somewhat the gondolas of Venice. They generally have two masts, upon which are two very peculiar sails, made of light cloth, with strips of bamboo running horizontally about six inches apart. This is really the most convenient arrangement for a small sail that I ever saw. If you want to take a single reef you give a slight pull on a rope and the lower strip of bamboo comes up close to the one above; if a double reef, then a harder pull brings the two lower up to the third strip. I never saw boats sailed better than by the men on board them. They are built so light that they are not at all hard to row.

Upon these boats live whole families of three and even four generations. My sampan, for which I paid the small sum of $1 a day, and which was at my use the whole time, both night and day, being made fast to the stern of the boat in which I was on board, had the grandfather and mother, the mother and father and three grandchildren. Where they all stowed themselves I cannot imagine, and they all lived, ate and slept on board, never, if ever, went on shore. The women work just as hard as the men, or even more so, as they generally have a baby slung on their backs, which is the peculiar way of carrying children, both there and in Japan. These women take a wide piece of cloth, which they first pass around their neck in about the middle, then the child's legs are spread out, one on each side of the woman's back. The cloth is then brought down over the child, leaving its head above one of the mother's shoulders; then the ends are passed under him and tied around the waist. I do not know whether this arrangement has a very soothing effect, or whether it is their nature, but I certainly never heard a child cry, either in Japan or China.—Samuel F. Parrar in Chicago Journal.

An Anecdote of Mr. Blaine.

A Philadelphia business man tells this incident of Mr. Blaine's visit to London. One day he happened into the establishment of a well known bootmaker and asked to see some shoes. Having selected a pair to his liking, Mr. Blaine inquired the cost, at the same time casually remarking that he had been referred to the house by a friend in Lancashire, from which district he had himself just run up to London for a short time. "But you are not an Englishman, sir," said the attendant who was waiting on him. "And why not?" said Mr. Blaine. "Do I not look like an Englishman? And did I not say I hailed from Lancashire?" "You may have just come from Lancashire, and I do not say that your looks are not English," answered the salesman, "but an Englishman would not have asked the 'cost' of these shoes, sir. He would have asked the 'price.'"—New York Tribune.

Internal Trouble in Austria.

Austria is being alarmed with the beginning of what may lead to serious internal trouble. Hungary and Galicia are about to enter upon a struggle for autonomy similar to that enjoyed by Hungary. They wish to have their emperor crowned king of Bohemia, as he is now crowned king of Hungary. The Hungarians are opposed to this idea, being unwilling to have another separate kingdom established, thereby lessening the dignity of theirs. The Poles also talk of obtaining special recognition by having the emperor crowned king of Galicia. The German element sides with the Hungarians, wishing to preserve the monarchy in its present state. The Czechs and Poles together make a formidable power, and the opinion is freely entertained that unless Francis Joseph accepts the programme Bohemia will be permanently disaffected with strong leanings toward Russia.—New York Sun.

POLITICAL GOSSIP.

WILL "JOE" CANNON BE THE NEXT SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE?

And Will Senators Frye and Stockbridge Be Given Seats in the Incoming President's Cabinet?—Points in the Lives of Those Three Americans.

One of the coming men of the Republican party and now much spoken of for speaker of the Fifty-first congress, is the Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, of the Fifteenth Illinois district, embracing the counties of Champaign, Coles, Douglas, Edgar and Vermilion. There is not a politician in the United States who has had a more regular and normal growth than this now prominent member of the Illinois delegation. He was born May 7, 1836, near the historic battlefield of Guilford Court House, in Guilford county, N. C., and was reared and educated among the Quakers. At an early age, however, he was taken thence by his parents to Parke county, Ind., where his father, Dr. Cannon, was long and favorably known. He received a large part of his early education at the common schools of the county, and a somewhat advanced course at Bloomingdale, a few miles from his father's residence. While Joseph was still a lad his father, returning late one night from a visit to a friend, was drowned in what was popularly called a "sinkhole" in Sugar creek, or Rocky river, and the body, thrown upon his own resources thereafter, made his own way in life. Ben-wing to Vermilion county, Ill., he studied law, located at Danville, took to politics naturally and became a very ardent Republican when that party was formed, as his education had made him a strong opponent of slavery. Indeed, it may be said parenthetically that in every part of the western and southern portions of the states of emigrants from the old slave states, and especially the Quakers from North Carolina, were the most ardent anti-slavery men. As was natural by one of their number in Indiana, they were present when the Republican party was born, assisted in forming it and were ready for it long before it came.

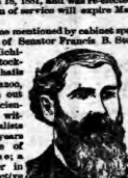
Neither history nor tradition g back to a time when Guilford county, N. C., was not strongly anti-slavery throughout. As early as the date of the Mecklenburg declaration of independence, to wit, May 20, 1775, the pioneers of the upper western part of the state of North Carolina expressed their opposition to the system of African slavery. At the close of the revolutionary war, and for the ensuing fifty years, the Quaker population of Guilford county gradually increased until it became in a sense a Quaker anti-slavery stronghold as well as a center of educational influence. New Garden seminary is even now one of the most noted educational institutions in the state of North Carolina. As early as 1830 William Swain published The Greensboro Advocate, an outspoken exponent of Free Soil sentiment, and from that time until the outbreak of the war the Quakers seldom failed to review their testimony against slavery. From that section an immense emigration went to the vicinity of Richmond, Ind., and later to Hendricks county and to Parke, the new county of the Wabash, which now contains about 600 Quaker voters. Surrounded as with such surroundings and educated by such a class of people, it is plain that Mr. Cannon was both by inheritance and conviction an ardent anti-slavery man.

JOSEPH G. CANNON.

Just before the war he was elected states attorney in Illinois and served in that position until December, 1860. After four years devoted to the practice of law he was elected in 1872 to the Forty-third congress, and has been re-elected successively to each succeed ing congress, sometimes by very large majorities, having thus been fifteen years in continuous congressional service, which, with his marked ability as a parliamentarian, eminently qualifies him for the position of speaker.

The believer in the persistency of family traits and hereditary human tendencies might collect volumes of testimony in the vicinity where Mr. Cannon was born and still more where he spent his boyhood. The immigrant Scotchman, as it is commonly called in Indiana, is indeed but a liberalized and westernized reproduction of the New Garden neighborhood in Guilford county, N. C., and a list of the names taken alphabetically from the taxpayers of the two townships would probably show two-thirds of the same family names. Still more marked are the personal traits, the intellectual tendencies and the moral bias of the two populations. Mr. Cannon's father was long and widely known in Parke as a humane, skillful and conscientious physician and a reliable man in every station of life. It is not probable that any man in the county was so widely acquainted, esteemed, and the tragic circumstances of his death add to it a melancholy interest which causes the incidents of his life to be matters of household talk in the community today. His firmness, conscientiousness and earnest devotion to what he conceived to be right reappear in his son, and the friends of Mr. Cannon confidently affirm that in all the scandals which agitated the country during the years following the war and into the early years of his service in congress, there was not a single allegation made against him of any conduct unworthy of an American or the representative of a free people.

Of course everybody is talking about cabinet possibilities and probabilities just now. One of the most frequently mentioned as a fit man to enter this advisory council of the republic's chief magistrate is Senator W. P. Frye, of Maine, the portfolio named in the connection being that of the navy. During the Fiftieth congress Mr. Frye is a member of the committee on rules. He was the only member of that committee who voted for the Platt resolution, requiring consideration of executive nominations in open session. William P. Frye, of Lewiston, Me., was born in that city Sept. 2, 1831. He was graduated at Bowdoin college in 1850, and then took up the practice of law. He was a member of the state legislature in 1861-62 and '67, was mayor of the city of Lewiston in 1867-68, was attorney general of the state of Maine in 1867-69, and was elected a member of the state republican executive committee in 1873, and was chairman of it in 1874-75. During the latter year he was made a trustee of Bowdoin college. In 1881 he received the degree of LL. D. from Rutes college. He was a presidential elector in 1876, was a delegate to the national republican conventions in 1872, 1876 and 1880; and was elected chairman of the Republican state committee of Maine to succeed James G. Blaine, resigned, in November, 1881. He was elected as a representative to the Forty-second, Forty-third, Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh congress, and was elected to the United States senate as a Republican to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Blaine, and took a seat March 4, 1881, for the full term of six years beginning March 3, 1889.



W. P. FRYE.

Another name mentioned by cabinet speculators in that of Senator Francis B. Stockbridge, of Michigan. Mr. Stockbridge, who hails from Kalamazoo, gets more fun out of his own deficiencies than the wildest Jayhawker can. He is 63 years old, a native of Bath, Maine; a hard worker in his youth and active business man in middle life, he made his money in Michigan lumber and enjoys spending it to suit himself. In 1857 he opened a lumber yard in Chicago, and acquiring large lumber trusts in Michigan, located in that state in 1857, was elected to the legislature in 1860, to the state senate in 1871, and early in 1887 was chosen to represent Michigan in the United States senate.

FRANCIS B. STOCKBRIDGE.

F. S. STOCKBRIDGE.

He spent $100,000 on a mansion in Kalamazoo, and furnished it in luxurious style, "just to please the home folks," he said, as he does not care much for luxury himself. Shortly after taking possession he invited one of his friends, a Michigan horseman, to visit him and inspect the place. The friend remarked: "Well, Frank, you've got a mighty fine house, and I reckon there's nothin' more you want."

"Yes," said Mr. Stockbridge, "I suppose this is very pretty, but there's just one other thing that's lacking."

"What's that?"

"A parrot."

"A parrot! Now, what on earth do you want of a parrot, Frank?"

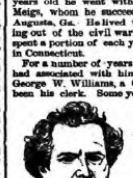
"I'd like to have him sit right over the front door," said Mr. Stockbridge, "so that every time he saw me coming he'd begin and holler, "Here comes that ——— fool agin!"

DANIEL HAND.

Sketch of an American Philanthropist. His Charities.

Mr. Daniel Hand, whose gift for the education of the negroes of the south has attracted so much attention, has had a singular history. He is a native of Connecticut, where his family has lived ever since the first white state was settled. He was born in East Guilford in 1801. When he was 17 years old he went with his uncle, Daniel Meigs, whom he succeeded in business, to Augusta, Ga. He lived there till the breaking out of the civil war, though he always spent a portion of each year at his old home in Connecticut.

For a number of years before the war he had associated with him in business a Mr. George W. Williams, a Georgian who had been his clerk. Some years before the war



DANIEL HAND.

Williams had established a branch in Charleston under the name of Hand, Williams & Wilcox. During the war Mr. Williams remained in the Confederate states and Mr. Wilcox was at Augusta. Williams was a Union man and Hand's capital, which the Confederate government sequestered to confiscate, as Mr. Hand was a northern man and an Abolitionist. Meantime Mr. Hand had retired to the mountains of North Carolina. After the war he removed to the north, and left his partner Williams to make up the accounts of the firm, allowing him unlimited time.

The man who has been so munificent to the colored race is somewhat striking in appearance and ratlike like a literary man or professional man than a merchant. Wealth has never been his ambition and yet riches have come to him. He is a man of large reading on scientific and literary subjects, common humanity.

His partner, Mr. Williams, became involved in cotton speculations which proved unfortunate, and was pressed hard by his creditors Mr. Hand, who was by far the largest creditor, declined to push him. "If Mr. Williams lives," he said, "he will pay his debts; I am not afraid of losing what is his."

There is something singular in an avowed anti-slavery man growing rich in the heart of the south, in wealth escaping the Confederate confiscators, living quietly at his fortune to the race the befriending of which caused his withdrawal to the mountains of North Carolina.

PERRY S. HEATH.

Will He Be the Dan Lamont of President-Elect Harrison?

Perry S. Heath, the clever Washington correspondent of The Indianapolis Journal, has been mentioned as the probable private secretary of President-elect Harrison. He would make an excellent one. He is scarcely 30 years of age, and is a bright, well educated fellow of irreproachable character and wide acquaintance with men and affairs. He was on intimate terms with Mr. Harrison during the latter was in the senate, and he has kept up a correspondence with him ever since. Mr. Harrison respects him highly and trusts him implicitly.

Heath is a good looking bachelor stands 5 feet 8 inches. Washington correspondents are and although with a handsome pile of cash, which he has gathered by hard work and lucky investments, so that he could afford to give up his newspaper connections and take the small $2,500 salary of the president's private secretary without fear of financial embarrassment. Mr. Heath has also published a volume of his recollections of Russia and can dispose of the pertinacious office seeker in three languages. He is tall, straight and slim, with a large, long face, red cheeks and a light mustache. He is, of course, one of the members of the Gridiron club, which contains the cream of the Washington correspondents, and is one of the best fellows in the club. He would be very popular with the newspaper men if he succeeds Col. Lamont.

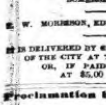
Proclamation by the Governor.



I, Robert S. Green, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for all His blessings to us as a people, during the year now drawing to a close. The earth has yielded its produce bounteously; prosperity has attended the labors of industry, and to His mercy we have been spared from the ravages of disease.

I recommend that on that day the people of this State, abstaining from all unnecessary secular employment, meet in their accustomed places of worship, and give thanks to God for all His goodness in the past, with prayer that He will bless us and all others with a continuance of His bounty, and the nation, State and people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

Given under my hand and privy seal, in the city of Trenton, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

(L. S.) ROBERT S. GREEN, Gov.

By the Governor:

ROBERT S. GREEN, JR., Private Secretary

JOTTINGS.

—Gold was first coined in Christendom in 1339.

—The manufacture of paper bottles is to be begun on a very extensive scale.

—All-n, the stationer, is beginning to talk Christmas. See his advertisement.

—A German officer cannot marry an American woman without Bismarck's consent.

—The W. C. T. U. and the Y. W. C. T. U. will hold a carnival of months in the Crescent rink early in December, as is told by the advertisement to-day.

—The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Crescent avenue church will meet for sewing at the house of Mrs. Newhall, 20 East Seventh street, Friday at two o'clock.

—The bazar elsewhere advertised is unique, its object most worthy, and we trust it will meet with the success it deserves, as we have no doubt it will with such a host of good friends of the cause to sustain it.

—The regular meeting of the Building Committee and Canvassers of the Y. M. C. A. was held at the residence of Mr. Hiram McGee last evening. Encouraging reports were received and plenty of new work was planned.

—The prayer meeting usually held Friday evening under the auspices of the Young People's Association of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will be held this week in conjunction with the regular Wednesday evening meeting in Grace church.

—The richest Japanese outside of the royal family is said to be R. Kondo, of the Mining University of Japan. He is the operator of sixteen gold, silver and copper mines, and is about to open a large number of coal mining districts in order to get a knowledge of the mining machinery used there.

—Engineers on the Central Railroad have been provided with printed slips on which they are required to enter the time, place, cause and duration of every stop. The engineers are satisfied with the plan because it will place the responsibility for delays where it belongs and give them a chance to show that delays are not often caused by the engine.

A DISHONEST SERVANT-GIRL.

Arrested With Proceeds of Guilt in Her Possession.

Policeman Patrick Lynch arrested Ella Goff, a colored girl, at her home on West Fourth street, Plainfield, Monday evening. The charge was larceny from her employer, Mrs. Chetwood Smith, of Westfield; and the evidence was so conclusive of guilt that the girl was committed to jail yesterday morning to await the action of the Grand Jury. Constable John M. C. Marsh, of Westfield, took her to Elizabeth.

Mrs. Smith hired Ella some time ago. The girl, who is only seventeen years of age, seemed to be very bright and willing to work, and Mrs. Smith was proud of her new help. Last Wednesday the lady was called away from her home, and during her absence Ella repaid the confidence placed in her by ransacking the house from top to bottom, opening trunks and drawers and taking whatever pleased her eye, and hiding the things in her room.

Everything went undiscovered until Sunday morning, when Ella suddenly disappeared. Mrs. Smith immediately began to think that all was not right, and, going to the room which had been occupied by Ella, she made a thorough search, which resulted in her finding two valuable shawls, a silk dolman, and satchel, besides several other small articles, which she recognized as her personal property. On making further investigation she missed two dresses, one a seal-skin plush and the other a handsome satin. Mrs. Smith at once notified the authorities. When arrested Ella had both of the missing dresses in her possession.

Justice J. Oakley Nodyne issued the commitment.

The latest Thanksgiving problem is this:

"A man has twenty-six turkeys to kill in six days; he is to kill an odd number every day. How can this be done?"

PERSONAL.

Miss Gomes, of Brooklyn, and Miss Phyliky, of New York, are visiting at the residence of Mr. Manning Stelle, of Central avenue.

Miss Alice O. Smith, of West Second street, will play for the Y. M. C. A. of Madison Thanksgiving night for their first concert of this season.

BAPTISTS FIND READY CUSTOM.

Their "Cake and Apron" Sale a Characteristic Success.

Woman's graceful presence may have had a great deal to do with it, but the qualities of the wares was also a strong argument in favor of the quick sales awarded the Young People's Association of the First Baptist church yesterday afternoon and evening.

This "cake and apron sale" partook largely of the nature of a church "fair". There were rich triumphs of the art of home-bakery; dress-coverings with usefulness disguised in dainty prettiness; nosegays of hot-house roses, with sprays of smilax; ice cream and other palatable delicacies for present consumption; confectionery for the pocket; and a host of pretty maidens to induce young men to buy.

"Young men!"—you ask. Why not? Haven't they mothers and sisters who just about this time of the year are much in need aprons to wear and cakes to top off Thanksgiving feasts? Haven't these responsible young men to attend to such heavy family cares as boxes of bon bons and bricks of ice cream? And while they are shouldering these great duties is it not meet that they should beleck themselves with rosebuds to cast the distracting strain on their minds? Besides, you know a bloom or two in one's button-hole heightens the effect of one's improvements; and it does no harm to appear at one's best when surrounded by such a galaxy of beauty as throws the unaccustomed stranger into a state of delightful bewilderment.

There were of course other buyers besides these busy sons of their fathers. Matter-of-fact elderly ladies, however in search of something that would stand a little war and wear, married men and their families relishing the quiet enjoyment, chatty young ladies out for a mild social evening—good people all, of every age.

Everybody bought something; and when—the merry talk and laughter o'er, the smilingly earnest tartering ended, the feasting at a close—the janitor turned out the lights of the deserted parlors, the dark ness closed on empty tables; everything was sold.

The primary success of the affair was of course largely due to the original contributors, but to those who devoted their time and abilities to the sale is owing the reward for final accomplishment. These were Miss Ella Moffett, Miss Florence Marsh, Miss Sophia Compton, Miss Florence Rendolph, Miss May Thorn, Miss Alice Woodland, Miss Gussie Lewis and Miss Ella Allen at the cake stand; Miss Helen Thompson, Miss Sadie Grant, Miss Beth Thompson, Miss Emily Cargell, Miss Nora Thorn and Miss Addie Gardner at the apron table; Miss Edith Harold, Miss Grace Yerkes and Miss Mamie Sharp at the flower-booth; Mrs. W. B. Vail, Miss Lizzie Smalley, Miss Emma Hudson, Miss Retta Hetfield, Miss May Adams, Miss Hattie Sayres, Miss Edith Taylor, Miss Minnie Ammerman and Miss Jessie Woodland at the candy table; and Mrs. Eddy, Mrs. Bloke, Miss Minnie Young, Miss Maggie Case, Miss Dora Grant, Miss Edith Needham, Miss Marie Baker, Miss Bertha Needham, Miss May Young, Miss Lulu French, Miss Ida Lewis and Miss Gertrude Eddy in the refreshment department.

MISS JOHNSTON WEDDED.

The Jersey Central Magnate's Daughter Married to Mr. Coe.

A very pretty wedding took place at No. 8 Fifth avenue, New York, at 4:30 yesterday afternoon. The bride was Miss Eva Johnston, the daughter of Mr. John Taylor Johnston, President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and ex-President of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, whose Summer home is on East Front street, Plainfield. The groom was Mr. Henry E. Coe, a New York lawyer. The Rev. Dr. Rylance, of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, officiated. The two were married in what is called the picture gallery of the Johnston mansion, which was beautifully decorated.

At the north end of the gallery a temporary altar was erected, draped with cloth of gold, while at each end stood a candelabra. In the centre was a handsome vase filled with flowers. In front of this, on which the bride and groom stood, was a handsome Persian rug, valued very highly by the Johnston family. It is made entirely of silk, is more than 300 years old, and there are only two others like it in existence. One is owned by the Rothschild family. The bride was given away by her father. She was attired in a gros grain silk costume, trimmed with antique point lace. The lace formerly belonged to her grandmother. Her bed was imported from France. She carried a basket of white bride roses. Miss Francis Johnston was maid of honor, and Miss Virginia Coe was best man. The ushers were Stanley Dwight, Walter Jennings, William Gilbert and Samuel K. Betts. Only a few of the relatives and friends of the family were present. Among them were John Taylor Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. de Forest, Mr. and Mrs. James Calle, Loyall Farragut and son of the Admiral, Capt. Henry Metcalfe, Mrs. George F. Betts, Mrs. Coe, the mother of the groom, and Mrs. Merritt, of Stamford, Conn.

A MIDNIGHT MARAUDER.

A Big 'Possum in Mr. Hagan's Chicken-House.

Shortly after twelve o'clock last night Mr. Wm. Hagan, residing at No. 18 Prospect avenue, was awakened by cries from his chicken-house. Hastily dressing and taking a lantern in one hand and a pistol in the other, he hurried out. While he was on the way further cries pierced the air which made him feel that he was going to catch the depredator red-handed. He found the large doors intact and quickly closed the small openings in order to make a prisoner of whatever was inside. Then, opening the large door on a crack and inserting the lantern, he found the floor of the coop covered with feathers and dead fowls, and in a remote corner two eyes glaring. Bringing the pistol into play soon compelled the animal to change its position, and it made a dash for the partly open door. This brought it into close range and Mr. Hagan quickly dispatched it. It proved to be an immense 'possum and measures a yard in length to the end of its tail. It now lies back of his house. The majority of the chickens were fortunately saved. Those that were killed had their throats cut by the 'possum.

THANKSGIVING DAY TO-MORROW.

How Plainfield Will Observe the National Feast.

Visions of good things that have been floating in the dreams of well-fed youngsters during the few weeks past will be materialized on many a groaning board to-morrow; and for those whose stomachs feast often-er on longings than on substantial roast turkey and the usual accompanying delicacies the charitable will provide whatever lieth in their power.

While all have many good things for which to offer praise to the Giver, many are forgetful of the prime Source of their blessings; and the United States Government and the government of each State have established the custom of setting apart the last Thursday in November as a National holiday on which the people offer thanks to God and on which the more-favored may share with their less-fortunate brethren the bounties they possess.

Religious Services.

Plainfield's Thanksgiving to-morrow will include a union of the congregations of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian, Park avenue Baptist and Congregational churches, at 10:30 a. m. in the Park avenue church. The Rev. C. L. Goodrich will preach the sermon.

The other congregations will listen to a sermon by the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham in the Seventh-Day Baptist church at half-past ten o'clock.

Mass masses will be celebrated in St. Mary's church to-morrow morning, at 6:30 and eight o'clock respectively.

At the Church of Our Saviour at Nethercwood the Rev. S. P. Simpson, rector, will conduct Thanksgiving services at eleven o'clock in the morning.

Thanksgiving services will be held in the Church of the Holy Cross to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

At the Church of the Heavenly Rest the Thanksgiving Day services will include a sermon at 11 o'clock.

On account of Thanksgiving there will be no meeting in Reform Hall to-morrow evening.

"The Land of Nod."

In the evening the "Land of Nod"—a delightful operetta adapted for a play by children—will be presented at the Music Hall. There will be elaborate accessories, frolics with bells, scenes in "the Court of the King of the Land of Nod", pages, sprites, little sleepy-heads, a visit to the Realm of Dreams and other charming things. The affair is under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., with Mme. Alberti as Stage Director, Miss Kate Oplycke as soloist and Mrs. B. T. Barnes as pianist. The children are all from Plainfield and vicinity.

Most of the handsome costumes to be worn are from a first-class costumer of New York, but many are specially made by tailors, for whom an amount of new goods and finery were supplied. The little folks open their eyes very wide at every mention of "The Land of Nod"; their expectations will be exceeded by only the surprise of the older heads when they go to Music Hall.

An Open Library, But no Books

No books will be delivered at the Public Library Thanksgiving Day, but the building will be open at the usual hours for visitors.

No "News" To-Morrow.

Because Thanksgiving Day is a National and State holiday no paper will be issued from this office to-morrow. Most of the stores will be closed.

Welcome at the Y. M. C. A.

The rooms of the Y. M. C. A. will be open to-morrow as usual.

Republicans Convene To-Night.

The Plainfield Republicans will hold their City Convention at the Headquarters over the City National Bank this evening at eight o'clock, to nominate a Mayor, a City Judge, an Assessor, a Collector, a Treasurer, three Commissioners-of-Appeal and a member of the Board of Education.

SHAME! SHAME!

Reviling Mr. Cleveland, His Wife and Her Mother.

We denounce as the most cowardl and meanest calumny the attack of The New York Times of last Sunday on President Cleveland, his wife and mother-in-law. We rejoice that it was not a Republican nor even a Democrat, but a Mugwump sheet, that circulated so revolting a tale; even under the pretence of condemning it. The New York Sun of Monday editorially pronounces the story the most shameful ever seen in print, but we suspect that The New York Sun inwardly rejoiced that it was only exciting public curiosity in the matter. When a prominent citizen of Plainfield retailed the story to the editor of The News yesterday, on a train to New York, we looked at the man several times to satisfy ourselves that he was neither intoxicated nor crazy. We ought not to forget that Grover Cleveland is the President of these United States, his wife the first lady of the land and among the purest and best of her sex, and her mother proof against the calumny in that she is the mother of such a daughter. Every American citizen, whether Democrat or Republican, with a spark of manliness in his breast, ought to resent the foul aspersion as if it were a personal insult. No one would circulate the story except the vilest and most foul-mouthed of slanderers or cowards. These can be trusted as such, and The New York Times ought to be made to feel in the severest manner the penalty of righteous public indignation at its disgraceful stab—a stab of which only such a Mugwump seems capable. President Cleveland might well say, "Oh, in Brutus!" Any person—we will not say man, for no man would do such a thing—who would thus attack the character of Mrs. Cleveland or her mother ought to be treated as one would treat a loathsome cur. We have not as long a purse as many with longer ones, but we would go deep into it to raise a fund to run down the person or persons who first started the slander and see that he or they receive the most adequate punishment, as a lesson to any others so devoid of all moral sense. Shame! Shame!

NEW JERSEY'S OFFICIAL VOTE.

Cleveland's Plurality in the State 7,148.

The State Board of Canvassers met at Trenton yesterday to canvass the election returns and declared the following as the official figures: Cleveland Electors, 151,493; Harrison Electors, 144,344; Fist Electors, 7,-904; plurality for Cleveland, 7,149. The following are the pluralities by counties: Democratic—Bergen, 658; Hudson, 8,163; Hunterdon, 1,975; Middlesex, 1,148; Monmouth, 1,-153; Somerset, 153; Sussex, 967; Union, 919; Warren, 1,719. Republican—Atlantic, 476; Burlington, 810; Camden, 2,326; Cape May, 393; Cumberland, 1,189; Essex, 116; Gloucester, 877; Mercer, 1,241; Morris, 346; Ocean, 850; Passaic, 1,034; Salem, 317.

The Congressional vote was as follows, according to the official figures: First District—Bergen, (Rep.) 24,096; Brindle, (Dem.) 19,440; Nicholson, (Proh.) 2,107; Bergen's plurality, 5,466. Second District—Buchanan, (Rep.) 22,407; Beasley, (Dem.) 19,104; Morgan, (Proh.) 1,292; Buchanan's plurality, 3,-303. Closing Stores Holidays.

To the Editor of The News:—A movement has been inaugurated by a few living here having for its object the closing of all grocery stores Thanksgiving, so that those employed in them may reap the full benefit of the social and religious privileges of the day. It is earnestly to be hoped that this may not prove spasmodic or abortive, nor be confined to employees in this business alone, but rather that it shall become an established fact in the routine of our city's life, that all stores are closed on every holiday. Care is taken each Saturday to lay in a supply sufficient for the family needs until Monday. If this may be done every Saturday of every week, the exercise of the same prudent forethought may lay by in store for the coming festival, the day before. Surely, while we were enjoying ourselves with others who have so greatly need. Christian housekeepers, let us at least do this—"not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also, to the things of others". Housewife.

Councilman Clark's Position.

To the Editor of The News:—When the "resolution" in regard to licenses was voted at Tuesday night's primary I had already been nominated and I supposed that the action was a mere expression of opinion and not by any means of binding force. My friend Newhall's card in Wednesday's News puts the matter in a rather different light, and following his lead I beg to say to the voters of the Fourth Ward, in the aggregate, what I have already said to many of them singly—that if I return to Council at all it must be entirely untrammeled and unpledged, excepting in so far as my duty as a good citizen may lead me to see the city's good.

Very truly yours,

E. B. Clark.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

AN OLD JERSEY MILL BURNED.

Meskell's Mill, near Harmersville, Salem county, was burned Saturday night. This was one of the oldest flour mills in New Jersey. The owner, Mr. Whitaker, lives adjoining the mills, but did not know of the fire until the flames were well under way; then two guns exploding gave him the news that something was wrong. These guns were in the office, hanging on the wall, and it is thought the fire caught from the office stove.

IS THIS WIFE-MURDER?

Mrs. Ann Brodell died yesterday at the City Hospital, Jersey City, under circumstances that are somewhat peculiar. The City Physician Gray had been summoned three or four days ago to attend her at her home in Bright street. He found her unconscious and had her removed to the City Hospital. She lingered there without recaining consciousness until yesterday morning when she died. There were marks of violence on her throat and head by which her husband could not account, and he was arrested.

THREE NEGRO BRUTES CAPTURED.

Rudolph Johnson, of New Egypt, and Elwood Green and Nathan Shaw, of Colonbus, who are charged with entering the house of Mary Cawley, a pretty octaroon, at Cookstown, the night of the 17th, presenting her with a handkerchief and making her submit to every indignity but that of rape, have been arrested and lodged in the Mount Holly jail to await the action of the Grand Jury in December. Justice Haines gave them a hearing, at which Miss Cawley fully identified the prisoners.

SPOTS KNOCKED OFF THE LEOPARD.

The reunion services of the Bethany Colored Baptist church, on Sand street, Newark, last Sunday night, were made especially interesting by a memorial service and a collection. After the sermon the Rev. Horace F. Barnes, of the Fairmount Baptist church, presented a large picture of the black on the wall at the rear of the chapel, and on it was drawn in charcoal a representation of a leopard with its mouth open and its tail curled on the ground. About forty pieces of circular black cloth two inches in diameter were fastened all over the leopard with pins. "Can the leopard change his spots?" the preacher asked, repeating the Biblical query. "It can by a very simple process." Then Mr. Barnes called on the congregation to step forward, as he gave it out, one spot for each, and would be removed from the leopard and a careful record would be made of each contribution. The organ played and the choir sang for ten minutes, at the end of which time the black roots on the leopard had entirely disappeared and the minister announced the receipts of $49. This novel method of taking up the collection created much amusement.

Mayor Male for Mayor.

The indications point to Mayor Male as the choice of the Republican Convention tonight, as the delegates, with a few, are told notwithstanding the tricks and manipulations of politicians to throw dust in the eyes of the delegates, they will be asked to vote for and declare themselves in his favor. Two others are mentioned as candidates—ex-Mayor Rockefeller, who a few days ago requested that it say that he would not enter the field against Mr. Male, but now says he will run if asked to do, and ex-Councilman Gilbert, an equally worthy gentleman, but who probably will have a like fate. Many are for and against Mayor Male, especially as Mr. Gilbert could be in Plainfield only evenings, his business requiring him in New York during the day. Some think that the object in putting forward Mr Gilbert, is simply for an excuse to introduce the name of Mr. Rockefeller, who cannot afford to be brought forward under such circumstances, or to change from the original position. Mr. Male has done so much for this city, that it should be esteemed a high privilege to have him at the helm here, the present, and we hope the next Mayor of Plainfield, one who has done more for the good of the place than any other ten men in it.

By no means let the opportunity be lost. We are informed that Mr. Male will also be nominated on a citizens' ticket.

The fact that Mr. Male attends personally to the duties of his office; takes care of the safety of the people, for whom he lives here, walks every day at a five mile pace, from five to ten miles; that he is disposed to do what can be in his power, put forth by those with ulterior objects in view, to get him out of the way, that the city may be plundered by the lawyers neglected as other neighboring cities have been, even it it were possible to carry through the scheme, and the work of the manifold schemes of those trying to bleed our taxpayers.

Ludicrous stories were circulated against Mayor Male when the people wanted him before, but the people are not to be deceived by the tricks of persons who either do not pay a dollar taxes or the merest trifle, but are always, when they can, trying to escape their just dues, or save at the public expense. Let no one be deceived. Since Mayor Male has consented to run again, let it be our delight to honor him.

[SPECIAL DESPATCHES.]

A RIVAL TO THE G. A. R.

Reported Wholesale Dejection of Democratic Members.

THEY ARE TO FORM A NEW ORDER

The Movement Started by Gen. Palmer in Illinois Spreads to Indiana, Pennsylvania and Other States—Opinions of Commander Warren and Judge Reed.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 28.—About 1,200 Democratic veterans, members of G. A. R. posts scattered over the state, held in the capitol building a secret meeting at which it was resolved that every Democratic member of the G. A. R. should abandon the order, and all present pledged themselves to withdraw from their posts. Maj. Gen. Koontz presided. A name and a constitution for the new order proposed by the Democratic veterans were adopted.

The new order is to be charitable and non-political in character. To-night there will be a public mass meeting in the City hall, when the reasons for deserting the G. A. R. will be given and the principles and objects of the new order laid before the public. Maj. Gen. Koontz and other leaders will be held all over the state within the next week.

Mr. Koontz said that he had letters from many in other states indicating that the movement is national. Among the letters received was one from John A. Worman, secretary of the Democratic executive committee of Pennsylvania, promising that every Democratic soldier in Pennsylvania will leave the Grand Army of the Republic. The president of the societies who ran against Hon. Robert Pearson, in all head of the movement in Pennsylvania. Mr. Koontz says that but few Indiana Democrats have attended the Grand Army meetings since the war, and he learns all the posts have been holding meetings ratifying the election of Harrison and Hovey.

It is generally understood that Congressman Morrison is at the head of the movement, but so far he has made no public statement. It is known that he feels very sore because the Grand Army of the Republic as an organization worked against him, and his friends say that he will follow the example of Gen. Palmer, of Illinois.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 28.—A dispatch from Indianapolis regarding the probable withdrawal of large numbers of Democratic veterans from the G. A. R. was shown to several of the national officers in this city. Judge J. P. Rea, late commander in chief, thought the extent of the movement had been exaggerated. Ex-Adj. Gen. Daniel Fish, of the national department, did not think the movement would be a success, as the Democrats are in the great minority in the G. A. R. Nothing would be gained by establishing a Republican and a Democratic G. A. R. He was satisfied there was no ground for fear. Politics had no place in the order.

CHICAGO, Nov. 28.—Maj. Warner, the newly elected commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, arrived in Chicago from Boston this city yesterday afternoon, and leaves for New York to-day.

"No, we do not discuss politics in the Grand Army," he said, in answer to a question, "and if any one does so, and is dissatisfied with the order, he may withdraw."

He was asked about the reported intention of Gen. Palmer and other Democrats to leave the order, and replied that only a few members of the Grand Army to form another veterans' society. The only answer the commander could make to that was: "I have nothing to say." The national Army men have decided to drop the whole matter."

AND THERE'S AN END ON'T.

Senator Blackburn Publishes an Apology. Moore Not in Lexington.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 28.—Senator Blackburn's card is believed to be the end of the Moore-Breckinridge business. How the senator came to write the card, which is capable of wide construction, is a mystery and may always remain so. That he had a consultation with friends on the subject there is no doubt. Whether this consultation was the result of a communication from Judge Rucker is not known. It is certain, however, that Col. Moore, of Denver, has not been here. The point of Senator Blackburn's card is in the following:

"I shall also say that Judge Rucker's connect in making public a conversation had with the president in an interview received for him by me is unwarrantable. His respect of that conversation entirely inaccurate. I regret, however, that the language I used in characterizing his conduct was not more guarded and temperate. Upon reflection, first I should have simply contented myself with a contradiction of Colonel Moore's incorrect and unjust in Mr. Cleveland and myself. As far myself, the matter is ended, and I have no doubt the public will be glad to know it."

The above card from Col. J. C. Moore, bearer of dispatches from Judge Rucker to Senator Blackburn, turns out to be a dromedary.

DENVER, Nov. 28.—Judge Rucker's attention was called to Senator Blackburn's card as published in Louisville, but he declined to make any statement. Col. J. C. Moore, who is acting as Judge Moore's friend in this controversy, is at his home in Pueblo. He telegraphed that in his opinion all matters can honorably be settled by Blackburn's last letter.

Anti-Saloon Republicans.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The national Anti-Saloon Republican committee have met, and the sub-committee appointed at the last meeting to report a plan for future work have reported a failure to agree upon such a plan as the matter was discussed and referred for final action to the executive committee, which meets next week. It was decided to issue an address to the people of the country, calling attention to the anti-saloon Republican movement, the work it has already accomplished and what it intends to do for the future. Among those present were: Albert Griffin, of Kansas; J. P. Haigtower, of New Jersey; Dr. R. C. Carroll, of New York; Alexander S. Bacon, Judge Noah Davis, N. G. Evans, Rev. Wilbur Mumbaugh, Orrell H. Page, of Vermont; H. B. Metcalf, of Rhode Island; ex-Senator Windom, of Minnesota; Rev. Mr. Wright, of Kentucky, and Rev. R. S. McArthur, of New York.

Louisiana's Congressman.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 28.—A special from Baton Rouge to The Picayune says the board of canvassers met there and issued a certificate to all congressmen elected at the recent election, including H. Dudley Coleman (Rep.) in the second district. The only difficulty encountered in the canvass grew out of the returns in the second district, where votes were cast for H. D. Coleman, H. Dibley Coleman and Hamilton D. Coleman; Ben C. Elliott, Benjamin C. Elliott and B. C. Elliott. Each of these names represented a cabinet individual R. C. Elliott (Dem.) had a majority exceeding 1,000. The board decided that the Coleman votes, being properly counted for all the Colemans, is sufficient indication of the individual for whom the vote was cast, and that Coleman's majority is 174.

CUTTING EACH OTHERS THROATS.

Jay Gould and Other Philanthropists Trying to Put a Stop to That Pastime.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—In connection with the statement contained in a Chicago dispatch that Chairman Midgely's recent conference here with several railroad magnates was held for the object the formation of a gigantic railroad trust or "clearing house," comprising all roads between points west of a line drawn through Chicago and Milwaukee on the east, St. Paul and Minneapolis on the north, Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming on the west and Arkansas on the south, Commissioner Albert Fink said: "Messrs. Gould, Midgely, Huntington and others conferred recently to see if it was not possible to get up some scheme whereby railroad rates could be maintained. It is, in no sense, a scheme for a railroad trust, but these gentlemen have come to the conclusion that it is about time for the railroads to stop cutting each other's throats. They want to get up a scheme that will embrace all the railroads in the country. Thus far they have not succeeded. That is all I can say about it, for I do not know any more."

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ADJOURNS.

Business of the Last Day—Another Convention to Be Called.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 28.—The general assembly Knights of Labor adjourned at 1 p. m. yesterday. The general executive board will select the place for the next meeting. It will be either Atlanta, Ga., or New Orleans. During the morning session the committee on resolutions recommended the appointment of a committee to investigate the interference of members of the legislature, reporting that every Democratic soldier in Pennsylvania will leave the Grand Army of the Republic. The president of the societies who ran against Hon. Robert Pearson, in all head of the movement in Pennsylvania. Mr. Koontz says that but few Indiana Democrats have attended the Grand Army meetings since the war, and he learns all the posts have been holding meetings ratifying the election of Harrison and Hovey.

It is generally understood that Congressman Morrison is at the head of the movement, but so far he has made no public statement. It is known that he feels very sore because the Grand Army of the Republic as an organization worked against him, and his friends say that he will follow the example of Gen. Palmer, of Illinois.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 28.—A dispatch from Indianapolis regarding the probable withdrawal of large numbers of Democratic veterans from the G. A. Nothing would be gained by establishing a Republican and a Democratic G. A. R. He was satisfied there was no ground for fear. Politics had no place in the order.

CHICAGO, Nov. 28.—Maj. Warner, the newly elected commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, arrived in Chicago from Boston this city yesterday afternoon, and leaves for New York to-day.

"No, we do not discuss politics in the Grand Army," he said, in answer to a question, "and if any one does so, and is dissatisfied with the order, he may withdraw."

He was asked about the reported intention of Gen. Palmer and other Democrats to leave the order, and replied that only a few members of the Grand Army to form another veterans' society. TO PUSH THE TARIFF BILL.

Senators Allison and Spooner Confer with President-Elect Harrison on the Subject. Lamont Congratulates Halford.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 28.—Gen. Harrison had a busy day of it. In the morning he sat for his picture and submitted to the manipulation of the photographer seventeen times. All the afternoon he was conferring at his house with Senators Allison and Spooner and ex-Senator Sewell. At 4:30 he walked to the New Dennison with the first two. Senator Allison left for Washington at 5. Senator Spooner left for Chicago at 11. He proceeds thence to Washington.

The result of the visit of Senators Allison and Spooner is a clearer understanding that there will be no delay in pushing the senate tariff bill, but nothing but idle gossip was contributed to the cabinet discussions. The town knew that the conferences were more important than any yet held at the president-elect's, for two United States senators have not turned up together here before, and no visitors have stayed at the general's house for four hours together before.

The senators, both before and after they visited Gen. Harrison, talked tariff, and they still hold that the senate bill can truthfully be said, therefore, that not only that the senate bill is the best indication of what the future, as well as the past tariff policy of the Republican party is, but that the Democrats east and west agree that it is properly so.

Senator Allison said that he had merely stopped over on his way to the capital, and added, with charming innocence, that there was no politics in his visit. It would not be proper, he said, for him to volunteer the information as to what might take place in the cabinet. There is, in truth, nothing about this visit that indicates that he will.

"We shall push the tariff bill as fast as possible and shall begin to work," he said.

"It is a pretty good bill, is it not?"

"Of course some slight amendments may be found to be necessary."

One of the most interesting of Private Secretary Halford's 300 letters of congratulation came yesterday morning from Private Secretary Lamont. Col. Dan offered to extend to Col. "Egg" all the help and comfort in his power, and concluded with the best of good wishes for his success.

Mysterious Case in Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 28.—On Nov. 11 Mary Ann Barrett, aged 21, the daughter of respectable parents residing on Locust street, this city, was taken to her home in a carriage by an unknown woman, who, after assisting her into the house, drove away. The girl, who claimed to have been living with a prominent Allegheny family for eighteen months, took to her bed at once. Dr. Hall was hastily summoned and, in, and stated that a criminal operation had been performed on the girl. Yesterday she died, the victim of malpractice. To the last moment she positively refused to divulge her terrible secret or the name of the author of her misfortune. The police and coroner have the case in charge, the investigations so far implicating people of prominence, are confidently expected. Miss Barrett was of attractive appearance.

Result of a Plumber's Carelessness.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 28.—The First Congregational society's church at Northampton, a beautiful edifice designed by Peabody and built in 1877 at a cost of $75,000, was burned Tuesday, owing to a plumber's careless. The parish is the oldest in the entire western Massachusetts, and was presided over twenty-three years by the famous Jonathan Edwards. Three persons narrowly escaped death in the fire, being shut up in the tower and escape cut off by smoke. They attracted attention by vigorously ringing the church bell, and were finally rescued by George W. Cable, the novelist, was among the citizens who acted as volunteer aids to the fire department.

Republican Spellbinders Organize.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The Republican campaign orators formed "The Republican Spellbinders' association," and elected Chauncey M. Depew president and Col. E. F. Shepard, Mrs. Ellen Foster, Gen. Isaac Emory Smith, A. W. Tenny, Congressman McKinley, J. C. Burrows and others vice presidents. A committee of twenty-one was appointed, among whom are Anson G. McCook, H. K. Thurber and John W. Jacobus. William B. Barker was chosen secretary; C. F. Johnson, corresponding secretary; F. F. McCassidy, financial secretary; Elmer Delwell, treasurer. The meeting adjourned subject to the call of the chair.

A Woman Killed by Falling Walls.

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 28.—An explosion of gunpowder occurred in the building of the cotton mill at South Glastonbury owned by A. Bacher, of New York. A lantern carried by a workman, who was looking for a leak, ignited the gunpowder. Mrs. Dolbee, a weaver, 22 years old, was buried by a falling wall and instantly killed. Four men were severely burned. Loss $5,000; insurance, $1,250.

SENSATIONAL EVIDENCE.

President Cleveland Narrowly Escaped Being Murdered.

CHICAGO'S DYNAMITE FIENDS.

One Anarchist Was About to Throw a Bomb Into the President's Carriage When He Was in Chicago, but Was Disarmed by His Comrades.

CHICAGO, Nov. 28.—In the trial of Hronsk and other alleged Anarchists for conspiracy to murder Police Inspector Bonfield, ex-State's Attorney Judge Grinnell and Judge Gary, during the bomb efforts four Anarchists were hanged a year ago, the first witness called was Frank Chleboun. He was one of the men arrested with Hronsk, but turned state's evidence, and his testimony produced a great sensation. Chleboun, being unable to speak or understand the English language, gave his testimony through an interpreter.

Chleboun said that he met Hronsk soon after the Haymarket riot, when the latter told witness that he had a great scheme to burn up a lumber yard, and that he had also missed a chance to kill Inspector Bonfield. Hronsk showed him several bombs which were experimented with on the prairie a few days later. On several occasions Hronsk told witness they must have revenge for the death of Parsons, Spies and Fischer, and showed him photographs of Judge Gary and Grinnell and Inspector Bonfield.

The witness and Hronsk went together to find Judge Grinnell's home, so that they could locate it easily at another time. This was a few days after President Cleveland's visit to this city, and Hronsk told witness he was on his way back from Judge Grinnell's neighborhood that the president had had a very narrow escape from death while here, as he (Hronsk) was about to throw a dynamite bomb into the presidential carriage during the procession, but was assaulted from being so by his companions.

Hronsk's plans were to kill Inspector Bonfield first, but he afterward decided to make Judge Grinnell the first victim. He said that if no better opportunity offered he would go into the court room and throw a bomb at the judge, and then if the police tried to capture him he would use bombs on them, and if this failed he would kill the officers and then himself; but if he got a chance at Grinnell or Gary on the street he would use a knife.

Chleboun said that Hronsk's wife did not have enough to eat and that her husband tried to abandon his murderous plans and go to work, but that Hronsk said he had a mission to perform and would perform it if she starved and he was hung.

DISCOVERY OF A VICAR GENERAL.

His Body Laid to Rest Behind the Cathedral Altar.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—The obsequies of the late Very Rev. Dr. Maurice A. Walsh, vicar general of this archdiocese, took place at St. Paul's church, Tenth and Carlstan streets, and at the Roman Catholic cathedral, Logan square, Benjamin Parkway. At 7:30 o'clock the relatives of the deceased, the Children of Mary, the pall bearers, trustees of the church and officers of the various societies, parochial schools, etc., were admitted to St. Paul's church, where solemn requiem mass was held, Rev. Richard Harrigan being the celebrant, assisted by Rev. John P. Byrne, of St. Jachim's church, as deacon. There was a large number of clergymen present from the various churches of the diocese.

At the conclusion of the services at the church the body was borne to the hearse, and when the visiting clergy, relatives and others were seated in carriages the procession started for the cathedral, where the ceremonies were continued. Here high solemn requiem mass was celebrated by Archbishop Ryan, and an impressive sermon was delivered by Bishop Foley.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies in the cathedral the body of the late vicar general was laid to rest at the side of the late Archbishop Wood, in the vault behind the cathedral altar.

The New Natural Gas Field.

BUFFALO, Nov. 28.—The big gas gusher at Zar, which was struck last Saturday, shows no decrease in force. It is reported that an offer of $100,000 for it has been refused. The strike has started another boom at Zar, and property changes hands rapidly. Several boring in wells which have been temporarily abandoned. The find of gas in such large quantities so near the city—less than thirty minutes' ride—has caused a great deal of stir here, as the supply now piped here by the Pennsylvania Gas company does not begin to meet the demand. The prospects are that the low cost of piping from the new field will cause a big drop in prices to consumers.

Shot His Wife and Himself.

AMESBURY, Mass., Nov. 28.—The particulars of a double crime have just come to light. Early this morning Joseph Gerrish, a boarding house, was found dead lying on the floor of a room in his house, with a bullet hole in his head, while near him by his side unconscious was his wife, United States Senator Dargenton. He was jealous of his wife, and the occupants of the house say when he came home a man jumped from the side window. Dargenton then shot his wife and himself. There is some prospect of saving the woman's life. The couple were about 30 years of age and had two children.

G. A. R. Pension Committee.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 28.—Maj. Warner, commander in chief G. A. R., has appointed the following comrades to constitute the national pension committee, G. A. R., for the ensuing year: George R. Marvin, of Boston, Mass., chairman; James Tanner, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; John S. Kountze, of Ohio; John W. Burst, of Illinois, and Richard Bine, of Kansas. Upon this committee will devolve the important and responsible duty of expressing to congress at the coming session the latest will and wishes of the G. A. R. concerning pension legislation.

Senator Sherman in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Senator and Mrs. John Sherman and Miss Mary Sherman have arrived in the city from their Mansfield, Ohio, home. Their residence will be the large party of friends for the inauguration festivities. Ex-President and Mrs. Hayes and Miss Fanny Hayes have promised to be the Ohio senator's guests at that time.

Two Lives Lost by a Small Fire.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 28.—John Woods, aged 65 years, was fatally burned, and his bedridden sister Mary, aged 61 years, suffocated to death during a fire at No. 361 Myrtle avenue, which destroyed the dry goods store of Woods & McLaughlin and damaged the tenement above the store, where the Woods lived.

Novel Execution.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 28.—An execution will take place Dec. 12 under the Choctaw law in the Choctaw nation. Jeff Davis, a weaver, 22 years old, was buried by a falling wall and instantly killed. Four men were severely burned. Loss $5,000; insurance, $1,250.

ONLY NINETEEN LEFT.

Names and Incidents of the Long Walk. Moore Evidently a Winner.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The comparatively pleasant weather in the evening and the effect of the popular programme drew a large attendance at Madison Square garden. Many people who are aware of the fact that the second day is the critical time in a six days' go-as-you-please hand to see how the men bore their continual jog. Of the forty-three original entries only nineteen remained, and seven of these were only nominally in the race.

Dan Herty created a magnificent horseshoe from John L. Sullivan, whereupon the gentlemen present cheered lustily, and the band played "See the Conquering Hero Comes." Hand to see the heroes of the track and hear their footfalls' music, waived their delicately scented handkerchiefs. Dan topped the big belt presented by Herty and Sullivan, after Official Trainer McDonald took it away from him.

Moore had mapped out 240 miles work for the first forty-eight hours, and he received warm encouragement as he rapidly accomplished it. Champion Albert coupled a 5 o'clock during the evening, and amidst his compatriots on the Standard Oil man's performance.

The Marquis of Queensberry arrived shortly before 10 o'clock. He gracefully removed his hat in response to the rapturous plaudits of the assembled lungs, after his first. There was renewed applause when the haughty peer gracefully tossed a new "fiver" to "Old Sport."

Moore finished his fifty-eight hours' task at 11:30 o'clock, and left the track in a graceful trot, looking much fresher than any other man in the lot, with the possible exception of Herty, who does not appear to be under the slightest strain.

The race for first money seems to lie between these two. Barring accidents, one of them is certain to finish at the head of the string. Hart still retains his form marvelously, and knowing ones think he has much too good a dark horse to be run unbacked.

Cartwright continues to hang on Herty's heels, but he is not in such good shape as the other three men. He is also troubled with a gamey ankle, seriously handicapped by a very troublesome stomach. People who played him to win are now quietly hedging.

FURY OF THE STORM.

The Massachusetts and New Jersey Coasts Strewn with Wreckage—A Coal Steamer Wrecked and All on Board Lost.

BOSTON, Nov. 28.—Reports received here from all parts of the coast of Massachusetts bay during the storm of yesterday and last night show that the damage done is very much greater than was at first supposed. Telegraphic communication with Cape Cod has not yet been restored, and, as the storm was most violent there, according to reports given by the incoming steamers, it is feared that the list of wrecks is as yet by no means complete. The cable connecting Nantucket with the main land has parted and is now in an available from that island. The Pollock Rip and Cross Rip lightships are adrift.

COHASSET, Mass., Nov. 28.—All day wreckage has been drifting ashore in this point. The coast is very rocky and the weather is still so thick it is impossible to see more than a few hundred yards from shore, but it is the universal opinion that the steam schooner Allentown, from Philadelphia, has gone to pieces on the ledges outside.

There can be no doubt that all on board are lost. The sea is entirely patrolled, and if any had reached the shore they would have been discovered almost immediately. The nature of the wreckage seems to indicate clearly the loss of the vessel, for it is such as would not be floating had not the whole ship gone under water. There is a good quantity of bedding, the furniture, the houstops, spars and furniture that would not be able to get loose except in the sinking of the ship.

HARBOR CITY, Nov. 28.—The New Jersey coast between Sandy Hook and Point Pleasant is strewn with timbers, parts of bulkheads and buildings that have been wrecked by the fearful storm and tides since Sunday night.

Providence Municipal Election.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 28.—Henry R. Barker (Rep.) was elected mayor of this city. The vote was: Barker, 5,772; Aldrich (Dem.), 5,916; Crossman, (Pro.), 382. The other three elected are: City treasurer, Benjamin Tripp; harbor master, James T. P. Bucklin; overseer of the poor, George W. Waghman; superintendent of health, Charles W. Parker. All of the aldermen will consist of eight Republicans and two Democrats; city council, thirty Republicans and ten Democrats.

One Contest Not Settled.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 28.—The contests in the Fourth and Eighth congressional districts were virtually settled yesterday. Governor Jackson said that he would probably issue certificates in accordance with the face of the returns. This will give Gorsuch and Harry Stockbridge, Jr., (Rep.) in the Fourth and Barnes Compton (Dem.) in the Fifth districts. Mudd will carry the contest against Compton to Washington.

Hunting Ex-Mitchell's Murder.

CHICAGO, Nov. 28.—The inquest on Miss Eva Mitchell, which was to have been resumed at 10 o'clock at the Fifth street police station, was postponed, for ten days upon request of Capt. Hunt, who said he had certain clews which he desired to follow up, before any additional evidence was offered. He also asked that Dr. Hasbrouck, the jailer, be admitted to bail in $3,000. His request was granted.

Only a Few Widows Negligent.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Pension Commissioner Black has prepared a statement showing that only 4,000 widows are those where widows under the act of June 7, 1888, were entitled to arrears of pension from the time of their husband's death, 14,502 cases have been filed. The commissioner of pensions is anxious that if any claims coming under the operations of the act have not yet been filed, they speedily be filed.

Yellow Jack's Reign Broken.

JACKSONVILLE, Nov. 28.—There were no new cases and no deaths from fever to-day for the first time in 112 days. There are now about twenty cases in the city, most of them convalescing. At a conference of the board of health, the Jacksonville relief and Ryan Porter, a resolution was adopted that restrictions on travel should be removed as early as possible, to-morrow, without exception.

The Great Lockout Began.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The Ale Brewers' association ordered that all union workmen be locked out at noon to-day, and the boycott on Stevenson's ale was raised.

The Legislature All White.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 28.—The South Carolina legislature began its annual session yesterday. For the first time since the reconstruction the senate has not a single colored member.

A PROFOUND SENSATION.

Growing Excitement Over a Constable's Action.

HE ACTED UPON STRICT ORDERS.

Two Chiefs Implicated—A Wet Blanket on the Discussion of the Land Purchase Bill—Irish Members Will not be Molested by Warrant Servers at Present.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—The attempt of the Irish constable, Jeremiah Sullivan, to serve a warrant upon Mr. David Sheehy in the lobby of the house of commons has created a more profound sensation than was at first anticipated, though the indignation expressed in the house by the affair was outspoken and general. Mr. Sheehy's statement of the incident as a question of privilege, interrupted the encouragement as he rapidly acquainted the fact that Inspectors Lowndes and Jennings had instructed Constable Sullivan that the service of the summons upon Mr. Sheehy was a matter of importance, whereupon Sullivan's further testimony disclosed the fact that he had received £10 from the inspectors for the purpose of enabling him to proceed immediately to London and serve the writ in whatever place he might find Mr. Sheehy. It is certain that Inspectors Lowndes and Jennings will be summoned before the committee at its meeting on Thursday, and possibly Mr. Balfour himself will be required to give testimony.

In the house of commons Mr. Balfour intimated that the Irish members against whom warrants of arrest had been issued, or upon whom summons had been served, would be permitted to sit in parliament while the Irish estimates were being discussed.

When the house resumed consideration of the land purchase bill in committee, Mr. J. G. Shaw-Lefevre (Liberal) moved to insert in the bill a provision that no advance shall be made to a tenant purchaser exceeding the amount of £20 per annum, based upon a rent in excess of that sum, he contended, belonged to the landlord, and not to the peasant proprietor class.

The motion was rejected by a vote of 190 to 93.

Mr. T. M. Healy moved a clause exempting the purchaser of a holding from liabilities for arrears of rent from the date of the sanction of his purchase.

The government accepted the clause, but a subsequent clause, moved by Mr. Healy, having the new prevention of enforcing purchases by threats or eviction, was rejected—205 to 162.

MUST PRODUCE THE BOOK.

An Officer Claims to Have a Full Record of Outrages Charged to the League.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—Sergt. Gilhooly told the Parnell commission that he had a book containing a list of and account of the outrages committed in Ireland. Sir Charles Russell demanded that the book be produced. Sir Henry James, of the counsel for The Times, said that the book contained letters and papers which it was not desirable to publish.

Jus ice Hannan said it was desirable that the whole book, including a column headed "Motives," be produced. He suggested that Sir Henry James and Sergt. Gilhooly meet together inspect the book, and if they could not agree upon which parts should be disclosed the judges of the commission would inspect the book and decide.

Inspector Davis said he had discovered that there was an inner circle of the league which organized the outrages reported to the league's branches. Cross examined, he declined to give the name of his informant, but he finally said that he was a member of the league and had taken part in the work of the inner circle. Another person, similarly situated, had also informed him of the working of the inner circle.

Another Mysterious Murder.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—An 8-year-old boy named Searle was mysteriously murdered in the street at Havant, a market town seven miles from Portsmouth. He was found lying upon the pavement in a pool of blood early one of the busiest part of the town with his throat cut from ear to ear. He was yet alive, but died soon after the discovery. A bloody knife was found near him, but too far away to admit of the theory of suicide. The murderous work was done in very much the same manner as had been performed in evident haste. No arrests have as yet been made, and as no cause is known for the deed the police are absolutely without a clew or a pretext for making an arrest on suspicion.

Henry George's Object.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—Henry George delivered a speech at Lambeth Baths last evening in the interest of an income assessment bill. In the course of his speech Mr. George said that the practice of grasping for land in America was making the great progress which it had obtained in England. He wished to abolish landlordism, and grant to every child born a share of the soil.

A French Village Totally Destroyed.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—The village of Vaubecourt, near Nancy, was totally destroyed by fire. Thousand of persons were rendered homeless and absolutely without shelter.

Only a Family Affair.

DUBLIN, Nov. 28.—It is learned that the murder of farmer Delaney, near Kilkenny, was purely the result of a family feud and had no agrarian significance whatsoever.

CONDENSED NEWS.

A WHOLESALE POET.

The Astonishing Experience of James Whitcomb Riley.

While the Nye-Riley combination was on the road last winter a little incident happened at Kalamazoo, Mich., which has never been given to the public. Their entertainment was over for the night, and a large and select audience had dispersed. Nye had been taken in hand by the town lecture committee and towed off up to Uncle Asa Butterfield's house to hear Uncle Asa tell his famous story about his red cow and Dunk Brown's hired man, the occurrence having actually taken place in 1869. Uncle Asa was a local magnate of great renown; he had been unable to attend the lecture on account of rheumatism, but had promised to sit up till the committee brought Nye around. The red cow story was in his masterpiece, and he was anxious that Nye should hear it, as he thought that very likely he might want to introduce it into his lecture. Riley had escaped by feigning sickness as soon as the visit was proposed, and before Nye could employ the same excuse, and was sitting in the hotel office at about 11 o'clock congratulating himself and comparatively quietly. He was thinking of various facetious remarks which he would make to Nye, should he survive the operation he was undergoing, about Uncle Asa, the red cow, the hired man, and so forth, when a man hurriedly entered who attracted his attention at once. The man was tall and angular with long gray hair and hollow eyes, and he had a trick of thrusting his head forward and pointing with a long bony finger. He glanced around at the group of hotel guests sitting about and walked directly to Riley.

"You are Riley, James Whitcomb Riley," he said, as he pointed a long finger at him.

The poet blushed slightly and modestly admitted the fact. "Yes, yes," went on the man; "I know you, though I never saw you before. We never met, but we've had a good deal of business with each other."

"Well, perhaps," replied Riley, "but I don't exactly understand what you refer to."

"Ha! I'll tell you. My name is Thomas H. Stockwell," and he looked at Riley triumphantly.

"Ex-well, I can't just place you I'm afraid," answered Riley.

"You can't. Why, I'm the man that has written all your poetry for you!"

The poet looked at the hollow eyed visitor speechless.

"Yes, sir, gentlemen," went on the intruder, swinging his long, bony hand so as to include the little group, "I am the man who has written all of James Whitcomb Riley's poems for him. When he has wanted a new one he has always written to me and I have sent it to him and got my pay for it, and that has been all there is about it. You know it, Mr. Riley, as well as I do. But I'm sick and tired of it. Hereafter, sir, the world shall know Thomas H. Stockwell as he is the father of James Whitcomb Riley w ll hereafter rest on the brow of Thomas Hostetter Stockwell. The time has come for me to declare myself and claim my own!"

The unknown poet who had blushed unseen all these years drew himself up proudly and laid his hand on his heart. Riley had been gradually getting over his astonishment and now found his voice.

"Perhaps, Mr. Stockwell," he said, "you may have some of your poems with you such as you have been furnishing me, and can favor us with a short reading."

"Certainly," replied the long haired individual promptly, as he pulled a handful of crumpled manuscript out of his breast pocket; "certainly, nothing would give me greater pleasure. I have here among others one entitled 'The Old Barnyard,' with which I intended filling your next order. I will read one verse:

When you go out in our barnyard a-kind 'o wanderin round
Among the hens and sheep, and the hogs
a-rootin' in the ground,
And git figg'rin' on the colts and how much they'll probably bring
When they're broke to drive in harness later in the spring,
Also off from the sheep with horns—less you want to see some stars
Cause he's predjudiced and li'ble to hunt you through the bars.
Or, what you want to really 'void aint airy pig or sheep or hoss,
But the crit'r at's got the spotted calf
When
You Looks
Cross!

"You will excuse me, gentlemen, for giving you but one verse, as I want you to attend the reading I shall give in the hall tomorrow night. Admission only 50 cents. I have one other here, entitled, 'When Bill Turns Sick,' part of which I will recite:

When the stock is in the stable and everything's been fed,
And all them kind 'o chores done up and the wood throwed in the shed,
I'm mighty apt to slip across to Bill's to have some fun,
And most gen'ly we play euchre till the clock strikes one;
I've also handled pasteboards in a easy sort o' way,
But when it comes to Bill, he got jes' this 'ere much to say:
You may go up p'ints agin him 'n' hold the best hands in the pack,
But you've got to play 'em awful close
When Bill
Turns
Jack!

"That is all I will give you to-night, gentlemen, but it is enough to show you who has been writing Mr. Riley's poems. My reading to-morrow evening will be most entertaining, and as I wrote all of Mr. Longfellow's poems, and am constantly shipping poems to Mr. Lowell, you can see that it will be varied as well. Lately I have been encroaching on the English market, sending a number of contributions to Mr. Browning, and yesterday filling a trial order for Baron Tennyson. This is all done away with, however, and Thomas H. Stockwell reveals his true self to the world. Do not forget my entertainment to-morrow"——

"Tom," said a man, as he entered and touched the poet on the shoulder, "come on—it is long past time that you were in, and I have been looking everywhere for you. I hope he hasn't disturbed you, gentlemen," he continued, as he started toward the door, followed by the other; "he is perfectly harmless, so we allow him about the asylum grounds, but we didn't think he would wander away. He is the same man who used to think the world would cease to revolve around the sun if he didn't wear a green ribbon on his hat, but he has given up that and taken to poetry."

Nye came in a moment later very much troubled by Uncle Asa's cow and hired man story, but he had to help Riley up to bed.—New York Tribune.

THE TELEGRAPH'S RISE.

THE FIRST MESSAGE THAT EVER WENT OVER A WIRE.

Reminiscences of Professor Morse Given to the Public by One of His Earliest Friends—Interesting Incidents Gathered from John W. Kirk.

Morse had possessed himself of a little room in the east end of the Capitol, and there, abstracted but earnest, he labored. Outside of the postoffice department found him, a thin, spare, careworn, anxious man, in the midst of confusing heaps of wire and pots and apparent dirt and dust. A congressional committee was on its way to see him and examine in practical operation the machine which he had promised would transmit intelligent messages between points miles apart. The line which started toward Baltimore was built about five miles without the Washington limits, and the "metallic circuit" before the day of ground wires was in working order. The committee came. The statesmen approached his instrument cautiously, as if suspecting that it might suddenly get into an exploding fit. But finally they ranged themselves as closely as they dared beside the animated electrician and awaited his experiments.

"Now, gentlemen, what shall we send over the wire?" ejaculated the old man. "Pick out your own words and I'll show you how simple this whole thing is and how it accomplishes everything that I claim."

The gentlemen were hardly expecting a challenge like this, but finally congressional genius asserted itself, and one of the party proposed that this startlingly original information be flashed along:

"Mr. Brown, of Indiana, is here."

Prof. Morse bent over his instrument and pegged away. Tick, tick, tick-tick-tick went the electric tapping, and then a moment later came the same rattling line of signals upon an adjoining machine—the indentation Morse register.

The old man grabbed the slip of paper as it came released from the instrument, scanned it eagerly, and then, with the air of an emperor whose crown is self-won, he thrust its fluttering scrap before the crowd.

"See!"—and he displaced another sheet on which his dot and dash sign manual appeared—"see! Take this for a guide and you'll find printed there the very words you asked transmitted."

The delegation did as directed, and sure enough they spelled out as the sensational goings-on of "Mr. Brown of Indiana."

Converted! Those congressmen converted! Well, hardly. This is the recollection of Mr. Kirk: "One of them hunched me and winked in a superior and knowing sort of way, while another whispered: That's what I call pretty thin' and a third remarked right out loud: 'It won't do! That doesn't prove anything.' Poor Morse's heart was almost broken. His strength was turned all to bitterness. Every one of his visitors went away more skeptical than ever."

Morse worked only the harder after his failure to convince the men of science from congress by the test of his five mile loop. Day by day more poles were set and more wire was strung, and Annapolis Junction—half way to Baltimore—was just about reached when the Whig national convention of May, 1844, opened in Baltimore. Here, at the suggestion of Judge Fisher, of John W. Kirk, Morse saw opportunities beyond any that had come to him before. On the morning that the convention organized he was abiding at Annapolis Junction, and by day by day got connection through to Annapolis junction from his little Washington machine at 6 p.m. He had placed a bright young fellow at the Annapolis Junction end with instructions to get information of what the convention had done just as soon as the afternoon Baltimore train arrived at the Junction and telegraph it at once to Washington.

Of course the capital was in a ferment; every citizen was anxious for the news from Baltimore; but till noon it should arrive from the scene if was recognized that nothing could be known. The earnest old fellow spent that eventful afternoon all alone, save for the companionship of John Kirk.

Suddenly there came an animated clicking. He who was most interested bent forward as if intent on fairly consuming the strip of paper that crept out from the register. There was almost agony in his face as, spell like, the paper halted and hesitated, sputtered a little, started still, made dashes and dots, then spurted more till—the message completed—Morse rose erect, looked proudly about him, and said as grandly as though he were dictating a proclamation:

"Mr. Kirk, the convention has adjourned. The train for Washington has just left Annapolis Junction. And the ticket—the beautiful, bedalling final jewel of his victory—"good all disputing—"the ticket—the ticket is Clay and Frelinghuysen."

"You guessing it," was the quick retort he heard when this was proclaimed outside. "It's easy enough for you to guess that Clay is at the head of the ticket, but Frelinghuysen—who in the world is Frelinghuysen?"

"Lonly know," was the dignified answer, "that it is telegraphed me so from Annapolis Junction, where my operator had the news five minutes ago from the train that is bound this way bringing the delegates."

In those days the twenty miles from Annapolis Junction to Washington made up a trip of an hour and a quarter for the exceptionally fast trains, such as that which was bringing the Whig delegates to Washington. Long before the hurrying was over the newspapers—enterprising even in those days—had extras on the streets, and the newsboy was crying lustily the chronicle that Morse had caught flashing through twenty miles of air. A great crowd of people was at the station. The extras, with their cabalistic legend "By Telegraph," had whetted public curiosity to keenest edge. Out of the jammed train came the delegates piling, each anxious to be foremost in seating abroad to friends the inspiriting news that fortune was with Harry of the west. And how dumbfounded they were, finding in very type before them the story they had forced exclusively upon them. How but by a miracle could the news have gained such headway? "By telegraph," so they read in the headlines of the journals. "By telegraph" the astute Professor Morse! They had seen the wires stretching along the track all the way from Annapolis Junction into Washington; they had seen it, and they had joked about it glibly. Pshaw! It was hard to realize. But—but—but what can a man do when he can't do anything? The shoulders and seniors became enthusiastically dumb.

S. F. B. Morse had won. When he also appeared in public the people showered him with huzzas, and he no longer had to flee when he was a door; and there were honors for him instituted.—New York Times.

An Electric Clock.

A new thing out is a clock, with ordinary works, that will run for a year without attention. An electric battery concealed in the case winds up the clock from day to day, or week to week, as the need may be. Once in a great while the battery must be renewed, but that is all the care the clock calls for.—Chicago Herald.

AN ECCLESIASTICAL DIFFERENCE.

It Involves Father Lambert and Bishop McQuaid.

Father L. A. Lambert, a very talented priest of the Roman Catholic church, is pretty well known the United States over. He is a very fascinating orator and a polished gentleman. Bishop McQuaid, of the diocese of Rochester, is accounted one of the most learned ecclesiasts of his church. Father Lambert is priest of the church in Rochester. The bishop and priest had a difference some time ago which resulted in Father Lambert's suspension. Father Lambert recently appealed to the propaganda at Rome to adjust the dispute, and now he proceeds to Rome to state his side in person.

For several years the relations of priest and bishop were intimate, both taking a lively interest in The Waterloo Times, afterward The Rochester Times, of which Father Lamlert was editor and proprietor. This Catholic newspaper was later, about 1870, amalgamated with The Union and Times, which was henceforth called The Union and Times, and was and is still edited with the approval of Bishop McQuaid, but under the management of Father Cronin.

About 1883 a writer, signing himself "A Catholic," attacked, in The Rochester Democrat, the orthodoxy of The Union and Times, especially about the Irish Land league, and broadly insinuated that the bishop of Buffalo was influenced by being a stockholder in the paper from correcting its heterodox opinions. Father Lambert, over his own signature in The Rochester Democrat, repelled these charges, and undertook to vindicate the orthodoxy of The Union and Times. "A Catholic" declined to make good his charges before what he stigmatized as the gods of the gallery, Father Lambert insisted that the trial should be before the same public before which "A Catholic" had made the charges, and when the latter refused Father Lambert called him a Tartuffe and told him to "mind his domestic concerns."

It turned out that "A Catholic" was Bishop McQuaid, Father Lambert's own bishop. The bishop put upon the priest certain restrictions, but it was some time before the priest knew whom "A Catholic" was.

When Father Lambert ascertained that the bishop was going to Rome, he thought that the quickest way to settle all differences was to meet him before the propaganda at Rome.

THE NUN OF KENMARE.

A Woman Who Has Done Thirty Years of Good Work.

Sister Mary Frances Clare has long been known to the reading public as the "Nun of Kenmare." At one time she became noted for her ability in organizing army nurses; at another she was often quoted as an authority on the wishes and feelings of the Irish peasantry, and still later took an active part in organizations for the instruction of Catholic servant girls. In all these her work was wonderfully blessed; but in the last she was not encouraged by the ecclesiastical authorities of the state, and has resigned her position as mother general of the Sisters of Peace.

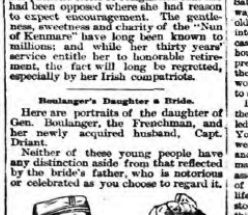
Sister Mary Frances, as she is commonly called, has served as a Sister of Peace for thirty years; she received her latest commission, as organizer, from his holiness the present pope, and a circular letter of recommendation from the propaganda; but the peculiar nature of the work she attempted in America unavoidably produced misunderstandings between her and her immediate superiors. At length she retired from work entirely, and this report was published that she had renounced the Catholic faith and become a Protestant, with intent to do similar work in the Episcopal church. This statement she indignantly denies, but gently complains in her pathetic letter of resignation that she had been opposed by those who had reason to expect encouragement. The gentleness, sweetness and charity of the "Nun of Kenmare" have long been known to millions; and while her thirty years' service entitle her to honorable retirement, the fact will long be regretted, especially by her Irish compatriots.

Boulanger's Daughter a Bride.

Here are portraits of the daughter of Gen. Boulanger, the Frenchman, and the newly acquired husband, Capt. Driant.

Neither of these young people have any distinction aside from that reflected by the bride's father, who is notorious or celebrated as you choose to regard it.



CAPT. DRIANT AND HIS BRIDE.

There has been a good deal of comment, and not all good natured, upon the daughter of so prominent a man marrying one so insignificant as a penniless captain; but it would seem that such criticism is somewhat out of place in a republic.

But then there are social distinctions in republics, as many a besmubbed individual in the United States knows to his sorrow.

The ancient custom of ringing the curfew bell has been resumed at Stratford-on-Avon, the same bell being used as that which was tolled at Shakespeare's funeral.

JUST FROM SCHOOL.

CHAT WITH A BOY WHO IS STARTING OUT IN LIFE.

The Hard Fun of the Matter—Junior Clerk in a Big Office—The Bookkeeper. A Balance Sheet of Advantages and Disadvantages.

Here you are, 16 years old, just from school, and ready to start out for yourself. Have you ever got down to hard pan? Not as are you going to do next? Going into business going to work? What comes first? The hard pan of the matter is just here—what can you do?

Not much, and do short sums. Reading? No money in that unless you mean to be a public reader, and that means a beautiful voice and years of training and study. Writing and arithmetic? Why, everybody can do that. There isn't a cent in such things. Then what was the use of learning them things? Because they are the hard pan of every art, trade, business and profession. And while they will not bring wages, you cannot get good wages without them.

Every business requires some one to "keep the books." There is something for you. Become a clerk. You set out to get a place, and at once find that, while hundreds want places, there are thousands who want to be clerks. Not one of the fellows who have places seems to want to give it to you, and, more than all, half of the clerks are girls. It's enough to make a man discouraged to see the way the girls have pushed into all the good places down town. A fellow has no chance now.

At last you get a place—junior clerk in a big office, with a dozen clerks above you, and half of them girls. The chief clerk gets a hundred a month, the others very much less, and you—well, it doesn't pay quite as well as being a bricklayer or carpenter. All the same, you mean to try it. Besides, you don't know how to lay bricks, and for driving nails, you always hit your thumb. Pretty soon you find a l tle clerks, both men and women, are on the lookout for something better. The men want to go into the business, and the women—well, they hope to get home some day and never come back. Some of them, both men and women, hope to become cashiers or head bookkeepers or accountants, because, as they tell you, the higher the work the bigger the wages.

So the hard pan of the business is that to earn good wages as a clerk, you must be able to do more than read, write and cipher pretty well, or as well as you do. You must go to work and learn a complicated art, and it is doubtful if you can do this without two years' hard work in a school or an office. Very hard pan. Just so, but here is the bottom fact. To earn good wages, you must be able to do something well. Thousands can do as well as you can when you come out of high school. They are stupid, for doing the care ess will underbid you—will work for less money, and unless you can do better, your chances of earning a living as a mere common clerk are very small indeed. As for making a fortune—well, it isn't there.

Suppose you do learn the art, and become a first-rate bookkeeper and accountant. What are the bottom facts of the business? Under the term bookkeeper, there are hundreds of thousands of people employed in this country in stores, banks, steamship offices, railroad offices, telegraph offices, manufacturing companies and shops of all kinds. Now is this the best thing for you—the best thing to learn? Let us figure it up, and strike a balance sheet of advantages and disadvantages.

First of all, health, as that is the most valuable thing in the world. The work is done indoors, in close and often dark rooms, often in the midst of noise, hurry and confusion Decidedly, it is not a healthy trade, though of course, it is not dangerous, and men do often live to be gray old clerks. Second chance. Does it give chances for a start? Yes. It gives chances for a smart young fellow like you to look about and pick up informa tion, and learn some other business or profession. This is the chief value of clerking. It leads to something else. It is true, on the other hand, that these chances are very much less today than fifty years ago, because business of all kinds now requires so much capital. A bookkeeper in a bank or railroad office can hardly expect to start a bank or set up his own railroad. Very likely it is just because you want to follow all your life? Will you be content always to be a clerk, and nothing but a clerk? Plenty of people, both men and women, never aspire to anything else, and lead quiet, sensible, safe, and often very happy lives, saving money and earning the respect of all who know them.

Third point, the salance. There is the hard pan of the matter. What do you think? Is it a good thing for you—the best thing you can do? Nothing like having straight up and down talk with yourself about the real bottom facts of the case.

Would you like it? That's the point. Now we are getting on hard pan. Would you like it? What a man likes to does well; what he does well brings good wages. A man's work is for his life. It is not for this month or Saturday's pay. You are not working for next Saturday's pay. You are working for the wages you will get when you are forty years old. If you like accounts, if the work is interesting, if you mean to rise to be a cashier, or chief bookkeeper in some great house, all right. Work, study, practice, prepare to rise, for you must rise if you do these things. Go into the business as a life work. Climb on the clerk's stool, resolved to stay there.

But if you dislike to go to the desk in the morning, and are glad the close the big ledgers at night, consider well these things. You will never get better clothes, have white, weak hands, and pale, thin blood, a good pay and a nice home, and with a frugal wife may lay up a little money, join a building association, and some day own a little house of your own—and you will hate it all your life long. Better climb down from that stool, and dig about among the real facts of this world till you come to the hard pan of your life.—Charles Barnard in Once a Week.

In an Old Enstish Village.

With few exceptions the houses are built close to the street; one steps from the sidewalk into the front door way. The exceptions are the houses of "the gentry." These are built behind high walls, and are placed in a gate to keep out intruders, at which one must pull a bell wire if he desires admission. Within these walled enclosures are usually handsome gardens; indeed, I found one or two pretty ones behind very unattractive houses not so enclosed. The average English cottage has a little of everything that is necessary for the delectation of other people's eyes; it wants its pleasant sights and smells all to itself and its chosen friends, and will let none but the most favored ones enter. There is no sitting out doors in England, as with us, and in the largest private gardens one seldom sees a lounging chair. A man's home is his castle, and it feels more than its commander when he is within its walls.—William T. Tinsley in Lyons Republican.

Eating cucumbers seed is said not only to aid weak digestion, but to make the eyes bright and strengthen the sight.

A WISH.

The flower is withering on its branch,
Its leaves are turning sere;
There seems to me an avalanche
In every way I turn.
Offshoots at night I fly from scene,
From pleasures I depart;
In many a dreary place I roam
To still my aching heart.

Oh, give me back my bygone days!
The days when I was young—
Give me back my childish ways
And childish heart again!
Or give to me old fancies dear,
Ant spoil bound I will stay!
Give me back the loved one I have,
To make the sad scene gay.
—W. R. Halpin in Drake's Magazine.

CLIMATE FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

Ideas Which May Be of Value to the Afflicted.

Ing—A Caution.

Professor Knight, of the Harvard Medical school, read a paper not long ago before the Boston Society for Medical Observation on the climate of a climate for consumptive persons. Some of the ideas advanced may be of value.

Patients who have cavities in their lungs, and those who have chronic pneumonic symptoms, especially if they are poor, should not leave home; nor should those who have any acute affection of the lungs do so during the acute stages of the disease. If, in the early stages of consumption, complete cure can be hoped for, a climate is to be chosen in which the patient can remain throughout the year. If, on the other hand, nothing more than temporary relief and some prolongation of life can be expected, a mild winter climate is recommended.

While consumption presents a variety of phases and conditions, making it impossible to lay down fixed and invariable rules, it may be said that in general the first object aimed at by a change of climate is to enable the patient to live an active, out door life for the purpose of assisting nutrition of the lungs, and this is best attained in situations at an altitude of 4,000 to 8,000 feet above the sea level.

Dry and pure air, a good proportion of clear days, and a rarefied atmosphere which compels greater activity of the respiratory organs, make a mountainous country the best for this purpose. Those for whom high altitudes may be recommended are:

(1.) Patients who show no more alarming symptoms than a morning cough and expectoration. For them Colorado and New Mexico are suited. (2.) Those who have some consolidations of the lungs, but no cavity, nor any serious constitutional disturbance. For persons who exhibit such disturbances as high pulse and temperature—a lower altitude should be tried first; say the pure regions of southern Georgia for the cold months, and then, if there is improvement, a more elevated region. (3.) Cases in which there is early and frequent hemorrhage, without much other evidence of disease. The mountains are peculiarly adapted to persons of this class; and, (4.) Persons who are recovering from acute diseases of the lungs. But of these some great discretion is exercised, lest the step taken to ward off permanent pulmonary disease have an evil effect upon other organs weakened by sickness.

Patients in whom tuberculous disease has invaded the larynx should on no account be sent to high altitudes. They need mild and moist climate, like that of Southern California. Many of those who have a tendency to irritability of the bronchial tubes, and nervous persons, do not do well in high altitudes. A very high altitude should not, as a rule, be recommended for any patient over fifty years of age.—Youth's Companion.

Buying Cheap Railroad Tickets.

A man who can choose his time for traveling within a limit of a few weeks, and to whom the speediest route is not necessary, can save half the cost of his railroad fare by watching the newspapers for notices of excursions to conventions, expositions, carnivals and such things. Let him go to a ticket scalper and say: "Here is a man who has to go, being sure to impress on the scalper that he is in no hurry to go, for hurry costs money, and the man who must go at once has to pay a long price. The scalper will offer to sell him a ticket either to the place he wants to go to or to the convention place nearest, with an order on a brother scalper for a ticket the rest of the way, or he may get an excursion ticket with a draft on a brother scalper, to be paid on presentation of the return coupon of the ticket. If the passenger does not like to have so many dealings with scalpers he can buy a regular excursion ticket at the railroad office, and take his chances of selling the return coupon for twice the price he paid for it, depending on his shrewdness as a seller and the kind of scalper he happens to encounter.

The excursion rates give some railroads that are competing a chance to cut in rates the opportunity they are after. There are half a dozen ways of going out of New York to Chicago. Other things being equal, passengers would naturally take the line that have the best cars and make the best time. To get any traffic at all the other roads must offer lower rates. They are in a pool, and they cannot make a lower rate at their regular offices than the pool allows. But a pretense of not doing it must be kept up. Here is where the natural usefulness of the ticket scalper to both railroads and passengers comes in. The railroad does its part by paying commissions for the sale of tickets, for example, at one dollar, amounting to two thirds of the regular fare. Any scalper can get this reduction by sending a boy with a note and the price of the ticket, less commission, to the railroad office of the company. How much of this commission he keeps for himself depends on his shrewdness and the shrewdness of his customer. With ticket scalpers in New York it is usual to take within $3 or $3 of the price he pays the railroad company. Without caution he may make much profit from the passenger as the railroad company for the passenger's transportation.—New York Sun.

Brahma and His Wife.

One rare Brahma occasionally in the East pictured in heroic size on the walls of houses, or as an idol of wood or stone, occupying a shed at the end of a village with his wife Sarasvati. He is also, of course, to be seen in temples, but not often. Sarasvati is always represented as a beautiful young woman reposing a foot on her husband. Like our own mother Eve, she was created out of a portion of her husband's body, although the Hindoos do not distinctly say a rib.

When this happened Brahma was possessed of but one head. Beholding this lovely, newly created companion, however, he at once became enamored with her charms. Sarasvati being a shame faced maiden, modestly turned away to escape his gaze. At this Brahma's wish grew a second head, a second head issued from his body. As the damsel skipped around to another position, a third head appeared, and then a fourth. At length, in her embarrassment, Sarasvati sprang into the sky. Not to be outdone, however, Brahma instantly produced a fifth head. This last head was subsequently struck off by another god—Shiva, it is said, he never has only four.—Thomas Stevens in Courier Journal.

JOTTINGS.

—Annie Pirley will appear at "Miss" at Music Hall to-night.

—Classes in light gymnastics will be taught by Mr. W. W. Martin at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night and to-morrow night.

—Dorse & Van Arsdale advertise the Alfred Dolge felt shoes and slippers, said to be the finest thing in existence for cold feet.

—The West End Literature Circle sale for the benefit of the Children's Home was opened in the Dunlap building this afternoon and will be continued this evening.

—The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be celebrated in the Trinity Reformed church next Sunday morning. The preparatory service will be held in the church this evening at eight o'clock.

—Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., will entertain friends in their lodge room this evening. The programme will include music and recitations, with dancing and refreshments in the S. of P. rooms.

—Engines No. 1 and 2 were out for a "wash" yesterday—No. 1 at Potter's Press Works, No. 2 on Crescent avenue. No. 1 was also out Wednesday night. Considerable excitement was caused in front of No. 1's engine house by the balking of one of the horses.

—Wood oil is now made on a somewhat extensive scale in Sweden, where the refuse of timber-cutting and forest-clearings is turned into account for the oil it contains. It is used for illuminating purposes, and gives, when put in a lamp especially made for it, a very satisfactory light.

—Edsall's holiday announcement, which appears in another column, contains some points which doubtless will be of interest to the many who have shopping to do now or in the near future. We suggest a careful perusal of it and hope that our readers will do all their buying as far as possible of our home merchants, especially when they go to such an extensive outlay as Mr. Edsall has, to interest our citizens in home enterprise.

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. George P. Randolph, of Newark, spent Thanksgiving with friends in this city.

Mr. Chas. W. Ritts, of New York, spent Thanksgiving with friends in North Plainfield.

The Misses Martin, of Somerset street, tendered a reception to their friends yesterday afternoon and evening.

Mr. Oscar H. Baldwin, formerly superintendent of the Plainfield Electric Light Company, is visiting friends in this city.

The Rev. T. Logan Murphy, of North Plainfield is a member of the Committee appointed at the recent meeting of the Archdeaconry of New Brunswick to draft a memorial to the late Frederic A. Potts.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Gordon and little daughter spent Thanksgiving with Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Wright of East Front street.

St. Mary's T. A. B. Society tendered their friends an evening sociable in T. A. B. Hall Wednesday evening. The affair was very successful, and a good time was enjoyed.

The Royal Arcanum Council will have its annual supper in a few weeks. A committee to arrange for it has been appointed, consisting of Mr. E. W. Conklin, Councilman Peter Emmons, the Rev. E. M. Rodman, Mr. C. J. Feyel and Mr. W. J. Leonard.

About twenty-five young people of this city assembled at the residence of Mr. Patrick Keeley, on La Grande avenue, last evening, and tendered a surprise party to his daughter, Miss Alice. Dancing and other pastimes were indulged in until an early hour this morning. The guests had a most enjoyable time.

Mr. A. W. Haviland, of Rockview avenue, has been having his residence renovated inside and out. A number of workmen, carpenters, painters and laborers have been engaged thereon. Wednesday evening each was happily surprised by the gift of a large turkey, a present from Mr. and Mrs. Haviland. That they fully appreciate the thoughtfulness, kindness and generosity is very evident from their expressions of regard to-day.

There has just been forwarded from this city a testimonial in album form from the officers of the New Jersey State Pharmaceutical Association to the retiring Treasurer, Mr. Wm. Rust, of New Brunswick. The work was handsomely engrossed by Mr. Wm. M. Smith, of Elm street; and was signed by President White, of Jersey City; First Vice-President Hall, of Plainfield; Second Vice-President Kinsella, of Paterson; and Secretary F. B. Kilmer, of New Brunswick. Mr. H. F. Nichols, of Plainfield, was on the Committee on Resolutions who had charge of the testimonial.

ERRORS IN JURY-DRAWING.

A New Legal Point in the Court at Somerville.

The Somerset County Court met at 10 a. m. Tuesday, with Judges Bartine, Thompson and Jacobus present, for the purpose of witnessing the drawing of grand and petit jurors for December term. Under Jury Commissioners Voorhees and Beckman the drawing was proceeded with in the same manner as for September term.

After the drawing two errors were discovered. For the grand jurors the box usually devoted to holding the names of the general panel was used, and through an oversight the name of Ryneer H. Staats, a juryman of the last term, was left in it and was the second name drawn.

In drawing the petit jury one of the glass balls, designed to contain the names, became cause Commissioner Beckman failed to make a ticket for Benjamin U. D. Vanderbeek, one of the 100 names on the list. The balls contain 149 names in the box, one less than required by law. Judge Magie has been consulted.

ROBBERY AND ARSON.

A Plainfield Cottage Plundered and Burned.

A $3,000 frame dwelling-house on East Front street, near Netherwood, owned by a Mr. Dunham, of New York, and occupied by Mrs. Beck, a widow, and her daughter, was burned to the ground at one o'clock this morning. A vigorous alarm was sounded, but the Fire Department on arriving found the interior of the house a mass of flame, and were unable to do anything but save the adjoining house, which was vacant.

Nothing was saved from the ruined home. A $900 piano, on which was an insurance of $500, and $1,800 worth of furniture insured for $1,000 were totally destroyed. Valuable Masonic and Knight Templar books, documents and engravings, relics of the deceased Mr. Beck, were also consumed.

The back door of the house was wide-open when the fire was discovered, and as Mrs. Beck and Miss Beck were both in New York spending Thanksgiving with a son it is supposed that the house was robbed and then fired. Recent evidence seems to clinch this theory.

The burned building was next to the Hann residence, which was burned about a year ago.

The rumor that the piano had been removed before the fire and that none of its incombustible parts could be found is pronounced untrue by fireman Wm. T. Claassen, who says he saw it while it was burning.

The glare of the fire lighted the sky with an intense glow.

Mrs. Beck, Miss Beck and Mr. Dunham have been telegraphed for.

LOST THE SIGHT OF AN EYE.

A Sad Accident Mars Mr. Chase's Thanksgiving.

Mr. R. F. M. Chase lost the sight of an eye by a gunning accident at "Edgewood," his estate on Somerset street, yesterday afternoon. He and two guests were target-shooting on the lawn when a cartridge exploded, and a bit of brass flew out and lodged in the eye-ball, making a painful and dangerous operation in New York necessary to-day. Mrs. Chase accompanied her husband to the metropolis.

A LOCOMOTIVE DISABLED.

Her Connecting Rods Break, and Traffic Suffers.

The heavy steel shafts connecting the driving wheels of the locomotive attached to train No. 34, on the Central road, both broke a short distance this side of Elmora last night and delayed traffic on the west-bound track over an hour. There was a lack of proper tools, and the engine stood helpless till force rather than skill had removed the useless connecting rods.

The train, which had left Elizabeth at 8:45, on time, did not reach Plainfield till 10:27, an hour and thirteen minutes late.

The engine, after the absolutely essential repairs had been made, steamed with only two driving-wheels in service up to Roselle, where another locomotive was procured.

When the rods broke the ends neared the tender fell and flew up and down, pounding the ties and the cab. Had the forward ends fallen the result might have been a serious wreck.

THE RAMABAI CIRCLE.

Plainfield's Part in a Great Indian Charity.

A number of members of the Ramabai Circle in this city met in the congregational church last week Friday, at the first annual meeting of the Circle. The Rev. Mr. Goodrich took the chair, at the request of the President, Mrs. H. D. Burlingham. A brief report was presented by the President of what had been done by the Circle during the year. She said:

"Our Circle numbers 65 members, 8 of whom are life members, and 57 pay $1 annually. We have received $138 from membership fees and dues, and $62.64 from donations, of which $5 were from the penny collections of the children in the public schools of Plainfield. The total receipts have been $195.64. We have sent to the Treasurer of the Ramabai Association at Boston $174.09. The balance now in the treasury is $21.55."

An interesting circular from the Central Association at Boston, of which Rev. E. E. Hale is president, was read by W. J. Leonard. It told of Miss Pandita Ramabai had accomplished, personally, during the year in furthering the work in hand. Nearly $30,000 is already in the treasury, with a large contribution in view from California, which is expected to swell the total to $30,000.

A few new names were added to the Plainfield Circle at Friday's meeting.

Thanksgiving Day.

The national feast-day was quietly and pleasantly observed in Plainfield. The attendance at the churches was large, despite the cloudy skies, the foggy atmosphere and the occasional rain-splashes. The Crescent avenue Presbyterian, Park avenue Baptist and Congregational churches held a union service in the Park avenue church at 10:30 a. m. The Rev. C. L. Goodrich preached an appropriate sermon. The First Baptist, Methodist, First Presbyterian, Trinity Reformed and Seventh-Day Baptist congregations joined in morning services at the Seventh-Day church, where the Rev. Dr. Ketcham delivered a thanksgiving discourse. St. Mary's church celebrated two masses. The Rev. S. P. Simpson, rector, conducted services at the Church of Our Saviour at Netherwood. At the Church of the Holy Cross, at Fanwood, the Rev. Dr. Taylor conducted services. At the Church of the Holy Cross the Rev. T. Logan Murphy preached an appropriate sermon. The beautifully decorated interior of the Holy Cross church was photographed by Thorne.

NOTES OF THE HOLIDAY.

The Pond Tool, Potter Press and Scott Press Works were closed over Thanksgiving. The Scott Press Company took advantage of the holiday to repair the boiler.

The pupils of the High School took part in Thanksgiving exercises in Assembly Hall Wednesday morning. An appropriate musical programme was rendered in by all, while special readings and recitations were given by several pupils.

MALE AGAIN FOR MAYOR.

Others Re-nominations at the Republican Convention.

C. M. Goddard called the Republican City Convention to order at Headquarters Wednesday evening and was unanimously chosen Chairman, while J. B. Coward was made Secretary.

All the delegates were present.

Wm. Stillman was elected Judge and Amos Andrews and Richard Stevens were chosen Inspectors. The Secretary was empowered to act as Clerk.

Before the Convention proceeded to nominations F. X. Schoonmaker spoke briefly on the Mayoralty question. He said that there had been some discussion as to whether Mayor Joe Male would accept re-nomination, but all doubt might be laid aside, inasmuch as a messenger had brought a note from Mr. Male saying that he would accept were the Convention unanimous in choosing him.

FOR MAYOR.

Abram Angleman nominated P. Knoxland.

E. R. Ackerman nominated Alexander Gilbert.

Geo. D. Patten re-nominated Job Male.

D. W. Littell nominated Geo. W. Rockfellow.

The first ballot resulted as follows:

Male	17
Rockfellow	9
Gilbert	4
Knowland	1

The re-nomination of Mr. Male was made unanimous by a rising vote.

FOR CITY JUDGE

the following ballot was taken:

Geo. P. Saydam	16
R. R. Coddington	15

Judge Saydam was then unanimously renominated.

FOR ASSESSOR

the Secretary was instructed to cast the ballot for J. A. Hubbard, which was done.

FOR COLLECTOR

John Johnson received 19 votes, V. W. Nash 11. Mr. Johnson's re-nomination was made unanimous.

FOR TREASURER

Alex. Titsworth was unanimously re-nominated.

FOR COMMISSIONERS

of Appeal in cases of taxation R. MacDonald and Manning Vermeule were unanimously renominated.

FOR BOARD OF EDUCATION

member the Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut received unanimous re-nomination

Messrs. Schoonmaker, Marsh, Littell and Gillies were chosen as a Committee to notify Mayor Male of his re-nomination.

The City Executive Committee was empowered to fill any vacancies that might occur.

The announcement was made that the polls at the City Election will close at 4:30.

After the Convention the City Executive Committee held a business meeting.

All Honor Mayor Male.

The action of the Republican Convention in this city Wednesday evening will commend itself to every respectable citizen of Plainfield, especially the unanimous re-nomination of Mayor Male, which we are sure all will approve. The Democrats, we understand, do not propose to run any candidate against Mr. Male and if this be so it will be a handsome thing to do, but better still they will be honorable him, rising above party, to do honor to so worthy a citizen, to crown his long and useful life. So gracious an act would redound to the credit of our Democratic friends even more than it does to the Republicans, and we hope that it will be done.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRIMARIES.

NEW JERSEY NUGGETS.

Live News from Various Parts of the State.

Paul R. Debow, age ninety-two years, was buried at Hampton Plains Wednesday. He was an ardent Republican and was a member of the New Jersey House of Assembly in 1839 and 1840.

Two boys named Solen and a man named Stewart have been lodged in jail for the murderous assault committed Wednesday on Thomas Barlow, of East New Brunswick. Barlow may recover of his injuries.

SCOURING THE WOODS FOR A MURDERER.

The people are searching the woods and swamps back of Smithburg, Monmouth county, for Thomas Senon and his sons, Samuel, Joseph and Moses, who nearly killed Foreman Brown last night at Smithburg. Brown and the Senons became involved in an altercation, and the former was knocked down by one of the Senon boys. The blow rendered him unconscious. While he was lying on the ground Moses Senon struck him with a rock, fracturing his skull and making a wound five inches long. Senon and his sons fled to the woods. A posse of citizens was at once organized and started in pursuit of Brown's assailants. The injured man was removed to his home. It is thought that he will not live more than a day or two. The assault was the result of a grudge of seven years' standing. Brown once whipped the elder Senon in a fight.

JAMES L. BLACK, FORGER.

The first trial of James L. Black, the confidential clerk and bookkeeper of Uriah White of Asbury Park, was concluded in the district attorney's office at Freehold yesterday afternoon. Black pleaded guilty to forgery. He was charged with having entered forged checks and notes to the aggregate amount of $60,000, the largest being to Mr. White's order for $20,000, with having forged the signatures of numerous well-known men of Monmouth county. There are forty-two indictments against him for forgery, and also one for embezzling the cash of his late employer. The indictment on which he was tried is for forging a check for $1,000 with having forged the name of R. Bloomfield Campbell to a note of $600, payable at the First National Bank of Asbury Park. The trial was most stubbornly contested by able counsel. The prisoner was identified by as witnesses a number of prominent bank officials of Monmouth County, who testified that the signatures to the notes were those of a forgery. The case attracted a great deal of interest, as it was regarded as a test of the strength of the evidence which the State has against the defendant. Nearly every bank in that section of the State holds some of the notes which he is charged by the State with. He will be tried on the other indictments immediately.

HOW THE DAY WAS SPENT

Thanksgiving Festivities in Various Places.

BATTLING GAMES OF FOOTBALL.

Brief Accounts of Two Hot Games in New York, with Side Remarks on the Nature of the Game—Church Services—Thanksgiving Day in the Sunny South.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Thanksgiving day was cloudy, with occasional light rain. The usual church services were held and well attended. The custom of furnishing good dinners to the occupants of the various charitable and penal institutions was carried out with perhaps more than the usual completeness.

The football match at the Polo grounds between the Crescent and the Orange teams resulted in a victory for the Crescents, by a score of 25 to 0. Hitch and Ricketts, of Orange, were hurt, and Spier and Byron took their places for the latter part of the game.

The University of Pennsylvania and Wesleyan college teams played a game on the cricketers' field, and it was as successful, in the matter of knocks and bruises, as any that has been witnessed here for a long time. There was more muscle than science on both sides. About 3,000 spectators, mostly delegations from the various eastern colleges, were present. Rain fell, and the ground was muddy. Wesleyan, of Pennsylvania, was hooted and driven in one of the rushes, but resumed her place amongst the Manchester of Wesleyan, was hurt, but did not quit un til he was hurt a second time, when he had to retire. Clarke, tackling his place. The Wesleyans complained all through, and the game ended with the score: Pennsylvania, 18; Wesleyan, 6.

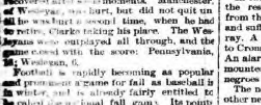
Football is rapidly becoming as popular and prominent a game for fall as baseball is in winter, and is already fairly entitled to be called the national fall game. Its points are not generally known by the people at large as they should, hence a brief description is appended. Following is a diagram of the "field:"

Under the college rules each side is given fifteen players to a team, and whichever side scores the greater number of points in that time wins.

Eleven men are allowed on a side, placed as follows: Seven forwards, two half backs, one quarter back and one full back.

A "tackle" occurs when a player running with a ball is caught by an opponent, who pulls or wrestles him down. That player is then says "down." The ball is then given to the captain of the scrimmage.



A "TACKLE."

The different points in football are: Goal obtained by a touch down, which scores six; goal by a kick from the field, score five; a touch down by which no goal is made scores four; a safety by opponents counts two for the attacking party.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 29.—The football game here between the Cornell college and Lehigh university ended was won by Lehigh, 4 to 0. The game was played in mud ankle deep. About 300 Cornell boys came over to see the contest. The game aggrieved at the umpire's decision in the first inning in regard to a touch down not allowed, but the umpire is sustained by general opinion. Everything passed off amicably.

CHICAGO, Nov. 29.—The football game between the University club, of Chicago, and the Pittsburg team, of Pittsburgh, at the ball park resulted in a victory for the former team by a score of 26 to 4. Fully one-half of the Chicago team are graduates of New Haven and ex-members of the famous Yale team.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 29.—The crowd which gathered at the Exposition to witness the football game between the University team of the South Carolina legislature by the Georgia legislature numbered from 10,000 to 15,000 people. It was a friendly, contest of the Athletic Clubs of the two states of the Union, and his speech was equal to his having New England con, but he was with the material development of the south than with the relations between the two sections. He was tendered an ovation by a large audience at the conclusion of his utterance. The crowd was so great that many were crushed.

Gen. Meade fell and a number of women fainted. Governor Richardson, of South Carolina, introduced Hon. Augustin T. Smythe, of Charleston, S. C., who responded to Mr. Grady's greeting to Carolina. The Palmetto state was awarded the diploma for having the handsomest exhibit on the grounds.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Nov. 30.—Thanksgiving was generally observed here as a holiday. There were services in nearly all the churches in the morning. In the afternoon there were excellent races at the Charlotte fair grounds. Weather soft and balmy, and roses and other flowers in full bloom in open and unprotected gardens.

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—The usual Thanksgiving day entertainment was provided for the convicts at the Massachusetts State Prison, and, as has been the case for a few years, the governor bestowed executive clemency upon two of the prisoners—Thomas Herty and Charles Witham. Herty was committed for life in April, 1872, for murdering his bookkeeper in Malden. Witham was committed from Salem in February, 1877, for breaking into the house of Mary March in the night time and feloniously stealing money.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30.—Thanksgiving day was observed as a civil and religious holiday in this city. The churches were crowded and the parks and the theatres in the afternoon and evening. The inmates of public institutions were given a bountiful dinner, and in numerous athletic entertainments. The day was warm and pleasant. Stores and public buildings were closed.

A THANKSGIVING RIOT.

Two Policemen and a Citizen Fatally Injured by Drunken Negroes.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 30.—A riot on a small scale marked Yamacraw, a negro quarter of the city. Ten or a dozen drunken negroes and negresses were carousing in a corner grocery store, and when Policeman McMurray attempted to disperse them they snatched his club and attacked him. The officer shot the nearest negro in the head, and as the fellow ran fired four more balls into him.

A mob of negroes collected and attacked the officer, knocking him down and stabbing. He finally ran into a house and barred the doors, but the mob battered the doors down, tore off the blinds, burst in through the windows and beat him into insensibility. Then they carried his body on to the porch and threw it into the street, where other negroes jumped on it, literally beating it to pulp, finally leaving McMurray for dead. The women played the leading part, both in doing actual violence and in urging on the men.

In the meantime Officer Cronan started to the rescue of McMurray, but two blocks from the scene fell into the hands of the mob and suffered a fate similar to that of McMurray. A laborer named Crimmins, who rushed to Cronan's rescue, was also severely beaten. An alarm brought police to the scene mounted and in patrol wagons, and the negroes dispersed.

The negro shot by McMurray is dead. Another negro is dying from two bullet wounds, and other wounded negroes are in hiding. The wounded policemen and Crimmins are in the hospital, suffering from fractured skulls and internal injuries.

Thanksgiving Day Tragedies.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 30.—John B. King, a young law student, was shot and killed on Orchard street, near Henry Donovan's saloon, about 9 o'clock on Thanksgiving afternoon. The affair is very mysterious and the police have discovered no clew to the murderer. The saloon proprietor denies all knowledge of the affair.

AUBURN, N. Y., Nov. 30.—Washington Buckley, of this city, went duck shooting on Cayuga lake, and while in the middle of the boat his gun was accidentally discharged, the shot taking effect in his left side, causing almost instant death. He was about 45 years of age and unmarried.

Thanksgiving Casualty.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—During Thanksgiving celebration by the Hudson Guards at Manhattan park, the explosion of a can of powder caused severe injuries to Edward Schenck, Harry Hoagland and George Smith, and resulted in a fire which partially destroyed the shooting pavilion. Louis Munthauk was badly wounded by the accidental discharge of a musket.

Democratic Suspicions.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—The Sun says: "There is every prospect of a lively overhauling of Republican election methods in New York, Indiana, West Virginia and Michigan by the Democratic Democratic house this winter. Democratic congressmen from the close states who have arrived in Washington have within the days an eager look for such an investigation. A conference of Democratic leaders will be held before congress meets on Monday, at which a plan of action will be agreed upon. It is understood that such an inquiry will be conducted by a special committee of the house, made up from the ablest lawyers of that body. The resolution will be drawn so as to limit the call to an inquiry into the conduct of certain United States supervisors of election in New York and Indiana, but that will be only the pretext for an investigation which will be far reaching in its scope."

Arrested for Cruelty to Rabbits.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—At Garden City, L. I., August Beardon and F. W. Beatch-erford, William Beardon and F. O. Beach, members of the Hempstead Coursing club, were arrested by an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The arrests took place while the members of the club were engaged in coursing rabbits with fox terriers—three rabbits having been killed by the dogs. Members of some of the most prominent families of New York city were present at the meeting as invited guests, and there was much indignation at the interference of the agent. All of the accused were taken before a justice of the peace, who paroled them to appear before the court of special sessions.

Two Lock Tenders Drowned.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 30.—A special to The Morning Herald from Lockport, N. Y., states that two men, named Young and Bender, lock tenders in the village, were found drowned in the lock this morning. It was to relieve them that Bender and Young and Bender were missing, and on letting the water out of the lock their bodies were found. It is supposed that one of the men had gone out to attend the gate and fell in the water and that the other went to his rescue and also fell in, both being unable to get out again. The men were both married and leave families.

Inventor Keely Reinstated.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—The directors of the Keely Motor company have devised a plan by which it is hoped all the differences existing between the inventor and the directors will be settled. The plan provides for the reorganization of the company and will be submitted to the stockholders for ratification at the annual meeting, December 10. The reorganization will heal all differences heretofore existing between the inventor and the directors, and the proposed new company will control all the patents and the latest discoveries of Keely.

THE DAY AT WASHINGTON

How the Administration Spent Thanksgiving.

BUSINESS BEFORE THE HOUSE.

The Short Session Likely to Be Unusually Lively and Important—Returning Congressmen Give Their Opinions Concerning the Cabinet—Plenty of Gossip and Speculation.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—As usual on Thanksgiving Day the departments were all closed. Had it not been for the drilling of the local militia the streets would have been as quiet as on Sunday. The president, accompanied by Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Folsom, attended church service.

After reviewing the militia parade the president joined his family at Oak View, where a quiet Thanksgiving dinner was served. Besides the family, Mrs. Harmon, a sister of Mrs. Folsom, who has been visiting Oak View for some time.

Secretary Whitney had a party of friends, twelve in number, to dine with him at his country place, Grasslands, at 2 o'clock. Among his guests were Secretary and Mrs. Fairchild, and Secretary and Mrs. Endicott.

Secretary Bayard dined with his daughters at home. His youngest daughter, Miss Nelly, returned from the north in time to take part in the holiday festivities.

Secretary Vilas spent the day at home with his family. His daughter, Miss Mollie, returned recently from boarding school in Baltimore, where she has been for some time.

Secretary and Mrs. Fairchild, on their return from Grasslands, entertained a small company at their home. Among those present were Rev. Dr. Jackson, of Baltimore, and his wife, who is a sister of the secretary, Perry Smith, Edward Graham and Morris Green.

The Postmaster-General and Mrs. Dickinson had as their guests at dinner a party of eight young Michigan friends, who are studying at the Academy of the Visitation in Georgetown.

THE COMING SESSION.

Congress reconvenes on Monday, and for a business view point the short session is likely to be more important to the general progress and material interests of the country than was the unprecedented long session which adjourned in October.

There is every reason why measures of national importance, free from partisan or sectional predilections, should receive the prompt and patriotic consideration of congress in the spirit of promoting the general welfare of the people and advancing public prosperity.

There are many measures of such general character already favorably reported from committees, which failed to become laws by reason of the pending tariff bills absorbing the time and attention of congress to the exclusion of all other legislation. These bills will probably on tariff discussion interfering with other legislation during the closing session of the Fiftieth congress.

CABINET GOSSIP AND SPECULATION.

Going to the speculative order, but little is heard about the convening of congress, and while the change of administration is more than three months away, the probabilities and possibilities are being constantly discussed among the politicians. The personnel of the next cabinet is the all absorbing topic, but as the president-elect has kept his own counsel in regard to the matter all of the gossip on the subject is of but little value.

It is assuredly believed in Washington that Mr. Blaine will not be invited to accept the portfolio of state department of state, but that Senator Sherman will receive such an invitation, and the indications at this time seem to be that he will accept. An intimate friend of Gen. Harrison said that the statement could be made positive that Mr. Blaine's name had not been seriously considered in connection with the appointment of state, and rumors to the contrary notwithstanding. Should Mr. Sherman enter the cabinet, the present situation in Ohio warrants the assumption by politicians that Maj. Mc-Kinley would be elected as speaker of the house, and that his colleague, Maj. Ben Butterworth, would succeed Mr. Sherman in the senate.

WHAT MR. THOMAS THINKS.

Representative Thomas, of Illinois, has just returned from Indianapolis. When asked what the prospects for President Harrison's cabinet were he said: "I do not speak with authority, but nosely upon my own responsibility I say that California will be given a member of the cabinet, New England one, New York one, provided the New York leaders can come to some substantial agreement."

"What of the south?"

"Well, I should say the south will probably be given a cabinet officer. Indianapolis seems to be treated fairly. The south will have no reason to complain if they will come up and accept the situation like men and deal honorably with the north. Mr. Harrison is a southern editor no doubt is a very near ex pression of his views on the subject. I don't think anybody need have any trouble in arriving at a basis of settlement that will be acceptable to the people of the south. The policies as yet have made no arrests.

Suspected of Two Murders.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 30.—William Campion, a Hoboken rough, was arrested for the murder of Honora Fiebbe, a woman of doubtful repute, on Thanksgiving night, and died in her bed Tuesday, shortly after Campion had left her apartments. Campion is also suspected of the murder of an Italian while intoxicated on Thanksgiving day, one month ago, and it is thought possible that he may have killed the woman because she threatened to expose his connection with that crime.

Explosion at a Fortunate Time.

SAGINAW CITY, Mich., Nov. 30.—An explosion occurred in the Ames & Frost planing mill, completely demolishing the Stenglein furniture factory and enveloped the wreck in flames. Gus Stenlein and Fireman Condon were seriously injured, but not fatally reported buried in the ruins. The workmen had just left the building for dinner, otherwise the loss of life would have been great. The property was insured, but not against explosion. Loss about $20,000.

Killed the Editor in Self Defense.

FORT SMITH, Ark., Nov. 30.—The trial of E. C. Boudinot, ex-editor of The Cherokee Advocate, who in October, 1887, killed S. H. Hoss, ex-editor of The Times, closed Wednesday night. The jury rendered a verdict of acquittal on the ground that Boudinot acted in self defense. Dan W. Cameron, son-in-law of Gen. Grant, and brother of Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, and Gen. Clayton, and a Mr. Bradbury, editor of the Gazette, were the counsel for the defendant.

Collision in New Jersey.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—The Philadelphia and Reading railroad company announces that it will make no advance in the price of anthracite coal for December. Next Saturday it will shut down eighteen collieries, which will affect thirty-seven engines and about 1,500 men.

THANKSGIVING TALKS.

Gen. Harrison Enjoys a Quiet Family Dinner.

THE POLITICIANS COME AND GO.

Surmises as to the Results of Butterworth and Hanna's Visit—Disposing of Ohio's Big Four—Senator Chandler in New York Chipper and Confident.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 30.—Thanksgiving was a quiet day at the Harrison homestead, and the only guest who came to help the family get away with the big turkey Farmer Anderson, of Harrison's old regiment, had sent in, was R. I. Kersey, of St. Louis, the railroad magnate who figured so prominently as Chairman one of the Baltimore conventions. There was nothing notable about the Harrison dinner. It was just a good, old fashioned Thanksgiving repast, in which turkey, cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie were the principal parts. It was begun about 2 and ended about 4. The members of the Harrison family are not fond of dining in general style. Mrs. Harrison, Russell Harrison, Mrs. Brown and Miss Strickle, of Dayton, O., relatives of the family, who have been a part of the household for a little while after the nomination; Mr. and Mrs. McKee and their little ones, and so the big turkey was done away with very quickly. Dessert was one of the choice apples which the farmers of Burton county sent to the general in a red white and blue barrel.

The return of Congressman Ben Butterworth and Mart Hanna to Gen. Harrison evidently came to something. Instead of being half an hour long, as they had intended, it was practically all day. They left at 10 o'clock before Harrison got away to attend the party given by Judge Martindale at the Denison House. The general was in such good humor that he danced a quadrille, and the Ohio visitors returned to their hotel all smiles. Congressman Butterworth reiterated his assertion that he knew nothing of what had passed between Gen. Harrison and Senator Sherman on the cabinet question, and from the little he said it was gleaned that Senator Sherman is very much in the dark himself as to what to do in case a portfolio was offered.

The growing fear of Foraker crops out in the talk of every Ohio man who comes here. As to what the feeling in Ohio is regarding the cabinet appointments, Mr. Butterworth said there was perfect confidence in Gen. Harrison. He would not appoint bad men to his cabinet, nor incompetent ones, and any man who would give a clean and able cabinet would give satisfaction. Suspicious persons think that even in this moderate answer there was a slap at Foraker, and are inclined to believe the Shermanites did Foraker no good by their visit.

The speakership had a good talking over, too, and though the Ohioans spoke highly of McKinley's fitness they partially intimated, in talk to newspaper men at the hotel, that Allison and Reed might be no more than a respectable second choice. "If some of the way Sherman's state stands, but it will be a hard job side tracking Foraker in that fashion. He will be noisy at any rate.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Senator W. E. Chandler, ex-secretary of the navy, stopped over in this city yesterday on his way to Washington. Mr. Chandler talked a little in a reporter at the Fifth Avenue hotel on Madison Square, he said: "out I shall only see him in his seat in the senate. Isn't he a great man! My! I have the sincerest admiration for him. Yes, it will not be necessary to talk to him about the complexion of the house.

"We shall organize the house with five Republican majority—five or six or seven. We are not going to let the Democrats steal anything from us, of that you can also be positively assured. We propose to admit North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington territories," and the senator looked over his glasses to see how that would suit Mr. Platt, who was standing a few feet off and appeared to be quite cheerful over the statement.

"The next cabinet?" resumed the "Hero of '76." "Well, I am pretty positive that no person can or will accept a seat in that cabinet. All the newspaper talk about the cabinet, and especially the importance given to the Big Four, is unmitigated bosh. Harrison is a man who accepts everything he can, but that he will not give anything away until March 4. He is entirely convinced that the men who write with pens, but outside of them all the offices are political, and this will be made apparent. Why, I have had more applications for with the clerks, but in time they will have to go too, and Republicans will be put in. But as I said, there is no hurry, for we are in for another four years and what is the sense of rushing things."

The speakership was brought up. "Oh, Tom Reed will be all right," the senator; "he's from New England, you know, and that is sufficient. Of course, there will be a little natural struggle between McKinley, Butterworth and Cannon, but it will wind up with Tom Reed in the chair. But I'd like to say before leaving the subject that four brainier men than Reed, McKinley, Cannon and Butterworth do not live in this country; that's my opinion of them. To be polite I shall correct that to 'in the Republican party.' Who is the smartest Democrat in the country? Why, there is no smart Democrats outside of New York, and Tim Campbell is the smartest of the New York Democrats.

BISHOP COXE ON BRIBERY.

A Sermon Remarkable for Bluntness and a Bitter Attack on Politics.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., Nov. 30.—Rev. Arthur Cleveland Coxe, bishop of the Episcopalian diocese of Western New York, preached a sermon here which was remarkable for its bluntness and the bitter attack on politics it contained.

The bishop attacked parties indiscriminately. "Bribery was practiced in every election we had previous election, and there was such a wholesale purchase of votes as in the last one. Whole states, he said, were bought and sold. A Democratic governor of New York was elected by bribery."

The preacher finally summarized Presidents Harrison and Cleveland in the following words: "Harrison was elected by bribery and Cleveland by intimidation."

Bishop Coxe's sermon is the talk of the town.

Commissioner Wright, of the labor bureau, has been appointed by the president a member of the board of arbitration to settle the differences between the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad company and its employes.

Ex-Governor Foster, of Ohio, has been selected by the inaugural committee as marshal of the inauguration parade. The appointment of the ex-governor is popular. Foster was a gallant soldier in the war, and his services during that period, as well as his civil career, have made him a favorite with the people

"Wy, boss—er—er—I's couldn't blind!"—Harper's Bazar.

The Name Was Everything.

Editor (writing to eminent literary man)—If you will send us a story—say 1,500 to 2,000 words—we will pay you $300. You understand that this is $295 for the use of your name and $5 for the story—our usual rates.

Literary Man—I regret to say that I am at this time of inclination to write the story, but I inclose my name, which you may use, and to return send me check for $295.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Taken Advice.

First Small Boy—Hello! Did you bet on election?

Second Small Boy—Of course I did.

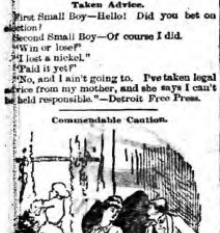
"Win or lose?"

"I lost a nickel."

"Paid it yet?"

"No, and I ain't going to. Pa taken legal advice from my mother, and she says I can't be held responsible."—Detroit Free Press.

Commendable Caution.



She—It may be I have yellow fever. Henry; I think we had better send for Dr. Pillsbury.

He—Why, my love, I wouldn't send for him. You know he is color blind.—Life.

The Directory Man.

The champion unconscious funny man is one in Avondale, where he is getting the names and statistics for the new Hamilton county directory. Yesterday he called at the house of a young couple who have seen but two summers and winters pass over their heads since the law and the Gospel made them one.

"How old is your husband?" asked the directory man of the wife.

"Twenty-six."

"And how old are you?"

"Twenty-four."

"How long have you been married?"

"Two years."

Then in the same cold, far away official tone, asked the next question on the printed list:

"Have you any grown up children?"

The young wife nearly fainted, the effort was so great to suppress the hysterical laughter that possessed her soul, but she managed to say that their only child was still, in the nature of things, a baby.

This story is almost equal to the tale of the man who took the census in College Hill. He called at a family where there were twins, and, after being told their age, he blandly and unthinkingly inquired of the clear-headed mother whether they were born in the same state. He had followed his instructions to the letter, but in so doing had thrown common sense overboard.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

An Unfinished Look.

Mrs. Wurthwaite, of Murray Hill, has just moved into a new house. The parlor is beautifully fitted with the most extreme specimens of the upholsterer's art, and has a polished oak floor, only partly concealed by a few choice eastern rugs. She is entertaining a mercantile guest of her husband's.

"We think we are looking very fine in our new house, Mr. Wabash," she remarks, casually.

"Yes, indeed," responds Mr. Wabash, politely; "but it 'll look a good deal finer when you come to get your carpets down."—Harper's Bazar.

Both Had Regrets.

He—Isn't this pastry of yours—h'm—a little tough, my dear? (After a moment.) What delicious pies my mother used to make at home!

She (with a half sigh)—Possibly it is. (After a moment.) Wat lovely dinners you used to give me at Delmonico's!—Harper's Bazar.

In the Lobby.

Theatre Goer (indignantly)—The idea of a baby yelling like that at a theatre. Why don't you have the youngster put out?

Manager (helplessly)—I don't dare. It's the pet grandchild of the little actress you threw that bouquet to.—Philadelphia Record.

A Reporter.

"Hello, Moss! What are you doing now?"

"I'm a reporter."

"Reporter! Reporter on a daily paper?"

"No, sah. Yo' know I was perish for a while as de Commonwhal; wual, I'se been reprieved."—Harper's Bazar.

The One Thing Needful.

Lady—Professor, how is my daughter getting on with her music?

Professor Piccolo (intelligently)—Madam, it is only a question of time.—Burlington Hawkeye.

He Has to It.

Mrs. Gushie (who is reading a humorous story)—I don't see any fun in those jokes about big bills for ladies' hats.

Mr. Gushie—I don't either.—Texas Siftings.

WOMAN AND HOME.

A MOTHER'S DUTY IN SELECTING A COLLEGE FOR HER SON.

Miss Braddon and Mrs. Henry Wood's Start as a Publisher's Reader—The Title Marrying a Daughter—How to Make a Christmas Tree—Some Useful Hints.

An unwise woman is that mother then, who, for the sake of the name of any college or supposed superior facilities of learning, will let her boy go to one where the faculty take their ease, and clear their consciences by calling the boys men, and making them responsible only to themselves at the very time when they most need guidance and command, when pool-drinking and card-playing are the fellow accomplishments of Greek and mathematics, or where the dangerous neighborhood of great and fashionable hotels renders the banquets possible in which the college youths make high holidays with their college yells, as the wine they drink goes to their weak young heads, and they fling about the dishes, word havoc, conduct themselves more like young brutes than young men, and get home to their chambers in a state to wring the sad heart of any mother who has a heart in her body. Something more than great advantages of education or of association are to be looked for here by careful mothers. In almost every case the education of almost any college will be ample for all the purposes of life, and the boy must be known to be strong who shall be trusted in the temptations of such colleges as those of which we speak—temptations which, once yielded to, not only ruin the boy for time, but for eternity.

Too many a son who finds himself before middle age with a body good for little more, nerves and organs and strength broken up, has to thank for it, not his own weak or virtuous inclinations, but a mother who neglected to keep him narrowly in the way of facing safe of himself, to inform herself as to his companions and pleasures, who was perhaps in herself neither a standard nor a beacon light for him, and who suffered him to assume himself with what turned out to be a very dance of death. Let the mothers of the men about to come forward and take the conduct of the world in their hands look to it that they are men, so far as their hearts and hands could do it, are sound in soul and body and fit for their work.—Harper's Bazar.

Female Novelists.

Miss Braddon's first great success was "Lady Audley's Secret," published a few months after "East Lynne," which was the first great success of Mrs. Henry Wood, says The Spectator. Roughly speaking, the books were contemporaneous. People read them together, and, perhaps not unnaturally, placed their authors in one class, the general tendency being, if we remember rightly, to put Mrs. Henry Wood somewhat above Miss Braddon. The subsequent achievements of the two writers failed to justify this comparative estimate. As novel after novel came from Mrs. Henry Wood's pen, it cannot be said that her popularity with the ordinary novel devourer, who simply wants a few hours of imaginative excitement, showed any signs of declining, and we think it was a matter of indifference whether the excitement were provided by Miss Braddon or Mrs. Wood. More careful readers, however, noticed that while the novels of the former were characterized by sustained fecundity of invention in the matter, and increasing grace and finish in the manner, those of the latter displayed a monotony of structure which spoke of narrowness of inventive resource, and which threw into prominence a certain feebleness of conception of right and of that final test of observation. Mrs. Wood put all her best work into the first dozen of her books, and thereafter for better years she was living in pinchbeck on her best work, but on cheap imitation. That reputation could never have been won by "The Story of Charles Strange." The tale is made up of mysteries which have to kill sensation with each other, which are exceedingly clumsy in construction, and which, when they cease to be mysteries, reveal themselves as mares' nests. The attempts to interest ourselves in the plot being a hopeless failure, we direct attention to the style, and amuse ourselves by culling such flowers of speech as "blushing furiously" and "a spell of kisses." An uneducated servant speaks of his fellow servants as "retainers;" a young lady is described as being "enshrined" in a rectory; and with regard to a certain mysterious crime, we are told that "some people said felony, others whispered forgery." Mrs. Wood having been apparently under the delusion that felony is some special offense like murder or arson, instead of being the legal name for a class of crime in which forgery is included. It would have been quite as sensible to write, "Some people said dishonesty, others whispered pocket-picking." The redeeming point in Mrs. Henry Wood's poorer work—of which "The Story of Charles Strange" provides an average specimen—is the vivacity which is found in the conversational scenes. Mrs. Wood believed in herself, in her plots, in her characters, and in her style; and it is wonderful to what extent such belief on the part of an author will extend to that belief of other people.—Boston Herald.

The Christmas Tree.

No home, especially where there are children, is complete during the holidays without a Christmas tree. The latter are grand, elaborate and costly in the families of the rich; but even householders of circumscribed means can put up trees that will sparkle and please, for a very little outlay of money. Tinsel is cheap, but if glitter, and children rarely stop to estimate values.

A pleasant effect is produced by brushing the pale holly foliage of the tree here and there with mucilage and then sprinkling common salt upon it. Among the cheap, home made ornaments to hang upon the tree may be enumerated: Empty egg shells adorned with decalcomania pictures, walnuts wrapped in tin foil or gold paper; pine cones varnished, when framed or sprinkled with salt; cranberries or pop corn strung on twine; gold paper chains, made by pasting one tiny ring within the other; colored tissue paper, etc. The tissue paper is cut into long pieces about four inches wide, and closely cut across, but not entirely across. It is then slightly dampened and held over a hot stove, when it curls up and looks very well when thrown here and there across the tree.

It does not require much skill to fashion balloons, gondolas, bird cages, conches, etc., out of stiff paper, and after covering it with gilt or silver paper. Figures cut from advertising clarence or colored fashion plates can be fastened to the branches, giving a pretty and really took very pretty. The same skill can adorn the base of the tree in landscape style, with tiny picket fences, rustic bridges, and old snuffy, mossy stumps for meadow-rod sand for roadway, white or silver sand for paths, twigs of cedar for trees, a piece of looking glass fringed with moss for a lakelet, etc. Branches of ivy berries for the tree can be variously colored by first dipping them into a hot but weak solution of starch, and then into blue, red or yellow powder, or into powdered bronze.

Mottoes for the tree or around it can be made of white cotton wool. The letters are cut out of card paper, to which the wool is glued. When dry pull the wool, so as to give it a puffy or downy appearance. Trim the letters carefully afterward and fasten them on a dark background. Letters decorated with rice have no effect of carved ivory. Cut out the letters on cartridge paper, cover them with a thick coating of paste or glue, and while yet warm drop the grains of rice into it. The rice grains can also be made to resemble coral by dipping them into red sealing wax dissolved in alcohol. Letters covered with crumpled tinfoil have a good effect and resemble those of silver; they can be made of holly, and have a rich, cord like appearance. The leaves are strung with a needle upon twine of the proper length, passing the needle through the center of each leaf.—Cor. Detroit Free Press.

The Woman's Refuge.

Name full of sorrowful significance! Who are the pale, hopeless faced women asking abiding place within its doors! Here is one, an abandoned wife, who gave up home ties hundreds of miles from this spot to link her destiny with that of a man who soon forgot all about vows to protect the unsophisticated girl who took his name with a glow of pride, and with hopes of a bright future that clouded in the dawning. Here she is stranded, deserted, heart broken. At this threshold she is welcomed by women to whose fate has been kinder. Through their comforting words and practical assistance to render her self supporting, when restored health gives back strength to the weakened body, she may yet live and enjoy life, and even forget that there was a time when her soul was full of bitterness at the sound of a little laugh or the sight of God's bright sunshine.

And here are others to whose experience has brought not only sorrow, but that deeper, darker, direaer passion of the human soul, remorse. And these dazed and stricken creatures were once innocent infants, and looked up with questioning eyes into the fond faces of mothers whose hearts glowed with love for their baby girls, just as yours does, my dear reader, when you look into your little daughter's face and dream of her, all on a high, pure plane, above possible temptation, and far removed from the shadow of disgrace. It is no time to question how downfall became possible. Perhaps because cruel death took away maternal care, of the villain approached in the guise of an angel, and the pure, beautiful clay was molded into even counterfeited celestial lineaments. Never mind that now. She is waiting at the door of the Woman's refuge, a blighted being, an example that should stand a life time warning to the young and thoughtless girl who hears her history. But the refuge gives even this poor, misguided soul hope of future peace, if not of happiness. There is here promise of a new life. What a holy mission in this, and how the work appeals to the heart of woman, who recognizes the bond of sisterhood when the unvoiced misery of the human heart is brought before her.—Kansas City Journal.

A Suggestion for the Girls.

Young women who aspire to a pleasant, responsible, congenial position in some comfortable business office, where their services as stenographers and typewriters shall bring quid pro quo in merited cash, must cultivate other things besides proficiency in shorthand (stenography) and the key board of the typewriter. The other day the fair applicant for an excellent position in this city was put through a preliminary test. Her fingers were skilled and her penmanship was unexceptional; all that could be desired. But her brain and tongue were not up to the requirements, and her speech lacked the subtle something which her position called for. She said "transpirenced," and she wrote "would have" "would of." That settled the ambitious damsel, in so far as that office was concerned.

In these days niceties of speech must, in writing, be embodied even in business letters, and the girl who can speak and write the English language as it is spoken and written among people of refinement will be the girl to sit at the merchant's or manufacturer's right hand, and translate into written expressions. The "I seen" and "I have saw" and "I done" girl, though she may be able to take down 100 words in a minute in short hand, or write 120 words a minute with the clicking keys, will about as readily get a permanent position in the office of a leading business man as a Bactrian camel will pass through the eye of a cambric needle. Good grammar and correct speech daily enter more into the every day life of business, and the girl that combines these with a quick brain and manual dexterity will have the choice of positions of trust and emolument in the easy, well appointed business office.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Marrying Titles.

Some people are surprised, and some patriotically disgusted, at the favor made among our marriageable American women by foreigners with titles. Not only our young girls, just budding into society, but our bouncing, buxom matrons, of forty or 100 weeks a minute with the clicking keys, will about as readily get a permanent position in the office of a leading business man as a Bactrian camel will pass through the eye of a cambric needle. Good grammar and correct speech daily enter more into the every day life of business, and the girl that combines these with a quick brain and manual dexterity will have the choice of positions of trust and emolument in the easy, well appointed business office.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

FASHIONS THAT ARE APPROVED BOTH AT HOME AND ABROAD.

New Styles Introduced for Boys and Girls. The Real Little Lord Fauntleroy Suit. the Hattenberg Overcoat and Other Novelties.

There are new styles in dress for the little men and women as well as those of larger growth. Numbered with decided novelties for little men of 4 to 7 years is the "Real Little Lord Fauntleroy" suit shown in the annexed cut. This picturesque costume may be made in black or colored velveteen, velvet or plush. The broad silk sash and lace collar worn with this suit adds decidedly to its effectiveness.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY.

COVERT COAT. THE HATTENBERG.

The covert coat, illustrated in the same cut, is well adapted for boys and youths, being at one and the same time comfortable, stylish and cheap. Its comfort effect. The Hattenberg overcoat is intended for boys from 6 to 8 years of age. It is trimmed with a border of astrachan and military braid. The cap worn with it is of cloth, trimmed with astrachan.

Many of the little girls' costumes are in good style. One for a girl of 11 is made in the directoire style. The material is a terra cotta Amazone cloth. The front is of plush, with box plait and side sash. The back is the long directoire style, and has two double plaits, fastened with buttons on each side. A jacket bodice, with revers of plush, and cut sleeves with large directoire plush cuffs. Another costume, for a child of 7, is made of russia cashmere, the color being that of the bodice is made with three broad plaits in the Norfolk style. The front of the bodice is pleated and turned back, with broad bands of a gray tint matching that of the material. The sleeves are puffed at the top, and have broad bands of gray for the cuffs. A round skirt, gauged on the bodice and fastened at the side with ribbon bows. The edge of the skirt is finished with a broad band woven in the material. The new smocks, with bat frontsand kilted skirts, with loosely tied sash, will be much worn by girls of all ages this winter.

WOOLEN FROCK FOR GIRL OF SIX.

Bathing of Infants.

Children take to water as naturally as do ducks, and as many summer and winter days with them, very rapid, frequent bathing is admissible.

For the first few days the new born infant is usually sponged off without removing all its clothing. For this purpose a worn napkin is used, wringing it out of tepid water and rubbing the surface gently. Dry with a soft towel and follow with hand friction. As soon, however, as the hand can be removed, it will be found easy to put the baby into a bath tub. For this purpose use an ordinary bath tub, or a tub made on purpose for a child. Place it on a chair or low table. Be sure to have everything in readiness before beginning. The cooling should be well aired and placed within reach, the toilet articles conveniently near.

Place your left hand under the arms of the child, resting the right one under the legs, and put him into the water. Support him with the left hand and bathe him with the other, using a soft sponge or linen cloth.

In from three to five minutes he is taken out and laid upon the lap, which has been protected by a linen cloth or soft bath towel. Dry him gently with this, and rub him all over with the hand. Soaps and nursery powders are unnatural, and not essential to cleanliness and comfort; yet they may not usually be considered injurious.—The Kindergarten.

Woman in the Saddle.

Did you ever observe a woman just before she is lifted into a saddle, and a few moments after the horse has struck a canter! She becomes a changed being. The roses spring to her cheeks, the light seems to leap from her eyes, her form is the inspiration of graceful action, and she becomes a beauteous picture of mortal health. And this, after all, is the best view to take of horseback riding. Aside from its charm, its dash, its buoyancy of motion, its special or general beauty, it is the most healthful exercise within the province of woman. It is better than dancing, lawn tennis, croquet, rowing, archery. There are many reasons why it is better, and one of the strongest seems to be that it brings continuous changes of scene, which tend to rest the body as well as the mind. The fascinating effects which it has on the fair rider cannot be estimated, provided she has a well trained horse and indulges in moderation.—Detroit Free Press.

A Hint to Parents.

An essential inequality of the sexes is based on the tendency to lengthen girlhood and shorten boyhood. The boy is pressed forward into business five years earlier than he used to be fifty years ago, while the girl of 20 does not know as much of housekeeping as the girl of 15 of as long ago. In other words, girls are petted and babied, while boys are set to work. This is not at all favorable to the desirable end of producing happy homes. There is a good deal involved in the equalization of the sexes that is not taken into account in the abstract discussion of the question. It is argued by Fiske that a lengthened infancy is the basis of finer character and better instincts. However, even infancy may be overdone, as the advertisements certainly may be.—Herald of Health.

The Bride Forgot.

A good story is gradually leaking out in Bath society circles at the expense of a well known bath lady, who was recently married. The ceremony was to be a church, and the bride, that she might not soil her slippers nor catch cold, drew on a pair of her father's waste hose before leaving the house. Arriving at the church it is the unpleasant peculiar to novices on such occasions to quite forgot about the socks in which her feet and slippers were dressed, and walked to the front of the church in entirely correct style, forgetfulness. However, all went well until the pair knelt at the chancel. Here it was that the keen eyes of the audience got in their work.—London (Ont.) Gazette.

Advice for Wives.

Never retort to a hasty angry word. It is the second word that makes the quarrel.

Remember that you are married to a man, not to a god; be prepared for imperfections.

Once in a while let your husband have the last word; it will gratify him and be no particular loss to you.

Do a companion to your husband, if he be a wise one, and if he be not, try to make him become your companion. Raise his standard; do not let him lower yours.
